General Articles

"Whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things." Phil. 4:8.

God's Providence

"God's providence is mine inheritance!" I read
The quaint old legend on a rainy day,
When gray and thick the clouds hung overhead,
And mists were folding close about my way.

God's providence? Then wherefore should I fear?
My Father's love is roof and inn for me;
Forever, since my Father holds me dear,
His goodness shall my guard and shelter be.

Another, heaven-endowed with worldly gain,
May count his wealth, and gaze his acres o'er,
May reap his harvest fields on hill and plain,
And heap in barn and bin his fragrant store;

And I may own no inch of tilth or foot
Of fallow in this great wide earth I tread;
Yet I am rich, and need no pledge to boot,
Save God's clear stars above my lifted head.

"God's providence is mine inheritance!" come loss,
Or change, or grief, or whatsoe'er God send,
All things shall work for blessing, and the cross
Be gladly borne, if shared with Christ my Friend.

Written for Our Admonition — No. 2

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples: and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come."

The people of God, and especially the men who occupy positions of trust, need to study the history of Moses' failure to enter Canaan. Let them stop and think what it means to become angry, to show a spirit unworthy of a leader of God's people. There are those in God's service who have given way to anger, and who have not felt the repentance that Moses felt. These men have braced themselves to follow an unchristian course, and have gone on from one wrong to another.

And there are murmurers in the church, who easily lose their self-control. If everything does not move to please them, they become irritated, and provoke one another to evil. They have not the light and love of God in their souls; if their way is crossed, they give loose rein to an unsanctified, irritable spirit.

I have been instructed to present this before our people, and to urge them to make diligent work for repentance.

The instruction given to the children of Israel is for us also. Happy will be the church when its members study the directions given to the Israelites during their journeyings in the wilderness. In this instruction are specified the virtues that the church in the wilderness must have in order to be approved of God. The church of to-day has far greater light than had the church in the wilderness. She should stand on vantage ground, cherishing the pure, holy principles that God declares men must cherish in their dealing with their fellow men, if they would grow in grace and wisdom, and be honored as obedient subjects. Only by following these principles can we adorn the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The importance of the law of God, and Christ's relation to it, are to be presented before those who have placed themselves under Satan's banner, full of self-importance and self-sufficiency. In a wicked world God's servants are to obey the principles of his government, by their righteousness testifying that fallen man can be loyal to God.

Christ is our Leader. Clothing his divinity with humanity, he humbled himself, that he might stand in person at the head of the human race. He laid aside his kingly crown, and yielded up his high position as commander of the angels, who loved to do his bidding. For our sake he became poor, that through his humiliation and poverty, human beings might be made rich, heirs to an eternal weight of glory. The Saviour came to the world in lowliness, and lived as a man among men. On all points except sin, divinity was to touch humanity. Living on this earth as a man among men, Christ answered in the affirmative the question, "Can man keep the law of God?" He was tempted in all points as man is tempted, "yet without sin." He was tempted that he might know how to succor those that should afterward be tempted. He became a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief. "He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities: the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed." He gave himself to the world as a spiritual teacher, a genuine medical missionary.

O that our workers realized what privileges are theirs! They would know by experience what it means to hear and obey the invitation, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Christ came to our world to teach men what is meant by genuine religion, — the religion that will make men and women lights in the world. To all he offers power to form a true, noble character. The converted man rejoices that he has a Saviour who is so mighty. He is a partaker of the divine nature. His repentance is not a farce, but a reality, and the fruits of it appear in Christlike words and deeds. Every day, every hour, he reveals faith in the Sin-bearer. Love, hope, long-suffering, patience, kindness, are revealed in his life. In self-denial he lifts the cross and follows Jesus. He is a representative of the Saviour.

"Wherefore (as the Holy Ghost saith, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation, in the day of temptation in the wilderness: when your fathers tempted me, proved me, and saw my works forty years. Wherefore I was grieved with that generation, and said, They do alway err in their heart; and they have not known my ways. So I sware in my wrath, They shall not enter into my rest.) take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God. But exhort one another daily, while it is called To-day; lest any of you be hardened through the deceitfulness of sin."

Mark the words "deceitfulness of sin." Often Satan presents his temptations under the guise of goodness. Beware that you yield not to them. One violation of straight-forward truthfulness prepares the way for the second violation, and wrongs are repeated until the heart of unbelief becomes hardened, and the conscience loses its sensitiveness.

Let us humble our hearts before God, and ask him to forgive us for speaking words of unbelief, words that cast a reflection on him who is too wise to err, and too good to do us harm.

"We are made partakers of Christ, if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end; while it is said, To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts, as in the provocation. For some, when they had heard, did provoke: howbeit not all that came out of Egypt by Moses. But with whom was he grieved forty years? was it not with them that had sinned, whose carcasses fell in the wilderness? And to whom sware he that they should not enter into his rest, but to them that believed not? So we see that they could not enter in because of unbelief.

"Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it. For unto us was the gospel preached, as well as unto them: but the word preached did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it. . . . Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest, lest any man fall after the same example of unbelief. For the word of God is quick, and powerful, and sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart. Neither is there any creature that is not manifest in his sight: but all things are naked and opened unto the eyes of him with whom we have to do. Seeing then that we have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. For we have not an high priest which can not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

The Mercy of God

GEO. F. WATSON

"Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God." "For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness." This message of comfort from our tender Father is due his people at this time in a fuller sense than at any time in all the past. The dragon is wroth, and is making war upon God's people in every way that his fiendish mind can imagine. One of his most successful means is discouragement. Many are falling because of this. And I doubt not but there are some who have become so discouraged that they have said to some friend, "I can not attain to the demands of the gospel, so I might just as well stop where I am. I can not be saved." And there may be those who have said as much about some one else, and by so doing brought discouragement to the poor soul that was struggling for victory.

What we each need in these trying times is a message of hope, of faith, of power, that will lift men and women above their sins, their mistakes, and their failures. True, we are all sinners in the sight of heaven, but our God is a Saviour of sinners, and not only so, but a Saviour from sinning. My discouraged brother or sister, let us study the experiences of some men who have lived in the past. Shall we take Abraham first? He was a man called of God to stand at the head of God's great family. This man went out by faith, not knowing whither he went. And yet there came a time when he failed to trust God, and to wait on him, and as a result, sinned. But did God cast him off as worthless? — Never. But we hear God calling this very man his friend, the father of the faithful, and with him he made the greatest covenant that can be found on record, promising that he should be heir of the world. "For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness." It was not because of Abraham's sin that God made of him a great nation, but because Abraham repented, obeyed, and trusted God.

Beloved, did you ever study the life of Jacob? What a deceiver he was, and that from his youth! O how many wrong things he did! and when God spoke to him, he was in a wilderness. God led him, he instructed him, he kept him "as the apple of his eye," and made of him Israel, a man greatly beloved of God. But we must not forget that night of wrestling, nor Jacob's earnest words, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." Why not make this our prayer? "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." And just as surely as God blessed Jacob, he will also bless you. Believe it, O believe it. "For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness."

Shall we spend a little time with David? When a mere lad, he was called of God to be king over Israel. David was brave, kind, and gentle; but one day he planned a murder, or at least he placed one of his brave, true soldiers in the front of the battle where he would be killed, that he might have his wife. This sin would have been the utter destruction of David, but for his repentance. Let us pray his prayer, and make it our own: "Have mercy upon me, O God, according to thy loving-kindness: according unto the multitude of thy tender mercies blot out my transgressions. Wash me thoroughly from mine iniquity, and cleanse me from my sin. For I acknowledge my transgressions: and my sin is ever before me. Against thee, thee only, have I sinned, and done this evil in thy sight." God did according to his word, and David was forgiven, and now we hear God saying, "I have found David the son of Jesse, a man after mine own heart, which shall fulfil all my will." And what was true in David's case will be true in the case of every man who repents; "for I will be merciful to their unrighteousness."

I am sure a visit with Peter would help us. He was taught with the tenderest care, and by the greatest Teacher this world has ever known. How could he sin? and yet he did just as we have done many times. But that tender, loving look from his dear Lord brought true repentance to the heart of the man who had just that moment cursed and denied his Lord; and from that time Peter was a changed man. He saw himself as never before, and best of all, he saw his Saviour as never before. O that we may see ourselves in our true light, and then look away to the only One who can heal the sin-sick soul. O for a look into the face of our dear Lord!

The work left us is great, and we are a small people, but great is our God, and great is his cause, and great is his mercy to those that fear him. "Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God." "For I will be merciful to their unrighteousness."

The Bruised Reed

F. D. STARR

It was said of our Redeemer: "A bruised reed shall he not break, and smoking flax shall he not quench" (Matt. 12:20); or, as the German translation renders it, "the glimmering torch shall he not quench." This illustrates the long-suffering and patience of our blessed Lord. If there is found any trace of moral worth, it is cherished and preserved with the hope that further improvement will be made. The open book of nature shows also this method of dealing.

Recently in cutting logs for a building, one was selected that was as straight as the rest, but a piece being cut off from the end and split open, it was seen that the inner grains were very crooked, showing that when the tree was small, it was quite crooked, but nature had filled out the parts that were lacking, and it had become a well-rounded tree. This illustrates the early perversity that is often seen in childhood and youth. We would think such gnarled and knotty sticks utterly worthless, but the God of nature causes the crooked to be made straight, and the rough places even and plain, so that the ugly sapling becomes a beautiful tree, fit for use in building important structures.

How different are our ways from God's ways! Often we are disposed, because matters are not managed just as we think they should be, to refuse to have anything to do with them. We balk and withdraw our assistance, perhaps conscientiously, because we are sure wrong methods are employed. But is that what we see in nature? A little boy of half a dozen summers had one of his fingers smashed, and an experienced surgeon said it must be amputated. But his parents were not willing their child should lose a finger, so they cared for it, and it healed, and when manhood was reached, it could scarcely be seen that the finger had ever been injured. But how many fingers, arms, and legs are removed that should never have been cut off! Their possessors might just as well have had the use of these limbs as to have been life-long cripples. But in case a limb is taken off by mistake, does nature refuse to co-operate with the process, and lend her healing power?— Far from it. See how nicely the stump heals over, and soon it looks as if the affected part were in its present condition from birth. Though a great blunder had been made in removing the injured arm or leg, nature's restoring power is not withheld, and in this case "all things work together for good" in this process of restoration.

God, who could bring blessing and salvation from the actions of Joseph's brothers, though they were moved with envy in what they did,— he who would work with Israel and their king, though they sinned a great sin in asking for this temporal sovereign,— teaches us also through nature's lenient processes the grace of being "easy to be entreated." James 3:17. Oftentimes the very course that would seem to be unadvisable is the one that will bring the most benefit. Twoscore years ago a school-teacher advised the parents of a lad who was just entering his teens, to seek for their son some light work, or a position as clerk or teacher, as he was too frail and puny to ever become a farmer. But soon after, to save the boy from moral ruin, he was placed upon a farm. He grew up to love that occupation, and under a hygienic manner of living, became strong to endure hard labor without fatigue. The farm was the physical salvation of the boy, as well as a great auxiliary from a moral standpoint.

O, how many bruised reeds that seem good for nothing are ruthlessly thrust aside, when they might find a useful place in the multiform framework of society! How many glimmering torches, that seem to emit nothing but offensive smoke, are carelessly extinguished when they might brighten up into a brilliant flame to shine as lights in the world!

THE REVIEW AND HERALD
SANCTIFY THEM THROUGH THY TRUTH THY WORD IS TRUTH

WASHINGTON, D. C., JANUARY 7, 1904

THE Year Book for 1904 is nearly completed. Orders should be sent at once to conference tract society offices, or to the General Conference, when more convenient. Price, 25 cents.

WORD comes in from all parts of the fields abroad telling of the fresh courage and confidence the workers feel as they see how the providence of God has led in the removal to Washington. They see in recent events a long step forward toward the finishing of the work.

JUST as we go to press with this issue, we have received a brief announcement of the death of Brother A. Druillard, which occurred at Berrien Springs, Mich., at 11 P. M., Dec. 29, 1903. Brother Druillard was known and loved by many who will sincerely mourn his loss. We hope to give a more complete notice of this sad event in a later issue.

THE commencement exercises of the Iowa Sanitarium Training-School for Missionary Nurses were held in the church at Des Moines, Tuesday evening. Dec. 29, 1903. Addresses were given by Dr. J. Edgar Colloran and Dr. Emma A. Perrine, and diplomas were presented to fifteen graduates by Brother C. H. Parsons. The class motto was "Redeemed by Love, Saved for Service."

WE publish this week a notice of the death of one of the oldest Sabbath-keepers, Brother William Gifford, who had reached the very advanced age of one hundred and five years. Brother Gifford was born in 1798, the year which marked the beginning of "the time of the end," and was therefore thirty-five years of age when the great star-shower of 1833 occurred. Thus the aged men of "this generation" are passing away, and we are reminded that soon the coming of the Master must take place. "A little while! How short! How short!"

THE whole civilized world was shocked last week by the awfulness of the calamity which overtook Chicago just as the old year was going out. The particulars of this dreadful visitation are given in our news columns. To us this terrible catastrophe, appalling in its suddenness and the wholesale loss of life, speaks most impressively of the nature of the times to which we have come. A playhouse was suddenly changed into a charnel house, and Death assumed the title role. There came at once to our minds the words of Jesus: "Or those eighteen, upon whom the tower of Siloam fell, and slew them, think ye that they were sinners above all men that dwelt in Jerusalem? I tell you, Nay: but, except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish." God is dealing with this generation. He is making his final call to a world in wickedness such as characterized Sodom and Gomorrah. In the unusual calamities which are following one another with alarming frequency, he is reminding the people of the earth of the day of judgment, and is calling upon them to escape from those things which are coming upon the unrepentant sinner. We ourselves have experienced the visitation of God's judgments because of a swerving from right principles, but in the great property loss there was a merciful sparing of life. In the Chicago calamity the destruction of property was altogether overshadowed by a death roll reaching to about six hundred. What thoughtful person can fail to note the difference? When we say that the judgments of God are in the earth, shall we remember that God has spoken to his church as well as to the world? Let the church hear and repent, and then carry the call to repentance to a world on the very verge of eternity. "How is it that ye do not discern this time?"

AFTER five years of faithful and acceptable service as editor of the Youth's Instructor, Miss Adelaide Bee Cooper has resigned that position, and her resignation has been reluctantly accepted. Under Miss Cooper's direction the Instructor has been true to its name — a safe instructor of the youth, filled with matter which is wholesome, helpful, and inspiring. The influence of this work has been felt in many hearts and homes. By joint action of the General Conference Committee and the trustees of the Review and Herald Publishing Association, Miss Fannie M. Dickerson has been chosen to succeed Miss Cooper as editor of the Instructor. Miss Dickerson is already quite well known to many of our families, especially in the East, as a teacher of young people, and her work at the South Lancaster Academy has been very highly esteemed. The new editor brings to her work such ability and experience as warrant the confidence that the high standard of the paper will be maintained.

A REVISED edition of that interesting book of travel, "Journeys by Land and Sea," written by Elder G. C. Tenney, has now been issued. The purpose of the author is to present in an easy and pleasing style the results of his own observations in his journeyings "through five continents," and also to set forth, as naturally connected with his own experience and labors in these different countries, some of the leading features of the message which is designed for all nations and peoples. Thus although it is not primarily a religious book, it may sow seeds of truth in minds which are not yet open to a more direct teaching of the gospel message, and so prepare the way for other efforts. The book is quite fully illustrated, including an excellent full-page portrait of the author. A clean and wholesome book of travel, like this one, is good reading for the young people, and will help them to a clearer understanding of some of the distant countries in which they may yet have the privilege of working to hasten the coming of the King of kings. Parents can remember this when they are providing reading for their children. The price of the book is $1.50, postpaid, and it can be ordered of any of the tract societies or publishing houses.

Our First-Page Message

THE epistle of Jude contains warning and instruction applicable to our own time and work. It should be read as if addressed to Seventh-day Adventists. This is the conclusion which can properly be drawn from the following paragraphs taken from a communication from Sister White, dated Aug. 27, 1903: —

At this time, Jude's testimony is of great force to all who desire to be under the influence of the Holy Spirit.

Jude bears this message to guard believers against the seductive influences of false teachers, men who have a form of godliness, but who are not safe leaders. In these last days, false teachers will arise and become actively zealous. All kinds of theories will be presented to divert the minds of men and women from the very truth that defines the position we can occupy with safety in this time when Satan is working with power upon religionists, leading them to make a pretense of being righteous, but to fail of placing themselves under the guidance of the Holy Spirit.

False theories will be mingled with every phase of experience, and advocated with satanic earnestness in order to captivate the mind of every soul who is not rooted and grounded in a full knowledge of the sacred principles of the Word. In the very midst of us will arise false teachers, giving heed to seducing spirits whose doctrines are of satanic origin. These teachers will draw away disciples after themselves. Creeping in unawares, they will use flattering words, and make skilful misrepresentations with seductive tact.

The Lord is guarding his people against a repetition of the errors and mistakes of the past. There have always abounded false teachers who, advocating erroneous doctrines and unholy practises, and working upon false principles in a most specious, covered, deceptive manner, have endeavored to deceive, if possible, the very elect. They bind themselves up in their own fallacies. If they do not succeed, because their way becomes hedged by warnings from God, they will change somewhat the features of their work, and the representations they have made, and bring out their plans again under a false showing. They refuse to confess, repent, and believe. Confessions may be made, but no real reformation takes place, and erroneous theories bring ruin upon unsuspecting souls because these souls believe and rely upon the men advocating these theories.

God Never Fails

THE dearest things in this fair world must change;
Thy senses hurry on to sure decay;
Thy strength will fail, the pain seem no more strange,
While love more feebly cheers the misty way.
What then remains above the task of living?
Is there no crown where that rude cross hath pressed?
Yes, God remains, his own high glory giving
To light thy lonely path, to make it blest.

Yea, God remains, though suns are daily dying,
A gracious God, who marks the sparrow's fall;
He listens while thy aching heart is sighing;
He hears and answers when his children call;
His love shall fill the void when death assails,
The one, eternal God, who never fails.

A Call to Greater Consecration

MRS. E. G. WHITE

MEN and women are God's agencies for the salvation of souls. Of his true followers the Lord says, "This people have I formed for myself; they shall show forth my praise." They are my witnesses, my chosen representatives, in an apostate world. Filled with a desire to win sinners to Christ, they have the sympathy and co-operation of the heavenly universe.

The church on earth is to become the court of holy love. Those who by the Lord's appointment occupy in it positions of trust are to bring into it the pity and self-sacrifice of the great Head of the church. Christian fellowship is one means by which character is formed. Thus selfishness is purged from the life, and men and women are drawn to Christ, the great center. Thus is answered his prayer that his followers may be one, as he is one with the Father.

Can you marvel, my brethren and sisters, that I am bowed down with inexpressible agony, as again and again I am made to realize that few among our people understand their weakness? The characters of many of those who have received such wonderful truth are a jumble of opposites. Christ has promised to make them harmonious on every point, not pleasant and agreeable and kind today, and to-morrow harsh and disagreeable and unkind, falsifying their profession of faith. But they refuse to place themselves where he can help them. They are breaking the commandments of God; for they have left their first love. Some have joined the enemy, to become accusers of the brethren. How could they do this wicked thing? In thought, word, and deed they are transgressors. They have spoken words that God condemns as unjust and cruel.

Pray that your lips may be touched with a live coal from the divine altar, that you may speak only pure, Christlike words, and that you may see that it is a sin to speak harshly and unadvisedly. There are many now teaching others who need themselves to learn what it means to be redeemed by the blood of the Lamb and the word of their testimony. They need to feel the power of saving grace. Self and Satan are spoiling many souls, making them so unchristlike in spirit, in word, and in action, and so harmful in influence, that God will separate them from his work.

There are in human nature elements of destruction, which, under certain conditions, break forth to consume. The moral powers are prostrated. The excited passions tyrannize over the higher, nobler faculties; and Christlikeness is not revealed. The infinite One — he who alone was able to bring order and beauty out of the chaos and confusion of nature's darkness — is able to subdue the rebellious heart of man, and bring his life into conformity to the divine will. His Spirit can quell man's rebellious temper. But unless men possess the love of Christ, the qualifications that otherwise would be of value in God's work will be controlled by the selfishness of the human heart. In order to be true Christians we must surrender ourselves unreservedly to Christ.

Day by day we are building characters, and we are building for eternity. God desires us in our lives to give the people of the world an example of what they should be, and of what they can be through obedience to the gospel of Christ. Let us place ourselves in God's hands, to be dealt with as he sees best. "Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." If we build in cooperation with him, the structure that we rear will day by day grow more beautiful and more symmetrical under the hand of the Master-builder, and through all eternity it will endure.

Sanctification is a progressive work. It is a continuous work, leading human beings higher, and still higher. It does not leave love behind, but brings it into the life as the very essence of Christianity.

Christ says to us, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." He is our example. During his life on earth, he was ever kind and gentle. His influence was ever fragrant; for in him dwelt perfect love. He was never sour and unapproachable, and he never compromised with wrong to obtain favor. If we have his righteousness, we shall be like him in gentleness, in forbearance, in unselfish love. Shall we not, by dwelling in the sunshine of his presence, become mellowed by his grace?

Let us honor our profession of faith. Let us adorn our lives with beautiful traits of character. Harshness of speech and action is not of Christ, but of Satan. Shall we, by clinging to our imperfections and deformities, make Christ ashamed of us? His grace is promised to us. If we will receive it, it will beautify our lives. Then in the place of disparaging our fellow workers, we shall help them to climb the ladder of progress. Deformity will be exchanged for goodness, perfection. Our lives will be adorned with the graces that made Christ's life so beautiful.

God calls for our co-operation. His requirements are just and reasonable. Shall we not strive to be Christians in life as well as in profession? Shall we not ennoble our lives with the dignity of a steadfast purpose? When we take the name of Christ, we pledge ourselves to represent him. In order for us to be true to our pledge, Christ must be formed within, the hope of glory. The daily life must become more and more like the Christ-life. We must be Christians in deed and in truth. Christ will have nothing to do with pretense. He will welcome to the heavenly courts those only whose Christianity is genuine. The lives of professed Christians who do not live the life of Christ are a mockery to religion.

A true, lovable Christian is the most powerful argument that can be advanced in favor of Bible truth. Such a man is Christ's representative. His life is the most convincing evidence that can be borne to the power of divine grace. When God's people bring the righteousness of Christ into the daily life, sinners will be converted, and victories over the enemy will be gained.

"Finally, brethren, whatsoever things are true, whatsoever things are honest, whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

Responding to a Calamity

WM. COVERT

THOSE who have lost heavily in business, usually think themselves excused from making offerings to the Lord's cause; but should their financial reverses lead them to reach such a conclusion?

Mr. George Muller, the great philanthropist of Bristol, England, having occasion to advise a business house concerning the proper action to take when a sudden and deep reverse had come, said it would be best to express gratitude to God because he had not taken all from them. He advised them to give a thank offering to the Lord for leaving some property. The firm followed the advice, and gave five hundred dollars because they had been dealt with in such a merciful manner. This firm is said to have been repaid more than a thousandfold for the gift which they offered.

It pays to follow the instruction which says, "In everything give thanks." Reverses have been lessons, and we should learn how to obtain the benefits which are proffered.

A Perfect Trust

O for the peace of a perfect trust,
My loving God, in thee,
Unwavering faith that never doubts
Thou chooseth best for me,— (1)

Best, though my plans be all upset,—
Best, though my way be rough,—
Best, though my earthly store be scant;
In thee I have enough,—

Best, though my health and strength be gone,
Though weary days be mine,
Shut out from much which others have;
Not my will, Lord, but thine.

And e'en though disappointments come,
They, too, are best for me,
To wean me from this changing world,
And lead me nearer thee.

O for the peace of perfect trust (1)
That looks away from all,
And sees thy hand in everything,
In great events and small;

That hears thy voice — a Father's voice —
Directing for the best,
O for the peace of a perfect trust,
A heart with thee at rest.

Beware of Fanciful Doctrines

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I have been instructed to say that it is not new and fanciful doctrines which the people of God need. They do not need suppositions, which can not be sustained by the Word of God. They need the testimony of men who know the truth, men who understand and obey the charge given to Timothy: "Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." 2 Tim. 4:2-5.

In some instances men have been turned away from the truth to listen to fables. Efforts were made to set right those thus deceived, but some had drunk so deeply from the polluted fountain, and had become so impregnated with false impressions, that it was impossible to undeceive them. They had come to believe that it was more profitable to eat of the food offered in the strange doctrines presented, than to eat of the food contained in the Word of God.

Brethren, look well to the character of your religion. Do not forget that Christ is to be your pattern in all things. You may be sure that his religion is not a sensational religion. A religion of this kind I learned to dread in my very earliest experience in the cause of present truth. I was at that time, before I was seventeen years old, bidden to warn those who were cherishing fanciful ideas, and who declared that their strange movements were inspired of God.

[In New Hampshire there were those who were active in disseminating false ideas in regard to God. Light was given me that these men were making the truth of no effect by their ideas, some of which led to free-lovism. I was shown that these men were seducing souls by presenting speculative theories regarding God.]

I went to the place where they were working, and opened before them what they were doing. The Lord gave me strength to lay plainly before them the danger of their course. [Among other views, they held that those once sanctified could not sin, and this they were presenting as gospel food. (2) Their false theories, with their burden of deceptive influence, were working great harm to themselves and to others. They were gaining a spiritualistic power over those who could not see the evil of these beautifully clothed theories. Great evils had already resulted. The doctrine that all were holy had led to the belief that the affections of the sanctified were never in danger of leading astray. The result of this belief was the fulfilment of the evil desires of hearts which, though professedly sanctified, were far from purity of thought and practise.

This is only one of the instances in which I was called upon to rebuke those who were presenting the doctrine of an impersonal god diffused through nature, and the doctrine of holy flesh.

In the future, truth will be counterfeited by the precepts of men. Deceptive theories will be presented as safe doctrines. False science is one of the agencies that Satan used in the heavenly courts, and it is used by him to-day.] The false assertions that he made to the angels, his subtle scientific theories, led many of them from loyalty. And, having lost their place in heaven, they prepared temptations for our first parents. Adam and Eve yielded to the enemy, and by their disobedience, humanity was estranged from God, and the earth was separated from heaven.

Christ pledged himself to bridge the gulf that sin had made. Thus he became the Way, the Truth, and the Life. He shows us the path that leads to heaven, and promises to impart his efficiency to every one who believes on him. He came to our world to reveal, not a mixture of truth and error, but the pure truth of God. All error is misleading, even though clothed with garments of heavenly beauty.

The character and power of God are revealed by the work of his hands. In the natural world are to be seen evidences of the love and goodness of God. These tokens are given to call attention from nature to nature's God, that his "eternal power and Godhead" may be understood.

Pantheistic theories are not sustained by the Word of God. The light of his truth shows that these theories are soul-destroying agencies. Darkness is their element, sensuality their sphere. They gratify the natural heart, and give leeway to inclination. Separation from God is the result of accepting them.

Christ calls upon his people to believe and practise his Word. Those who receive and assimilate this Word, making it a part of every action, of every attribute of character, will grow strong in the strength of God. It will be seen that their faith is of heavenly origin. Before angels and before men, they will stand as those who have strong, consistent Christian characters. They will not wander into strange paths. Their minds will not turn to a religion of sentimentalism and excitement.

[I beseech those who are laboring for God not to accept the spurious for the genuine. We have a whole Bible full of the most precious truth. We have no need for supposition or false excitement. In the golden censer of truth, as presented in Christ's teachings, we have that which will convict and convert souls. Present in the simplicity of Christ the truths that he came to this world to proclaim, and the power of your message will make itself felt. Do not present theories or tests that have no foundation in the Bible. We have grand, solemn tests to present. "It is written" is the test that must be brought home to every one.]

Walk firmly, decidedly, your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. God has not laid upon any one the burden of encouraging an appetite for strange, odd doctrines and theories. My brethren, keep these things out of your teaching. Do not allow them to enter into your experience. Do not let your life-work be marred by them.

The minds of the Jewish teachers were filled with maxims and suppositions. They interpreted the Word to mean that which God never designed it to mean, enforcing their oddities on the common people.

A warning against such teaching is found in Paul's letter to the Colossians. The apostle declares that the hearts of the believers were to be "knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. And this I say," he continues, "least any man should beguile you with enticing words. . . . As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him, rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power." Col. 2:2-10.

I am instructed to say to our people, Let us follow Christ. We may safely discard all ideas that are not included in his teaching. I appeal to our ministers to be sure that their feet are placed on the platform of eternal truth. Beware how you follow impulse, calling it the Holy Spirit. Some are in danger in this respect. I call upon them to be sound in the faith, able to give every one who asks a reason of the hope that is in them.

Into the hearts of many who have been long in the truth there has entered a hard, judicial spirit. They are sharp, critical, fault-finding. They have climbed into the judgment seat to pronounce sentence on those who do not meet their ideas. God calls upon them to come down, and bow before him in repentance, confessing their sins. He says to them, "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." Rev. 2:4, 5. They are striving for the first place, and by their words and acts they make many hearts sore.

Against this spirit, and against the false religion of sentimentalism, which is equally dangerous, I bear my warning. Take heed, brethren and sisters. Who is your leader — Christ, or the angel who fell from heaven? Are you sound in the faith? My prayer for you all is that God would grant you "according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his Spirit in the inner man; that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith; that ye, being rooted and grounded in love, may be able to comprehend with all saints what is the breadth, and length, and depth, and height; and to know the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge, that ye might be filled with all the fulness of God." Eph. 3:16-19.

By an Equality

F. D. STARR

PERHAPS a little of my experience in the matter of the transferring of stock in the Review and Herald Office from the old organization to the new, may be of interest to some who are also concerned in this business.

When asked, last summer, to transfer my stock, it seemed to me that it was out of proportion for me to hold as many shares as I did, while many others held so few, that it would be proper for me to withdraw a part of my threescore and ten shares, and invest the money elsewhere. A scripture found in 2 Cor. 8:14 —"By an equality"— helped my mind very much in this matter; and I decided that to equalize the thing, I would draw out a large share of what I had actually paid in from twenty to thirty and more years ago. I had no thought of touching the increase that had acrued, however, as that had cost me nothing. I thought I could make a good use of it for myself. I felt quite happy over my decision, but it was a suspicious sort of happiness that seemed to be something new to me, and I was a little afraid of it; then, too, I did not exactly like the idea of withdrawing the money when I remembered how much pleasure and the blessing of God I had received in pledging and paying the same. But I decided that I would take it out of the Review and Herald, and invest it in some of our other institutions. But matters began to assume what seemed to me a threatening aspect, reminding me of the experience of Moses when death was about to befall him on account of neglected duty, as recorded in Ex. 4:24. This text was forcibly impressed upon my mind from day to day: "Ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad" (Eze. 13:22), and I thought of our brethren in responsible positions at Washington and elsewhere who were saddened by the delay manifested by such as I, who were tardy about sending in their transfer of stock in God's great instrumentality for carrying on his work in the earth. I forthwith signed the document for the transfer of my entire stock, and sent it in, thereby bringing my mind rest and peace, and happiness that was not of the suspicious kind.

It is gratifying to know that so many have been prompt in transferring their stock, but if there are any who are still delaying, and thinking to draw out their money to use for themselves, may they stop and think twice before they do it; and if thinking about taking it out to put into some other branch of the cause, think at least once, and think seriously, too. Let us help other branches of the cause, but let us not draw from this one in order to do so. Shall not the mother institution that has assisted so many other enterprises in this work be sustained in this critical time, especially after the great misfortune of one year ago? This is not intended as a plea for the mother association, as though, like an aged pauper, she had been sent "over the hill to the poorhouse." By no means. Neither, on the other hand, has she entered the capital of the nation to share like the ambitious church of former times, the throne of civil power. No, but the God who located Moses by the side of the throne of Egypt, who sent Joseph and Daniel to the inner circle of kingly courts, and brought John the Baptist into intimate association with King Herod, designs that his work shall have like advantage to make itself widely known to-day. Shall we not all show a deep and tangible interest in this matter? I still believe in, and plead for, Scriptural equality, but this equality is not to be brought about by our having less investment in the publishing work but by scores and hundreds making new and larger investments.

Do we not believe by this time that the hand that is so often stretched out to heal and save, is likewise betimes stretched out to punish? What Bible reader can doubt it? Pharaoh of old had to be reminded of this ten times over in a very severe manner, and then he was not permanently convinced. Let us learn more easily. I believe I have looked at this matter, in my experience, from both sides, and I feel concerned for any who may do what I felt so strongly inclined to do. Thank God for setting us right in this thing.

Forsaken

G. B. THOMPSON

DID you ever feel in an hour of trial as though you were forsaken of God? When darkness has shut in your soul, and, as in Paul's experience when tossed on the raging billows of the Mediterranean Sea, "neither sun nor stars in many days appeared," did you ever feel as though God was a long distance away? When disappointment or sorrow has cast a gloomy shadow over your soul, has the enemy suggested that the Saviour had left you, forsaken you, abandoned you to his power. Well, weary soul, remember that Jesus has felt the same, and knows how to help you. When on the cross, crushed beneath the sins of the world, bearing the grief and sorrow of ruined souls, mocked by those whom he came to save, forsaken by his own disciples, he felt as you and I have felt. It seemed to him as if his Father had left him, and from his distressed and anguished soul was wrung the agonizing cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" His pitying, suffering soul felt as we have felt. He had taken our place, and was suffering in our stead.

But was he forsaken? — No, indeed. "In that thick darkness God's presence was hidden. He makes darkness his pavilion, and conceals his glory from human eyes. God and his holy angels were beside the cross. The Father was with his Son. Yet his presence was not revealed. Had his glory flashed forth from the cloud, every human beholder would have been destroyed. And in that dreadful hour Christ was not to be comforted with the Father's presence. He trod the wine-press alone, and of the people there was none with him."—"Desire of Ages," page 753.

There is encouragement for us in this. When almost in despair, hanging helpless on the cross, feeling forsaken of all, he is even then near us. As the Father and angels stood by the side of the cross while Jesus was hanging upon it, feeling forsaken even of his Father, so Jesus and holy angels are by our side to help and cheer us. Let us take courage then.

But you say, It seems so dark at times. Yes, I know. Yet the rainbow of promise is in the cloud. In "Testimonies for the Church," No. 31, page 211, we read: "The darkness which will then [if we have faith] rest upon our pathway must not discourage or drive us to despair. It is the veil with which God covers his glory when he comes to impart rich blessings."

How many, many times when the way seemed dark, and circumstances beyond our control have cast a gloom over the soul, we have murmured and complained, tempted to think that we were forsaken even by our Lord, little realizing that, wrapped in the thick darkness, he had come especially near to us to impart a rich blessing. Jesus has promised never to leave us. Heb. 13:5.

My Prayer

M. A. CREEPER

I stood on my balcony musing; (1)
The earth lay in white at my feet,
Beautiful white, not marred nor broken,
Wrapping the earth in wintry token.
And from the depth of my heart I prayed:
O, make me white, like the snow Thou hast made!

I lifted my eyes toward heaven,
Full studded with glittering lights;
They all are God's glory reflecting, (1)
The greater the lesser protecting.
And from the depth of my heart I prayed:
Make me a light, like the stars thou hast made!

I looked all around me, watching
The landscape, tranquil and calm;
Not a breath was stirring the mantle white,
Not a cloud was crossing the golden light.
And from the depth of my heart I prayed:
O, grant me such peace that never will fade!

Practical Christianity

MRS. E. G. WHITE (1)

I have been impressed with the subject of the influence of the church — what this influence should be. By earnest prayer the members are to obtain power that will make their influence a savor of life unto life. What is needed to-day is practical Christianity, not merely for a day or a year, but for a lifetime. The man who professes to be a Christian, and yet reveals in his life no practical godliness, is denying Christ. Opposite his name in the books of heaven are written the words, Unfaithful steward.

How is the world to be enlightened, save by the lives of Christ's followers? You profess to believe in Christ, to be a follower of his. Do you do his works? Can the world see plainly that you have been with Jesus, and learned of him? How are unbelievers to know that you belong to Christ if you show no zeal in his service, but instead cherish worldly ambition and follow worldly plans? Christ declares, "He that is not with me is against me; and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad."

God can not prepare for the day of trial before us those who are careless and indifferent. With those who are neither cold nor hot he has nothing to do. "I would thou wert cold or hot," he says. "So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spew thee out of my mouth." The half-hearted Christian (2) exerts an influence more harmful than the influence of the avowed infidel.

There are many whose lives are but a pretense of godliness. They are a law unto themselves, and they always will be, unless the grace of Christ subdues their hearts. They lift up their souls unto vanity, and God has no use for them in his service.

The Will of God Concerning You (2)

Our sanctification is God's object in all his dealing with us. He has chosen us from eternity that we might be holy. Christ gave himself for our redemption, that through faith in his power to save from sin, we might be made complete in him. In giving us his Word, he has given us bread from heaven. He declares that if we eat his flesh and drink his blood, we shall receive eternal life. As Christians we have pledged ourselves to fulfil the responsibilities resting on us, and to show to the world that we have a close connection with God. Thus, through the good words and works of his disciples, Christ is to be represented and honored.

God expects of us perfect obedience to his law. This law is the echo of his voice, saying to us, Holier, yea, holier still. Desire after the fulness of the grace of Christ, yea, long — hunger and thirst — after righteousness. The promise is, "Ye shall be filled." Let your heart be filled with a longing for this righteousness, the work of which God's Word declares to be peace, and its effect quietness and assurance forever.

God has plainly stated that he expects us to be perfect, and because he expects this, he has made provision for us to be partakers of the divine nature. Only thus can we gain success in striving for eternal life. The power is given by Christ. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

God's people are to reflect to the world the bright rays of his glory. But in order for them to do this, they must stand where these rays can fall on them. They must co-operate with God. The heart must be cleansed of all that leads to wrong. The Word of God must be read and studied with an earnest desire to gain from it spiritual power. The bread of heaven must be eaten and assimilated, becoming part of the life. Thus we gain eternal life. Thus is answered the prayer of Christ, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."

"This is the will of God, even your sanctification." Is it your will that your desires and inclinations shall be brought into harmony with the divine mind?

Godliness in the Every-Day Life

Christ declares, "By thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned."

The talent of speech was given to be used for the benefit of all. Pleasant, cheery words cost no more than unpleasant, moody words. Sharp words wound and bruise the soul. In this life every one has difficulties with which to wrestle. Every one meets with grievances and disappointments. Shall we not bring sunshine instead of gloom into the lives of those with whom we come in contact? Shall we not speak words that will help and bless? Such words will be just as verily a blessing to us as to those to whom they are spoken.

Parents, allow no faultfinding in your home. Teach your children to speak pleasant words, words that will bring sunshine and joy. Angels are not attracted to a home where discord reigns. Bring practical godliness into the home. Prepare yourselves and your children for entrance into the city of God. Angels will be your helpers. Satan will tempt you, but do not yield. Do not speak one word of which the enemy can take advantage.

Let the determination of each member of the family be, I will be a Christian; for in the school here below I must form a character that will give me entrance into the higher grade, even the school above. I must do unto others as I desire them to do to me.

Make the home life as nearly as possible like heaven. Let the members of the family forget not, as they gather round the family altar, to pray for the men in positions of responsibility in God's work. The physicians in our sanitariums, the ministers of the gospel, those in charge of our publishing houses and schools, need your prayers. They are tempted and tried. As you plead with God to bless them, your own hearts will be subdued and softened by his grace.

From Grace to Grace

We are living amid the perils of the last days, and we are to cleanse ourselves from all defilement, and put on the robe of Christ's righteousness. The work of God is to be steadily carried forward. We are to bring ourselves, body, soul, and spirit, into subjection to Christ. Unless we do this, the health of both body and soul will be endangered.

God desires his workers to gain daily a better understanding of how to reason logically from cause to effect, arriving at wise, safe conclusions. He desires them to add to the strength of the memory. We can not afford to make mistakes. As little children we are to sit at the feet of Christ, learning of him how to work successfully. We are to ask God for sound judgment, and for light to impart to others. There is need of knowledge that is the fruit of experience. We should not allow a day to pass without gaining an increase of knowledge in temporal and spiritual things. We are to plant no stakes that we are not willing to take up and plant further on, nearer the heights we hope to ascend. The highest education is to be found in training the mind to advance day by day. The close of each day should find us a day's march nearer the overcomer's reward. Day by day our understanding is to ripen. Day by day we are to work out conclusions that will bring a rich reward in this life and in the life to come. Looking daily to Jesus, instead of to what we ourselves have done, we shall make decided advancement in temporal as well as spiritual knowledge.

(3) The end of all things is at hand.

My Life Today, p. (3) 109

What we have done must not be allowed to place the period to our work. The Captain of our salvation says, "Advance. The night cometh, in which no man can work." Constantly we are to increase in usefulness. Our lives are always to be under the power of Christ. Our lamps are to be kept burning brightly.

Prayer is a heaven-ordained means of success. Appeals, petitions, entreaties, between man and man, move men, and act a part in controlling the affairs of nations. But prayer moves heaven. That power alone that comes in answer to prayer will make men wise in the wisdom of heaven, and enable them to work in the unity of the Spirit, joined together by the bonds of peace. Prayer, faith, confidence in God, bring a divine power that sets human calculations at their real worth,— nothingness.

In all ages God has given human beings divine revelations, that thus he may fulfil his purpose of unfolding gradually to the mind the doctrines of grace. His manner of imparting the (1) truth is illustrated by the words, "His going forth is prepared as the morning." He who places himself where God can enlighten him, advances, as it were, from the partial obscurity of dawn to the full radiance of noonday.

A Definite, Testing Message

J. B. BLOSSER

The amazing love of God for the purchase of the blood of Christ leads him to send his children a definite message to help them in their need, and he always employs the plainest manner possible to give them that message. It is so plain that "he may run that readeth it." The painstaking efforts of a fond mother to shield the child of her love from harm only faintly illustrates the care of our Heavenly Father for his children who are exposed to the plottings of a wily foe. With infinite wisdom he devised a plan of salvation from sin, and with sleepless vigilance he works with his divine power to deliver them from special dangers, and to lead them forth in paths of righteousness to glorify his name.

Through his servant Noah he sent a message that exactly met the needs of the people that were to see the world deluged by a flood. The message was given in such a plain, definite manner that none could misunderstand it. As they heard the stirring message from that "preacher of righteousness," announcing that a flood was coming upon the earth, and exhorting them to turn to God in repentance, and so be ready for that awful time, they could at the same time see the great ship in building that was to sail upon a flood of water. No one need misunderstand what his message meant. In it was salvation from sin, and a definite warning of the impending doom of the wicked. To fail to give the warning, or to fail to build the ark would have been alike fatal to those who had the message committed to them at that time. (1) The blood of the souls who would have been lost would have been upon their garments.

Moses had a definite message to give to Israel when the time had come to leave Egypt, and with a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night, the Lord led his people in the way he would have them go. No one could mistake the message: by word of mouth and by the glory of his presence the way was shown. Moreover, this message was destined to reach all parts of the world, "that all the people of the earth might know the hand of the Lord, that it is mighty; and that ye might fear the Lord your God forever." Joshua 4:24. Therefore God moved upon Moses to write out their experiences, and the truths that had been committed to them, that "all the people of the earth" might know the certainty of those things.

Whether in Isaiah's denunciations of the prevailing iniquity, or Jeremiah's warnings of the impending destruction of Jerusalem, or Daniel's visions of the conflicts of the future, or John's startling announcement of the "kingdom of heaven at hand,"— all have in them a definite message, and it is given in a manner that all may understand it. It is adapted to the time and needs of the Lord's people, and those who heeded it were delivered from the impending peril.

Now that we have reached the time when God's people are to pass through the last conflict with the enemy, and when the solemn scenes of the judgment are passing in the courts above, to be followed by the coming of Christ in glory to welcome his faithful remnant, a definite message is due to the world concerning these things, and it should be given in the plainest and most positive manner possible. When Job had a view of this time, he uttered the following earnest prayer: "Oh that my words were now written! oh that they were printed in a book! that they were graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever! for I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another." Job 19:23-27. The certainty of the coming of Christ and of Job's resurrection from the dead so fastened itself upon his mind that he desired to proclaim it in a way that no one could possibly misunderstand it, so he wished it "printed in a book," and "graven with an iron pen and lead in the rock forever." In this way all who desired could know what the message was that he had to proclaim. They could read it again and again. It is plainer and "more sure" than seeing with the eyes or hearing with the ears. This fact is testified to by Peter when he rehearsed the experience of those who were with Christ on the mount of transfiguration, and saw the exceeding glory of Christ, and heard the words of God. He says, "We have also a more sure word of prophecy." Men may be mistaken in what they see or hear when it is only seen and heard once, but when written out and "printed in a book," they can see it as often as they wish, hence they are "more sure" of understanding it. Luke also emphasizes this fact in his introductory words to his record of the gospel. He says that he wrote it "that thou mightest know the certainty of those things, wherein thou hast been instructed." Luke 1:4.

So, having committed to us the definite message that is designed to deliver his people in the "time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation," to prepare them to stand in the judgment, and meet him in peace at his coming, should we not, like Job, pray that these truths be "printed in a book," and then these books be "scattered like the autumn leaves"? This is the way that God would have us pray and work. This earnest prayer of Job will be answered, and now is the time to expect it to be answered, for now the people are living who should receive these messages and prepare to meet the Lord. God would have all know the message for this time, and in no plainer manner can it be given than by scattering the printed pages containing it. The words of the living messenger may be heard, appreciated, and may make their impression; but there is danger that they will not be fully understood, or be forgotten, hence the necessity of printing them in a book, that the interested soul may read them again and again, that they may become, as it were, "lead in the rock forever," graven there by the Spirit of the living God. Where are the faithful in Israel to-day? They are those who are holding fast to the definite message committed to this people, and laboring hard in a definite manner to give that message to the people. God is calling for an army of men and women to take these pages of truth as they come from the press and place them in the homes of the people. The call for canvassers is timely, and their work will be blessed of God; and when the harvest is over, the faithful canvassers will hear the "Well done" spoken to them.

The Holy Temple—No. 3

A. E. LEMON, M. D.

The temple is where God dwells. And where does he dwell?—In the mind (Eph. 3:17); for it is the mind that makes the man. "As he thinketh in his heart, so is he." Prov. 23:7. "Man looketh on the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh on the heart." 1 Sam. 16:7. Then if we are to keep the temple holy, it is the heart that we must watch. It is in the mind that sin originates. All law-breaking and disobedience to God come from within. And so it is the mind rather than the physical body that should receive our first attention; for if the mind is conquered and under the control of the Spirit, then the care of the physical body, which is temperance, will appear in its proper place as one of the fruits of the Spirit. Gal. 5:23.

Much attention is being paid to the Trust

With hearts submissive to Thy will,
  When wishes are denied,
Teach us, O Lord, to trust thee still,
  Whate'er betide.

Thou dost the hungry sparrows feed
  And ravens when they cry,
And every living creature's need
  Dost satisfy.

When scanty hoard and failing cruse
  We view with troubled eye,
Still food convenient for our use
  Thou dost supply.

Then for to-morrow and its needs
  May we not anxious be,
But where thy hand in wisdom leads,
  Still follow thee.

And daily praise thee for thy grace,
  And for thy constant care,
Until we see thee face to face
  Thy joy to share.

Evidences of Discipleship

MRS. E. G. WHITE

He who is converted to the truth, through faith made a partaker of the divine nature, is set apart to do the work of him who gave his life for the life of the world. The converted man is not a sluggard, but an earnest, faithful worker. He is one of Christ's chosen instrumentalities for the saving of others. He is filled with the same spirit of service that inspired the Saviour. He is a laborer together with God. He has the same earnestness, the same fervor, that led Christ to work so untiringly for the perishing. He is made a partaker of Christ's sufferings and of his great love, and he becomes a part of his working force for the saving of sinners.

Those in whose hearts the love of Christ abides will use every power they have in doing the work that Christ did. Every one who has received the message of Christ's love has a work to do. Upon every Christian rests the responsibility of reflecting the light of heaven to those in darkness. Each follower of the Saviour is to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation through grace. No one is to fail of living the truth that he has received.

The words of the Christian are to be carefully chosen. His deportment is to be above reproach. It is the revealing of the goodness of Christ's character that has so decided an influence on all with whom he is brought in contact. (1)

The Lord is our Captain, our Leader. We are to bear his banner, and wear the armor that he provides. We are to strive to win his enemies to be his friends. Not till he lays his armor at the feet of the Redeemer is the Christian to relax his watchful, prayerful efforts. "We are laborers together with God." Ever remember that all your capabilities, all your possessions, are the Lord's, to be used and improved in his service. Remember that all the means you have is given you by God. Use it to glorify his name. Use it wisely and economically, because it is a sacred trust. I ask those who have been entrusted with the Lord's money to labor unselfishly for the Master. Do not tie up your money in estates and banks, when there is such need that it be put into circulation to advance the Lord's work. Remember that your money is yours only in trust. Give the light to others by giving of your means to send workers into new fields. Thus you will hasten the coming of Christ. He who is truly converted will feel it a privilege to give of his means to send the truth into the dark places of the earth.

God asks, Why are not memorials for me established in the cities? What answer can we return? The neglected work in our cities testifies to the lack of Christlike energy among believers. Let all awake to the need of establishing Christian missions in the cities. Let God's workers enter the doors that he has opened for them. Believers need to arouse and do much more than they are now doing in lines of Christian effort.

Christ's commission is, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Let God's people show that they believe these words. Fulfilling the Saviour's commission, they are to be a working power through all time.

Have we light? Let it shine forth to those in darkness. Tell the Saviour that you are doing his bidding, and then believe that he will fulfil the word, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end."

Of the disciples we read, "So then after the Lord had spoken unto them, he was received up into heaven, and sat on the right hand of God. And they went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

Our work is plainly outlined by the work of Christ and the work of his disciples after his resurrection and ascension. We are not at liberty to sit with folded hands, waiting for some one to lead us to fields of labor and set us at work. Those who have a knowledge of the truth are to go forth in the name of the Lord, believing every word that Christ has spoken, and looking to him for grace and strength.

[As, like the disciples, you go from place to place, telling the story of the Saviour's love, you will make friends, and will see the fruit of your labor.] (2) All true, humble, loving, faithful workers will be sustained and strengthened by power from on high. They will win their way to the hearts of the people as they follow Christ's example. The sick will be ministered to, the afflicted prayed for. There will be heard the voice of singing and the voice of prayer. The Scriptures will be opened to testify of truth. And with signs following, the Lord will confirm the word spoken. (1)

This class of work has gone out of fashion. Let it be once more brought into practise. The fields are white all ready to harvest. The Lord desires many more to go out into the harvest field. He will be with those who study his Word and obey his commands. He will impart to them his grace. Go forth in the name of Christ, remembering that he is your companion, that every prayer, every word, every song, is heard by him. The message of the soon coming of the Lord with power and great glory will bring conviction to many hearts.]

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name that is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

"Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world."

Satan's Delusions

S. N. HASKELL

As the people of God near the eternal shore, the dangers increase. Satan, who once was an angel of light, the covering cherub at the right hand of God in the heavenly courts, has come down, "having great wrath, because he knoweth that he hath but a short time." He will work with "all power and signs and lying wonders." That master mind, once the highest among the angels of God, has for six thousand years bent its energies for the destruction of souls, and he will bring all the depths of his satanic skill, all the subtilty he has ever acquired, all the cruelty developed against the people of God, into the final conflict. That which hath been will be, except that the coming struggle will be marked with an intensity such as the world has never before witnessed. Satan will use the same policy, manifest the same spirit, and work for the same end, as in all preceding ages. No person will be safe from his workings unless he is a child of prophecy; unless his position and work bear all the marks of God's prophetic Word.

True Wealth

The heart, it hath its own estate;
The mind, it hath its wealth untold:
It needs not fortune to be great,
While there's a coin surpassing gold.

No matter which way fortune leans,
Wealth makes not happiness secure;
A little mind hath little means,
A narrow heart is always poor.

'Tis not the house that honor makes,
True honor is a thing divine;
It is the mind precedence takes,
It is the spirit makes the shrine.

The Need of Earnest Effort

MRS. E. G. WHITE

We are far behind in our missionary work, both at home and in foreign countries. We have in our keeping the most sacred truth ever committed to mortals, and our work should correspond to our profession of faith. The world is becoming more and more lawless. Soon great trouble will arise among the nations,— trouble that will not cease until Jesus comes.

What are we as a people doing at this important time? Are we purifying our souls by obedience to Christ's words? Are we humbling our hearts before God, and confessing our sins? Are we seeking with earnestness and sincerity for help from him who is the source of strength? Are we claiming the promises, believing that Jesus pardons our transgressions? Are we educating ourselves to overcome all temptation to murmur and complain?

My brethren and sisters, as never before we need to press together, unitedly following him who has prepared his throne in the heavens, and whose kingdom ruleth over all. God has not forsaken his people, and our strength lies in not forsaking him.

Christ died to redeem us. By the infinite price with which he ransomed us he has shown his love for us. He is not willing that any should perish. He desires all to believe on him, that they may have eternal life.

With pity and compassion, with tender yearning, the Lord is looking upon his tried, tempted people. For a time the oppressors will be permitted to triumph over those who obey God's commandments. All are given the same opportunity that was granted to the first great rebel, the opportunity to show what spirit is prompting them to action. It is God's purpose that every one shall be tested, to see whether he will be loyal or disloyal to the laws that govern the kingdom of heaven. To the last God gives Satan opportunity to reveal his character. Thus the final triumph of his people will be made more marked, more glorious, more complete. The words of the prophet will be fulfilled: "The day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come." "The Lord reigneth; let the people tremble; he sitteth between the cherubims; let the earth be moved. The Lord is great in Zion; and he is high above all the people."

(1) [Now and onward till the close of time the people of God should be more earnest, more wide-awake, not trusting in their own wisdom, but in the wisdom of their Leader. They should set aside days for fasting and prayer. Entire abstinence from food may not be required, but they should eat sparingly of the most simple food.] No one should lift up his soul unto vanity, walking in pride and self-indulgence. We are living in a time that demands genuine humiliation and most earnest prayer. We are nearing the most important crisis that has ever come upon the world. If we are not wide-awake and watching, it will find us unprepared.

There is in our churches a decided lack of love for Christ and for one another. Christlike simplicity is looked upon as weakness. There is a lack of clear spiritual discernment. Wrongs remain unconfessed. The transgression condemned in the law of God is on the increase in our borders. Sin is cherished, and the result is hardness of heart. When those who are handling sacred things do not walk in the light, the light becomes darkness to them, and how great is that darkness! Men are making strange mistakes in reading character. Those who do not possess moral worth are exalted, while those who are endeavoring to seek the Lord and walk in his steps are not appreciated. This danger will become more and more apparent. We must awake to the perils that are thickening around us. All pharisaism, all self-righteousness, must be separated from the soul. Then we shall realize that we need Christ's righteousness, and we shall accept it by faith.

There is among us a manifest lack of searching the Scriptures. We must know the reasons of our faith. The importance and solemnity of the scenes opening before us demand this. And on no account must the spirit of complaint be encouraged. Do you cherish malice, bitterness, and wrath if plans are introduced that do not harmonize with your ideas? Is not this indulging a spirit of war, rather than a spirit of meekness and humility? (2) [If ever we needed to manifest kindness and true courtesy, it is now. We may have to plead most earnestly before legislative councils for the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience. Thus in his providence God has designed that the claims of his law shall be brought before men in positions of highest authority. But as we stand before these men, we are to show no bitterness of feeling.

Constantly we are to pray for divine aid. It is God alone who can hold the four winds until his servants shall be sealed in their foreheads.]

The Lord will do a great work in the earth. Satan makes a determined effort to divide and scatter God's people. He brings up side issues to divert minds from the important subjects that should engage our attention. Individually we are to feel the importance of uniting in the bonds of Christian fellowship. With one heart and one mind we are to prepare for the conflict, by faith laying our petitions before the mercy-seat. The throne of God is arched by the bow of promise, and the prayers offered in faith and simplicity are heard. It is God's glory to answer the supplications of his people.

I have been especially instructed in regard to the danger of drawing apart. Let us leave to Satan the cruel work of accusing and faultfinding. Let us bow before God in repentance because of our want of love for one another and for him who died for us. The gold of love and faith is wanting in our ranks. Christ declares, "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love." Many are holding on to the truth with only the tips of their fingers. They have had great light and many privileges. Like Capernaum, they have in this respect been exalted to heaven. But unless they put away their pride and self-confidence, in the time of trial that is approaching they will become apostates. Unless they have an entire transformation of character, they will never enter heaven.

You strike too low, my brethren. Set your mark higher. Let your work be in harmony with the work of Christ. It is the privilege of all to grow up to the full stature of men and women in Christ. "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." Is it your will also? My brethren, with intensity of desire long after God; yea, pant after him, as the hart panteth after the water brooks. Press toward the mark of the prize of your high calling in Christ.

Why do not those who name the name of Christ reveal the earnestness and the self-denial that he revealed? Why do they not arouse from their indifferent, self-satisfied condition? God's people must have a fixed purpose to honor him. They will never be holy until they put all their energies into his work.

The Second Coming of Christ

Its Place and Meaning in the Plan of Redemption

C. S. LONGACRE

The second coming of Christ in person with his heavenly associates to this earth is not only the greatest event because of its surpassing glory and majesty, but because of the consummation of all the eternal interests and the realization of the blessed hope of the whole family of faith. From the day when Adam and Eve turned their sorrowing steps from Eden and the tree of life, the children of faith have waited for the coming of the promised One, who is "the resurrection and the life," who has "the keys of death, and of hades," to break the destroyer's power and bring them back again to the lost paradise, and restore them to their original privileges as partakers of the life-perpetuating fruit of the tree of life. Upon the second coming of Jesus Christ to this earth hangs the

"Thy Will Be Done"

YESTERDAY, when I said, "Thy will be done,"
I knew not what that will of thine would be,
What clouds would gather black across my sun,
What storms and desolation waited me;
I knew thy love would give me what was best,
And I am glad I could not know the rest.

"Thy will be done," I say, and to the scroll
Of unread years consenting, set my name;
Day after day their pages will unroll
In shining words that prove thy love the same,
Until my years are gathered into one
Eternal, sanctified. "thy will be done."

Lights in the World

MRS. E. G. WHITE

CHRIST declared himself to be the light of the world. To his disciples he gave a part in the work of shedding light on a sin-darkened world. "Ye are the light of the world," he declared. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

The church has been made the depositary of the truth of the gospel, the agency through which God's light is to shine forth to the world, in clear, distinct rays. How is this light to shine? Let God's Word tell us: —

"Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world."

"And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offense till the day of Christ; being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God."

"Ye were sometimes darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord: walk as children of light."

"Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."

God has made every provision for our justification and sanctification. He has given Christ to us, that through him we may be made complete. Christ gave his life for sinners. By his death he opened a fountain in which all may wash their robes of character, and make them white. He died on the cross, but he rose from the tomb, proclaiming, "I am the resurrection, and the life." He made his followers joint heirs with him in his glory. In his name they were to go forth to carry out his purpose of bringing many souls to a knowledge of the truth.

Heaven's resources are limitless, and they are all at our command. Why, then, I ask, is the progress of the Lord's work in our world so slow? Why are not the Lord's followers increasing in knowledge and purity, holiness and power?

Are there not presented before Christ's followers the highest virtues to be cultivated, the greatest honors to be gained? God calls upon them to enter a race in which every one may win. He calls upon them to enlist in a warfare in which every one may be a conqueror. A robe of righteousness and a crown of everlasting life,— this is the reward held out before the overcomer.

The inhabitants of the heavenly universe expect the followers of Christ to shine as lights in the world. They are to show forth the power of the grace that Christ died to give to men. God expects those who profess to be Christians to reveal in their lives the highest development of Christianity. They are the recognized representatives of Christ. Their work is to show that Christianity is a reality. They are to be men of faith, men of constant growth, men of courage, whole-souled men, who without questioning trust in God and his promises.

God calls for men of undaunted courage, men full of hope and faith and trust, who rejoice in the thought of the final triumph, refusing to be hindered by obstacles. He who steadfastly adheres to the principles of truth has the assurance that his weakest points of character may become his strongest points. Heavenly angels are close by him who strives to bring his life into harmony with God and his holy law. God is with him as he declares, "I must overcome the temptations that surround me, else they will drive Christ from my heart." He combats all temptation and braves all opposition. By the strength obtained from on high, he holds in control the passions and tendencies which, uncontrolled, would lead him to defeat.

The presence of the man who loves and fears God is as a sweet fragrance in his family. His example speaks eloquently in favor of the truth. All with whom he comes in contact are constrained to say, "He has been with Jesus, and has learned of him."

(1) [When the Christian takes his baptismal vow, divine help is pledged to him. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit stand ready to work in his behalf. God places at his command the resources of heaven, that he may be an overcomer. His own power is small; but God is omnipotent, and God is his helper. Daily he is to make known his wants at the throne of grace. By faith and trust, by availing himself of the resources provided, he can be more than a conqueror.] (1)

Why, then, should not those who are fighting against the powers of darkness move forward with faith and courage? God and Christ and the Holy Spirit are on their side.

The Lord expects those who believe in Christ to co-operate with divine instrumentalities, and thus reveal a strength that the worldling can not reveal. God is dishonored, and his cause is reproached, when the Christian shows less zeal, less self-denial, in his strife for the mastery over evil, than do those who are striving for the mastery over the things of the world.

We know not how soon our probation may close. How dare those who know the truth live in unpreparedness, not ready to meet their Lord? How dare they remain sinful and defiled? Why are they not afraid? Why do they not realize their peril? The weakness of the church is due to its unbelieving, unconverted, unsanctified members. The Lord would work mightily for his people if they would put off the works of darkness, and be clothed with his righteousness. He calls upon every one who names the name of Christ to depart from all iniquity, to be "not slothful in business; fervent in spirit; serving the Lord."

God calls upon those who profess to believe the truth to show by unquestioning obedience that they are faithful soldiers of the cross. Let not those who stand under the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel do anything that will dishonor the cause for which they are fighting. Christ expects his soldiers to be brave and loyal and true.

The work that Christ did on this earth his followers are to do. With the power and efficacy brought by the Holy Spirit they are to carry forward his plan for the restoration of the divine image in humanity. The Lord will do great things for them when they work under the Holy Spirit's guidance. But they must place their entire dependence on God.

For the last twenty years a subtle, unconsecrated influence has been leading men to look to men, to bind up with men, to neglect their heavenly Companion. Many have turned away from Christ. They have failed to appreciate the One who declares, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Let us do all in our power to redeem the past. Making God our trust, let us go out into the waste places of the earth to work for the salvation of perishing souls. We shall meet with close and trying times. Temptation and trial will come. But the Lord is an all-powerful helper. He desires those who work for him to move forward with singing, because he co-operates with every unselfish effort.

"Hearken to me, ye that follow after righteousness, ye that seek the Lord: look unto the rock whence ye are hewn, and to the hole of the pit whence ye are digged. . . . For the Lord shall comfort Zion: he will comfort all her waste places; and he will make her wilderness like Eden, and her desert like the garden of the Lord; joy and gladness shall be found therein, thanksgiving, and the voice of melody."

Why This Stupor?

G. B. THOMPSON

A brother said to me recently, "Why is it that these great and solemn truths of the third angel's message do not stir my soul as they did years ago when I first listened to the glad news of my Saviour's return?"

How is it with you, my brother, my sister? Once you were mightily stirred as you listened to the message; and at the risk of losing everything,— friends, position, and every worldly joy,— you eagerly laid hold of it. As the various lines of prophecy were traced down, and the signs in the heavens, in the earth and sea, in the social and political world were studied, your heart was moved, and you believed that the end was very near, and that it was time to lay all on the altar a sacrifice to God. And it was no fable you heard, but the vital truth of God. But do these things awaken a response in your heart to-day as they did then? This was a number of years ago, perchance, and the Master was even then "at the door." He is nearer now than when we first believed. But does it seem so? Are we as active in missionary work, as faithful in the church, as zealous in the prayer and social meeting now as then?

If we are not, there must be some reason for the change that has taken place in us. It is not because the message is less powerful and convincing. The numerous lines of prophecy are as clear to-day as ever. The study of the Word, and the events taking place around us, illuminates, rather than obscures, the tremendous and immovable pillars of our faith. After years of siege by the enemy, every fundamental principle stands unshaken. In some things we no longer walk by faith; for we have come down the stream of time so near to the vast ocean of eternity that we can, if we but open our eyes, really "see the day approaching."

Can it be that our hearts are to-day less ready to respond to the appeals of the Holy Spirit than years ago? Herein lies a grave peril. This position is the most solemn and dangerous that it is possible to occupy. An alarm-clock unheeded will soon fail to arouse us. So with the heart. Stirred for years by the Holy Spirit, but in vain, it becomes hardened, calloused, and less susceptible to the call of God. The sin against the Holy Ghost is not some sin of such awful turpitude that God will not forgive it; for "all manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men." But if we continue to disregard the call of duty, smother the convictions of the Holy Spirit, and refuse to give up known sins, the heart becomes hardened, and we may reach a place where it is impossible to renew us "again unto repentance" (Heb. 6:6), having placed ourselves beyond the reach of the Spirit of God, the only thing in the earth which convinces of sin and changes the wicked, deceitful heart of man. "There are none so hardened as those who have slighted the invitation of mercy, and done despite to the Spirit of grace. The most common manifestation of the sin against the Holy Spirit, is in persistently slighting heaven's invitation to repent. Every step in the rejection of Christ is a step toward the rejection of salvation, and toward the sin against the Holy Spirit. In rejecting Christ the Jewish people committed the unpardonable sin; and by refusing the invitation of mercy we may commit the same error."—"Desire of Ages," page 324.

To continue in sin is exceedingly dangerous. Sin is an opiate. Every refusal to yield the heart to God, obtunds our moral feeling and increases our drowsiness. Paul speaks of a class who, because of sin, have reached a place where they are "past feeling." Eph. 4:19. This terrible condition is not reached at one step, but gradually. Sinning, living in violation of known duty, disregarding the plain injunctions of the Word, daily hardening our hearts against the appeals of the Holy Spirit, deadens our spiritual faculties until the truths of God's Word can be heard with the ear, but they move our hearts no more. Unless we change this condition, the time will come when the most terrible warnings which ever fell on the ears of mortals will fail to stir us in any degree whatever, and we become dead, "past feeling." Like the man who is freezing, yet feels comfortable, so sin has its congealing effect, and we do not, because of continued violation of our conscience, sense our real condition. This is a lamentable and an alarming condition indeed. Can any one ever be recalled from this terrible stupor of insensibility when once reached? We would not limit God, but the risk is too great to be considered. Physical death is not so much to be dreaded as the death of moral feeling or spiritual perception.

"There is a line by us unseen,
  That crosses every path,—
The hidden boundary between
  God's patience and his wrath.
O! where is this mysterious bourne
  By which our path is crossed,—
Beyond which God himself hath sworn
  That he who goes is lost?"

Have you lived past the meridian of life, yet unconverted? Have you felt the drawing influence of the Holy Spirit, and resolved that you would give yourself wholly to God, but are still standing out against the Lord, expecting sometime to yield and obey when circumstances are more favorable? Beware! There is danger in procrastination. The alarm-clock of the soul may warn unheard erelong, and you be "past feeling."

In a few short years at most probation will close, and the irrevocable doom of the ungodly be pronounced, and upon your unsaved neighbors and friends, rich and poor alike, will fall the seven last and terrible plagues, and on every hand will be heard the lamentations and unutterable woe of the eternally lost. This terrible truth is enough to move a heart of stone. Does it move you as it should, or as it once did, my brother? Why this insensibility, almost "past feeling"? Let the tocsin be sounded, that the latent energy of the soul may be awakened.

Can you listen, unmoved, to the plaintive cry which comes from the unwarned millions of the Orient for laborers to come and tell them about the coming One,— you who know that in a "little while" the besom of destruction from a long-suffering God will destroy the nations that forget God? Can you listen to this, and not say, Here I am, Lord, use me anywhere to save souls? Why this dearth of laborers? Why this stupor which has settled like a pall of death upon so many? It is surely time to heed the call, "Awake thou that sleepest."

Can you read the urgent calls from the home and foreign fields for means to establish and extend the work in these fields, and though possessing much of this world's store, give only a pittance to ease the conscience, an amount less than you once spent before receiving the message for some idol? Do you spend more annually to decorate your home, or for needless articles of dress for yourself, or to pander to the pride of unsanctified members of your household, than to extend the message in the "regions beyond"? Does the spirit of sacrifice burn as brightly in your soul to-day as when you began to obey the truth? Do you give less now than formerly to advance the message?

It is surely time to awake from the deadly stupor of the enemy. Have we allowed the world to enter our hearts, and to chill almost "past feeling" the tender love of God for lost souls? Have we lost our first love? Is the prevailing iniquity in the earth deadening our spirituality? The Lord calls us to repentance. The end of all things is upon us, and it is time we were honest with ourselves. In heaven it has been decided to end the delay in the prolonged controversy in the earth, and it is time that in the strength of God we cut loose from sin, and put a period to this everlasting delay and compromise with sin in our own experience.

The Sanctuary — No. 1

MRS. S. N. HASKELL

There are three sanctuaries brought to view in the Bible. The heavenly sanctuary is the dwelling-place of the eternal God (Ps. 102:19), where he sits enthroned in glory beyond the conception of mortal minds. 1 Tim. 6:16.

We have the blessed assurance that the faithful, beyond the reign of sin and death, shall behold his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads. Rev. 22:4; Matt. 5:8. They will then dwell in his presence.

When the children of Israel came out of the darkness of Egyptian bondage, they were unable to comprehend the exalted work of God and Christ in man's behalf in the heavenly sanctuary. In order to lift them above this low plane,

A Prayer

H. T. TAYLOR

O take my hand, dear Jesus;
  For thee how oft I pine!
Fill me with truth and righteousness,
  And make me wholly thine.

I know that thou dost love me;
  O take this heart of mine
And cleanse it from all selfishness,
  And make me wholly thine!

Help me to live for others,
  Filled with thy love divine,
That I may point them unto thee;
  O make me wholly thine!

Brotherly Love

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Just prior to the crucifixion, Christ, in his last lessons to the disciples, dwelt upon the love that they should cherish for one another. "By this," he said, "shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."

After the descent of the Holy Spirit, the disciples went forth to proclaim a risen Saviour, their one desire the salvation of souls. They rejoiced in the sweetness of communion with saints. They were tender, thoughtful, self-denying, willing to make any sacrifice for the truth's sake. In their daily association with one another they revealed the love that Christ had commanded them to reveal. By unselfish words and deeds they strove to kindle this love in other hearts.

The believers were ever to cherish the love that filled the hearts of the apostles after the descent of the Holy Spirit. They were to go forward in willing obedience to the new commandment, "As I have loved you, that ye also love one another." So closely were they to be united to Christ, that they would be enabled to fulfil his requirements. The power of a Saviour who could justify them by his righteousness was to be magnified.

A Spiritual Loss

But the early Christians began to look for defects in one another. Dwelling upon mistakes, encouraging suspicion and doubt, giving way to unkind criticism, they lost sight of the Saviour, and of the great love he had revealed for sinners. They became more strict in regard to outward ceremonies, more particular about the theory of the faith, more severe in their criticisms. In their zeal to condemn others, they themselves erred. They forgot the lessons of brotherly love that Christ had taught. And, saddest of all, they were unconscious of their loss. They did not realize that happiness and joy were going out of their lives, and that soon they would walk in darkness, having shut the love of God out of their hearts.

A Message of Reproof

Because the early church lost their first love, there came to them a message of reproof. "I have somewhat against thee," the Lord declared, "because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent."

Those mentioned in this scripture as losing their first love were not ranked with open sinners. They had the truth; they were established in the doctrine; they were firm to condemn and resist evil. Yet God declared, "Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee." They were losing their realization of the greatness of the love that God has shown for fallen humanity by making an infinite sacrifice to redeem them.

The apostle John realized that brotherly love was waning in the church, and he dwelt particularly upon this point. Up to the day of his death he urged upon believers the constant exercise of love for one another. His letters to the churches are interwoven with this thought. In one of his epistles we read: "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. . . . God sent his only begotten Son into the world, that we might live through him. . . . Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."

In the church of God to-day brotherly love is greatly lacking. Many of those who profess to love the Saviour neglect to love those who are united with them in Christian fellowship. We are of the same faith, members of one family, all children of the same Heavenly Father, with the same blessed hope of immortality. How close and tender should be the tie that binds us together! How careful we should be to have our words and actions in harmony with the sacred truths that God has committed to us! (1) The people of the world are looking to us, to see if our faith is exerting a sanctifying influence on our hearts, making us Christlike. They are ready to discover every defect in our lives, every inconsistency in our actions. Let us give them no occasion to reproach our faith.

Our Greatest Danger

It is not the opposition of the world that will endanger us the most; the evil cherished in the hearts of professed Christians works out most grievous disaster, and retards most the progress of God's cause. There is no surer way of weakening ourselves in spiritual things than by being envious, suspicious of one another, full of faultfinding and evil surmising. "This wisdom descendeth not from above, but is earthly, sensual, devilish. For where envying and strife is, there is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy. And the fruit of righteousness is sown in peace of them that make peace."

How We May Reveal Christ

When you are associated with one another, be guarded in your words. Let your conversation be of such a nature that you will have no need to repent of it. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." "A good man out of the good treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man out of the evil treasure bringeth forth evil things." If the love of the truth is in your hearts, you will talk of the truth,—of the blessed hope that you have in Jesus. If your hearts are filled with brotherly love, you will seek to establish and build up your brother in the most holy faith.

If a word is dropped that is detrimental to the character of a friend or brother, never encourage this evil-speaking; for it is the work of the enemy. Remind the speaker that God's Word forbids this kind of conversation. (1) We are to empty the heart of everything that defiles the soul-temple, that Christ may dwell within. The Redeemer has told us how we may reveal him to the world. If we cherish his Spirit, if we manifest his love toward others, if we guard one another's interests, if we are kind, patient, forbearing, the fruits we bear will give evidence to the world that we are God's children. (1) It is unity in the church that enables Christians to exert a strong influence upon unbelievers.

To build up one another in the most holy faith is a blessed work; to tear down is a work full of bitterness and sorrow. (1) Christ identifies himself with his suffering children; for he says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." If all would carry out the instruction given by Christ, love and unity would prevail in the church.

Every heart has its own sorrows and disappointments, and we should seek to lighten one another's burdens by manifesting the love of Jesus to those around us. If our conversation were upon heaven and heavenly things, evil-speaking would soon cease to have any attraction for us. We would not then be placing our feet upon dangerous ground; nor would we enter into temptation, falling under the power of the evil one. (1)

Instead of finding fault with others, let us be critical with ourselves. Every one should inquire, Is my heart right before God? Am I glorifying my Heavenly Father? If you have cherished a wrong spirit, banish it from the soul. Eradicate from your heart everything that is of a defiling nature. Pluck up every root of bitterness, lest others be contaminated by the baleful influence. Do not allow one poisonous plant to remain in the soil of your heart. Root it out this very hour, and cultivate in its stead the plant of love. Let Jesus be enshrined in the soul-temple.

My brethren and sisters, prayerfully consider the exhortation given to those who have left their first love. "Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works." God is now calling for heartfelt repentance, and for a return to the love that we once manifested toward one another. "Charity suffereth long, and is kind; charity envieth not; charity vaunteth not itself, is not puffed up, doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil; rejoiceth not in iniquity, but rejoiceth in the truth; beareth all things, believeth all things, hopeth all things, endureth all things."

God's Ownership and Man's Stewardship—No. 1

A Bible Study

A. T. ROBINSON

MATT. 25:14-30. Read carefully the parable of the talents. Who is represented by the man traveling into a far country? Whom did he call together before leaving for a far country? Whose goods did he deliver unto his servants? Upon what basis was the distribution of goods made? Did all receive the same amount? What is a man called who is entrusted with the use of another's goods? 1 Peter 4:10. What is required on the part of stewards? 1 Cor. 4:1, 2. What use was made of their Lord's goods by the different classes spoken of in the parable? What did the man do who had received the one talent? Where did he bury his talent?—"In the earth." Think of it. What was it he hid in the earth?—"His Lord's money." Then does this parable have reference to the use we make of temporal things?—"The parable of the talents has not been fully understood. This important lesson was given to the disciples for the benefit of Christians living in the last days; and these talents do not represent merely the ability to preach and instruct from the Word of God. The parable applies to the temporal means which God has entrusted to his people."—"Testimonies," Vol. I, page 197. In the parable, what took place after a long time? When he came back, what did he do with his servants? Whose coming, after a long absence, is now very near? To what account will each of his servants be called when he comes? Will this reckoning take place after he comes in the clouds of heaven, or before? In what hour are we now living? Rev. 14:7.

1 Cor. 6:19, 20. Read and study this passage carefully. Does a man belong to himself? Why does he not belong to himself? Does this ownership have reference to a man's body? 1 Thess. 5:23. Then to whom should we make an unreserved surrender of ourselves? Matt. 22:21. How many are willing to make this surrender, just now?

Read carefully Ps. 24:1; 50:10-12; Haggai 2:8. To whom does the whole world and all that is therein belong? The beasts? the cattle? the fowls? the food? the silver? the gold?

Ex. 20:8-11. Repeat the fourth commandment. How much of the time has the Lord made man a steward of? Verse 9. How much of the time has he laid his hand upon, saying, "This is mine"? Then what should we do with the Sabbath? Matt. 22:21; Ex. 20:10. Upon what is the right to make this reservation based? Verse 11.

Lev. 27:30, 31. Study carefully these verses. Upon how much of all that comes to us, has the Lord laid his hand, saying, This is mine, "it is holy unto the Lord"? Upon what is the right to make this reservation based? Deut. 8:18. Then what should we do with one tenth of all that comes to us? Matt. 22:21.

Study Mal. 3:7-12. What does the Lord promise to those who return unto him? What question does this call forth? What question suggests the answer? What is the answer to the question, "Wherein have we robbed thee?" What does he say is the result of thus robbing God? What does the Lord command those to do who have been robbing him? What condition has the Lord made upon which restitution is to be made? Lev. 27:31. Can one afford to deal with the Lord on this plan? Mal. 3:10. Can one afford not to do so? Mal. 3:9; Haggai 1:5-9.

The Sanctuary—No. 2

MRS. S. N. HASKELL

EVERY sacrifice slain pointed two ways. As the priest acted out the great kindergarten lesson of the sanctuary service before the people, God designed that the people should comprehend the work of our great High Priest in the heavenly sanctuary. He also designed that from that service they were to understand what the Lord required of them, that they might become the temple of the Holy Ghost. Like the sword with two edges, every sacrifice pointed two ways, and taught these two great truths.

If in the study of the sanctuary, we see only the work done by Christ for man, and fail to comprehend what God requires of us, we lose much.

Christ is a faithful witness for humanity in the courts of heaven, and the study of the sanctuary reveals this more fully than does any other subject. God designs that we shall be faithful witnesses of divinity in this world of sin, and the study of the sanctuary subject reveals how we may represent him.

For a few moments in imagination we will place ourselves three thousand years ago in the temple court. A sinner enters with a lamb. When he reaches the door of the sanctuary, he lays his hands on the head of the innocent lamb, and confesses his sin, thus acknowledging that he is a sinner worthy of death. The knife is raised, and in the very act of taking innocent life, he accepts Christ as his substitute. This places him in direct connection with the priest, and as the priest passes with the blood from his sight within the veil of the holy place, the sinner believes the blood is presented in his behalf.

There is still an important work to do. The body of the sacrifice is to be carefully dissected, and every particle of fat removed by the sinner's "own hand," and given to the priest, who burns it upon the altar. Lev. 4:27-31; 7:29-31. The priest stands waiting until every portion of the body is searched faithfully for the fat, and when it is delivered to the priest, he burns it upon the altar. The psalmist saw in this the type of the destruction of sin and sinners. Ps. 37:20; 73:12-18. It was a sweet savor to the Lord; for it represented the burning of sin without the sinner.

Have any of us who have come to Christ and accepted him as our sacrifice kept him waiting for us to separate from our body every wrong habit and appetite? Is he waiting for us to deliver over our appetite for meat, tea, coffee, etc? If so, why not present our bodies a living sacrifice wholly acceptable unto him?

In Line With the Prophecy

C. MC REYNOLDS

THE Rev. Dr. Bascom Robins, of Burlington, Kan., is delivering in that place a series of lectures on "The Decalogue." The last Sunday in January he made the following bold assertions: "The Sabbath, seventh day, was in one of the decalogues; but there were three of them,—one from Adam to Moses, one from Moses to Christ, and one from Christ onward to continue indefinitely. In the first they kept the seventh-day Sabbath because the Lord finished his work on the seventh day, and then rested. In the second they kept a sabbath that comes on every day of the week, as the fourth of July does; and in the Christian decalogue the first day was made the Sabbath by divine appointment. But there is a class of people in this country who will not keep the Christian sabbath unless they are forced to do so; but that can be easily done. We have twenty million of men, besides women and children, in this country, who want this country to keep the Christian sabbath. If we (the First-day observers) would say we will not sell anything to them, we will not buy anything from them, we will not work for them or hire them to work for us, the thing could be wiped out, and all the world would keep the Christian sabbath."

While his assertions regarding the decalogue are absolutely false and groundless, he little realized how clearly in line with the prophecy of Revelation 13 is his proposed plan for wiping out that people who will not keep the Christian (?) sabbath unless forced to do so. His plan may very soon be tried. Are we ready for the issue? It is surely coming.

Denying the Light Behind

T. E. BOWEN

THE Lord is doing much for his people. With great patience and love he has led his children along the narrow, rugged pathway leading out from the cold, barren mountains of sin and unbelief to the golden city of promise, to which so many eyes by faith have turned.

From the very beginning of the time for the closing messages, when the church was to encounter the wrath of Satan as never before, God gave his people such a thorough experience that it was ever after to be looked upon as a waymark by which the wayworn trav-

My Shield

"Thou, O Lord, art a shield for me."

I must go forth and take my part
In cloudy day or darksome night;
Let me not fail Thee, nor lose heart,
However fierce the fight.
Lord, be thou, lest I faint or yield,
My shield.

Let me not be of foes afraid,
Nor lose my courage in the stress;
The weakest need not be dismayed,
Whom thou wilt bless.
I rest me ever on thy Word,
My Lord.

Unless thou send, let me not go,
Nor follow other lights than thine;
I see heaven's path from vales below,
When thy lamps shine,
Or through the dark to thee I sing,
My King.

Stand thou between me and my fear,
O mighty Saviour, tender Friend!
No harm can hurt if thou art near;
Stay by me till the end.
With thee I find a peace in strife,
My life.

I gladly go and take my part
If thou shalt bid me rest or fight;
Strengthened by faith and strong of heart,
I struggle to the light.
Be thou to me on every field
My shield.

Danger in Speculative Knowledge

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The experience of the past will be repeated. In the future, Satan's superstitions will assume new forms. Errors will be presented in a pleasing and flattering manner. False theories, clothed with garments of light, will be presented to God's people. Thus Satan will try to deceive, if possible, the very elect. Most seducing influences will be exerted; minds will be hypnotized.

Corruptions of every type, similar to those existing among the antediluvians, will be brought in to take minds captive. The exaltation of nature as God, the unrestrained license of the human will, the counsel of the ungodly,— these Satan uses as agencies to bring about certain ends. He will employ the power of mind on mind to carry out his designs. The most sorrowful thought of all is that under his deceptive influence men will have a form of godliness, without having a real connection with God. Like Adam and Eve, who ate the fruit from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, many are even now feeding upon the deceptive morsels of error.

Satanic agencies are clothing false theories in an attractive garb, even as Satan in the garden of Eden concealed his identity from our first parents by speaking through the serpent. These agencies are instilling into human minds that which in reality is deadly error. The hypnotic influence of Satan will rest upon those who turn from the plain Word of God to pleasing fables.

It is those who have had the most light that Satan most assiduously seeks to ensnare. He knows that if he can deceive them, they will, under his control, clothe sin with garments of righteousness, and lead many astray.

I say to all, Be on your guard; for as an angel of light Satan is walking in every assembly of Christian workers, and in every church, trying to win the members to his side. I am bidden to give the people of God the warning, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked."

Beware of a Sensational Religion

At this time we need in the cause of God spiritual-minded men,— men who are firm in principle, and who have a clear understanding of the truth.

I have been instructed that it is not new and fanciful doctrines which the people need. They do not need human suppositions. They need the testimony of men who know and practise the truth, men who understand and obey the charge given to Timothy: "Preach the Word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry."

Walk firmly, decidedly, your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. You may be sure that pure and undefiled religion is not a sensational religion. God has not laid upon any one the burden of encouraging an appetite for speculative doctrines and theories. My brethren, keep these things out of your teaching. Do not allow them to enter into your experience. Let not your life-work be marred by them.

A Warning Against False Teaching

A warning against such teaching is found in Paul's letter to the Colossians. The apostle declares that the hearts of the believers are to be "knit together in love, and unto all riches of the full assurance of understanding, to the acknowledgment of the mystery of God, and of the Father, and of Christ; in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge." "And this I say," he continues, "lest any man should beguile you with enticing words. . . . As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in him: rooted and built up in him, and stablished in the faith, as ye have been taught, abounding therein with thanksgiving. Beware lest any man spoil you through philosophy and vain deceit, after the tradition of men, after the rudiments of the world, and not after Christ. For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power."

I am instructed to say to our people, Let us follow Christ. Do not forget that he is to be our pattern in all things. We may safely discard those ideas that are not found in his teaching. I appeal to our ministers to be sure that their feet are placed on the platform of eternal truth. Beware how you follow impulse, calling it the Holy Spirit. Some are in danger in this respect. I call upon them to be sound in the faith, able to give every one who asks a reason of the hope that is in them.

Diverting Minds From Present Duty

The enemy is seeking to divert the minds of our brethren and sisters from the work of preparing a people to stand in these last days. His sophistries are designed to lead minds away from the perils and duties of the hour. They estimate as nothing the light that Christ came from heaven to give John for his people. They teach that the scenes just before us are not of sufficient importance to receive special attention. They make of no effect the truth of heavenly origin, and rob the people of God of their past experience, giving them instead a false science.

"Thus saith the Lord, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein."

Let none seek to tear away the foundations of our faith,— the foundations that were laid at the beginning of our work, by prayerful study of the Word and by revelation. Upon these foundations we have been building for the last fifty years. Men may suppose that they have found a new way, and that they can lay a stronger foundation than that which has been laid. But this is a great deception. Other foundation can no man lay than that which has been laid.

In the past many have undertaken the building of a new faith, the establishment of new principles. But how long did their building stand? — It soon fell; for it was not founded upon the Rock.

Did not the first disciples have to meet the sayings of men? Did they not have to listen to false theories, and then, having done all, to stand firm, saying, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid"?

So we are to hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end. Words of power have been sent by God and by Christ to this people, bringing them out from the world, point by point, into the clear light of present truth. With lips touched with holy fire, God's servants have proclaimed the message. The divine utterance has set its seal to the genuineness of the truth proclaimed.

The Anointing

J. W. WATT

"Then said Jesus to them again, Peace be unto you: as my Father hath sent me, even so send I you." John 20:21. "Even so," in like manner as Christ was sent into this world by the Father, are the disciples sent into the world by the Son. How did God send his Son into the world? — Clothed upon with the Holy Ghost; for it is written, "The Spirit of the Lord God is upon me; because the Lord hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek." Isa. 61:1. The Spirit of the Father was upon the Son of God; the Spirit of heaven upon earth was thus made manifest. Again we read: "How God anointed Jesus of Nazareth with the Holy Ghost and with power." Acts 10:38. The Spirit of God, then, is the Holy Ghost; and it is the power of God.

How much of the Holy Ghost was given to Jesus? "For he whom God hath sent speaketh the words of God: for God giveth not the Spirit by measure unto him." John 3:34. The great ocean of God's power was open to the Son of God, and he could draw from that treasure-house of divine power a sufficient supply for every need. There was no failure to be seen in the work of Christ; for God was with him, and his power is unlimited.

"As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world." John 17:18. "As he is, so are we in this world." 1 John 4:17. How wonderful is this! God does not ask us to go out into this world to meet a great foe alone; he knows that we should fail if left alone. He thus reveals to us the fact that the same power that sustained his Son and enabled him to make a success of his work, is awaiting us if we only believe what God has said.

Is there truly a heavenly anointing for God's people? — O, yes! "Now he which stablisheth us with you in Christ, and hath anointed us, is God." 2 Cor. 1:21. "But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you of all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him." 1 John 2:27.

Who can read the preceding scriptures without being convinced that God is ready to bestow upon his servants his Spirit without measure? The Testimonies of the Spirit of God have been telling us for years that the power of God was awaiting our demand and reception. How slow we are to believe what God has said upon this important point! O how often we have felt our need of divine power when under a strong pressure from the enemy! how many times we have failed when we might have had the victory if we had only realized that "as Jesus was sent into the world, even so are we sent into the world; that as God imparted to his Son the needed power to insure success, so will he impart the same power to-day to those who trust him."

The Lord is not pleased to see such weakness as is seen among his people at the present time. He would have us awaken to the fact that his power is for his people, and that by faith we should grasp it. By the Holy Ghost, which is thus promised to the people of God, we may and should have the victory at every step of the way. God is stronger than the devil, and through the power of God we may also be stronger than the devil, and put him to flight in every conflict. My brother, put away unbelief, take God at his word, and be strong for the right. There is no reason why we should not see great power with the people of God at this time. The Lord is ready to do his part. Let us seek earnestly for faith that will bring the power of God into our lives as an actual, daily experience.

God's Ownership and Man's Stewardship — No. 2

A. T. ROBINSON

Study Gen. 14:17-24. What did Abram bring back from the battle of the kings? Verse 16. Whom did Abram meet on his return? Who is Melchizedek declared to be? What blessing did Melchizedek pronounce upon Abram? Which of these two was the greater? Heb. 7:1, 2, 7. How much had Abram sworn that he would not take of what belonged to the king of Sodom? What had he done with one tenth of all the spoil he had taken? Then to whom did Abram recognize the one tenth belonged? To whom then does the one tenth belong, even of those who do not recognize the Lord's claim?

Study Num. 18:20, 21, 26-32. What inheritance and part was Aaron not to have among the people? What was Aaron's part and inheritance? What did the Lord give to the priesthood for their service? Then who really and directly paid the priests for their service? How was the tithe to be reckoned by the priests who received it? Verse 27. Were the priests to pay tithe from the tithe which they received? Verse 26. To whom were the priests to pay their tithe? Verse 28. Whom did Aaron represent to the people? Were gifts received to be tithed? Verse 29. After having faithfully tithed all that they received, how were the priests to regard the remaining nine tenths? Verses 30-32.

2 Chron. 31:1-10. Read and study this portion of the story of good King Hezekiah's work. What did the people do to the images and idols? Whom did Hezekiah appoint to the respective offices? Verses 2, 3. What did he command the people to give to the priests and Levites? Verse 4. What effect did he say this would have upon the priesthood? As soon as this commandment was given, how did the people respond to it? Verse 5. What did the children of Israel and Judah that dwelt in Judah also do? Verse 6. How long did it take them to accumulate those "heaps"? Verse 7. How did Hezekiah and the princes feel when they saw the heaps? Verse 8. Concerning what did Hezekiah question the priests and Levites? Verse 9. How did Azariah the chief priest answer this query? Verse 10. Had they always had enough to eat? What was now left after they had enough to eat? What was the secret of this bounteous store? With what later promise was that experience in harmony? Mal. 3:10.

1 Cor. 9:7-14. Study this scripture carefully. What questions are asked in verse 7? Where had this same principle been set forth? Verse 8. What figure is quoted as illustrating the support of the priesthood? Verse 9. Was this spoken directly with reference to oxen? Verse 10. What mutual obligation is stated in verse 11? What questions are asked in verse 13? Is the Lord's plan now just the same as it was in the days of the Levitical priesthood? Verse 14. Are you faithful to God in the payment of that which he claims as his, and from which the Lord's ministers are to be supported? If not, do you know that you are withholding the Lord's blessing from your own soul, the light of the blessed gospel from those who are in darkness and error, and bringing discouragement upon those who are called to the work of the ministry? What is now being withheld from God's people? Jer. 5:24, 25. What are among the sins mentioned, that are withholding these good things? Mal. 3:10-12. If all of those who profess to believe the third angel's message were paying an honest tithe, there would be an abundance of means for the support of the workers both at home and in foreign fields.

Forgetting Injuries

G. B. THOMPSON

Paul admonishes us to forget the things which are behind, and press on toward the prize which is before us. Certainly this is wise counsel concerning injuries, either supposed or real, which others may have inflicted upon us. Many have darkened their souls by brooding long over fancied injuries. They have nursed with care some old grievance, and mourned at the same time over their waning spirituality. Precious time which should have been spent in prayer and in labor for lost souls has been employed in imagining that somebody has slighted them, and their worldly, selfish dignity lies in the dust, groveling under the supposed insult. Like a canker, these things have gnawed at the heart-strings of their spiritual life until all the gentle graces of the Holy Spirit have been eradicated from the soul, and they find themselves cold and spiritually dead.

All this unspeakable anguish and sorrow of heart is caused by selfishness. The old man is not dead, but lives and reigns. Suppose some one has done us an injury. It may have been unintentional, and with tears he may have repented before the Lord. And if the insult was intended, the injury is really greater to the one who did it than to the one who received it; for the God who weighs actions will ask some day for an account to be rendered.

Let the thing alone. Forget it, and the wound will heal. Cease talking it over, and reviewing it, for "by beholding we become changed." A writer gives this sensible advice: —

"A man strikes me with a sword, and inflicts a wound. Suppose, instead of binding up the wound, I am showing it to everybody; and, after it has been

The Lamp

Hast thou a lamp, a little lamp,
Put in that hand of thine?
And did He say, who gave it thee,
The world hath need this light should be,
Now, therefore, let it shine?

And dost thou say, with bated breath,
It is a little flame;
I'll let the lamps of broader wick
Seek out the lost and cheer the sick
While I seek wealth and fame

But on the shore where thy small house
Stands dark, stands dark, this night,
Full many a wanderer, thither tossed,
Is driven on that rock and lost
Where thou hast hid thy light.

Though but a candle thou didst have,
Its trimmed and growing ray
Is infinite. With God no light
Is great or small, but only bright,
As is his perfect day.

The world hath sorrow, nothing more
To give or keep for thee;
Duty is in that hidden flame,
And soaring joy; then rise for shame
That thou so dark shouldst be.

Rise, trim thy lamp — the feeble past
Behind thee put and spurn.
With God it is not soon or late,
So that thy light, now flaming great,
Doth ever fiercer burn —

Fierce with its love, and flaming great
In its humility,
Shunning no soul in sinful need,
Fearing no path where he may lead,
Glowing consumingly.

Laborers Together With God

MRS. E. G. WHITE

To My Ministering Brethren: I entreat you to rise to your high calling in Christ. The prayer of Moses, "I beseech thee, show me thy glory," is recorded for our benefit. We need to present ourselves before the Lord every day, praying with earnest soul-hunger, "I beseech thee, show me thy glory."

What was God's answer to Moses? — "I will make all my goodness pass before thee. . . . And the Lord passed by before him, and proclaimed, The Lord, The Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, unto the third and to the fourth generation."

It is the glory of God to be merciful, full of forbearance, kindness, goodness, and truth. But the justice shown in punishing the sinner is as verily the glory of the Lord as is the manifestation of his mercy.

"Thou shalt worship no other god: for the Lord, whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God." The Lord God of Israel is jealous for his honor. How, then, I inquire, does he regard the inhabitants of this world, who live in his house, and from his liberal treasury are provided with food and clothing, but who never so much as say "Thank you" to him? They are unmindful of his goodness. They are like the inhabitants of the antediluvian world, who were destroyed because they worked continually in opposition to their Creator.

Of the antediluvians we read: "God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And it repented the Lord that he had made man on the earth, and it grieved him at his heart. . . . And God said unto Noah, The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth is filled with violence through them; and, behold, I will destroy them with the earth."

Christ said, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all."

God warned the inhabitants of the old world of what he purposed to do in cleansing the earth of its impurity. But they laughed to scorn what they regarded as a superstitious prediction. They mocked at Noah's warning of a coming flood.

When Christ was upon the earth, he gave warning of what was coming upon Jerusalem because the people had rejected truth, despising the messages that God had sent. But his warning was unheeded.

The Lord has sent us by his ambassadors messages of warning, declaring that the end of all things is at hand. Some will listen to these warnings, but by the vast majority they will be disregarded.

When Lot warned the members of his family of the destruction of Sodom, they would not heed his words, but looked upon him as a fanatical enthusiast. The destruction that came found them unprepared.

Thus will it be when Christ comes. Farmers, merchants, lawyers, tradesmen, will be wholly engrossed in business, and upon them the day of the Lord will come as a snare.

"Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock-crowing, or in the morning: lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch."

To Every Man His Work

To every man there is given a work. This point I wish to impress on all. Each child of God has a work to do for him. But while some are engaged in giving the last message of mercy to our world, others are living in careless indifference to God's requirements.

It is our duty to watch and pray and work. Our lives are not to be spent in idle expectation. Vigilant waiting and earnest watching are to be combined with faithful work, in expectation of the solemn events so soon to take place. The end is near. The commission given by Christ to his disciples is to be fulfilled. To all people the gospel is to be preached.

Upon every one who knows the truth for this time rests the responsibility of making it known to others. The servants of Christ are in a large measure responsible for the well-being and the salvation of the world. They are to be co-laborers with God in the work of winning souls to Christ.

"We Preach not Ourselves, but Christ"

The fourth chapter of Second Corinthians contains a lesson that should be carefully studied by all. "We preach not ourselves," Paul says, "but Christ Jesus the Lord; and ourselves your servants for Jesus' sake."

Those who minister in word and deed are to exalt Christ. If their hearts are filled with the love of the Saviour, their lives will reveal that love. Through them it will speak in its tenderness. But self too often interposes between the soul and God. It is made so prominent that perishing souls can not see Jesus.

When the lips of a speaker move under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, the words of God find utterance in warnings, in reproofs, in appeals. This power is not of the speaker. It is a power given him by God, that he may reach those who are dead in trespasses and sins, and arouse them to see the need of receiving power from above. God works through his faithful servants, who do not shun to declare the whole truth in the power of the Spirit. Their work bears his indorsement.

God's messengers are to hold aloft the standard of truth until the hand is palsied in death. When they sleep in death, the places that once knew them know them no more. The churches in which they preached, the places they visited to hold forth the word of life, still remain. The mountains, the hills, the things seen by mortal vision, are still there. All these things must at last pass away. The time is coming when the earth shall reel to and fro, and shall be removed like a cottage. But the thoughts, the purposes, the acts of God's workers, although now unseen, will appear at the great day of final retribution and reward. Things now forgotten will then appear as witnesses, either to approve or to condemn.

Love, courtesy, self-sacrifice,— these are never lost. When God's chosen ones are changed from mortality to immortality, their words and deeds of goodness will be made manifest, and will be preserved through the eternal ages. No act of unselfish service, however small or simple, is ever lost. Through the merits of Christ's imputed righteousness, the fragrance of such words and deeds is forever preserved.

Trusting in Christ

In order to fight successfully the battle against sin, you must keep close to Jesus. Do not talk unbelief; you have no excuse for doing this. Christ has made a complete sacrifice for you, that you might stand before God complete in him. God is not pleased with our lack of faith. Unbelief always separates the soul from Christ.

It is not praiseworthy to talk of our weakness and discouragement. Let each one say, "I am grieved that I yield to temptation, that my prayers are so feeble, my faith so weak. I have no excuse to plead for being dwarfed in my religious life. But I am seeking to obtain completeness of character in Christ. I have sinned, and yet I love Jesus. I have fallen many times, and yet he has reached out his hand to save me. I have told him all about my mistakes. I have confessed with shame and sorrow that I have dishonored him. I have looked to the cross, and have said, All this he suffered for me. The Holy Spirit has shown me my ingratitude, my sin, in putting Christ to open shame. He who knows no sin has forgiven me. He calls me to a higher, nobler life, and I press on to the things that are before."

Christ Our Efficiency

"God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. But we have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us."

Man is here cautioned against boasting. Christ is his efficiency. God uses human beings as his instrumentalities, to do his work. Our capabilities and talents are all to be held in trust. They do not originate with us. They come from God, and are to be consecrated to his service. To the one who does this the Lord will give higher abilities.

The humility that bears fruit, filling the soul with a sense of the love of God, will speak for the one who has cherished it, in the great day when men will be rewarded according as their works have been. Happy will be the one of whom it can then be said, "The Spirit never stirred this man's soul in vain. He went forward and upward from strength to strength. Self was not woven into his life. Each message of correction and counsel he received as a blessing from God. Thus the way was prepared for him to receive still greater blessings, because God did not speak to him in vain. Each step upward on the ladder of progress prepared him to climb still higher. From the top of the ladder the bright beams of God's glory shone upon him. He did not think of resting, but sought constantly to attain to the wisdom and righteousness of Christ. Ever he pressed toward the mark of the prize of his high calling in Christ."

This experience every one who is saved must have. In the day of judgment the course of the man who has retained the frailty and imperfection of humanity will not be vindicated. For him there will be no place in heaven; he could not enjoy the perfection of the saints in light. He who has not sufficient faith in Christ to believe that he can keep him from sinning, has not the faith that will give him an entrance into the kingdom of God.

Called to Service

Now, just now, is our time of probation, wherein we are to prepare for heaven. Christ gave his life that we might have this probation. But so long as time shall last, Satan will strive for the mastery over us. He works with power to lead men to become absorbed in money-getting. He invents many kinds of amusement, so that their minds may be engrossed with worldly pleasure. He would have them forget all about the inward adorning,— the adorning of a meek and quiet spirit, which in the sight of God is of great price. He is determined that every moment shall be filled with efforts to carry out ambitious projects or to amuse and gratify self. He is determined that men shall find no time to study the Word of God, no time to realize that they have been bought with a price, even the blood of the Son of God.

Satan uses his influence to drown the voice of God speaking to the soul; and the world acts as if under his control. Men have chosen him as their leader. They stand under his banner. They will not come to Christ that they might have life. Infatuated with schemes for pleasure and amusement, they are striving for that which will perish with the using.

At this time the message of mercy and warning is to go forth to awaken the world from its sleep of death. A work is to be done to-day that will live through the eternal ages. As watchmen entrusted with a special message, we are to keep before the people the nearness of the end. "Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of him. For we must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad."

The fast-fulfilling signs of the time declare that the great day of the Lord is right upon us. In that day shall it be said of any of us, "This man was called by God, but he would not hear, he would not give heed. Again and again the Spirit moved upon his heart, but he said, 'Go thy way for this time; and when I have a more convenient season, I will call for thee.' This man saw the Saviour's sacrifice in a beautiful light; but some matter of minor importance came in, and his heart was captivated. When the Spirit spoke again, the call was not respected. Every gracious, heavenly influence was dismissed"?

The Coming of the Kingdom

It should not be forgotten that he who utters the petition taught us by our Lord, "Thy kingdom come," is by it logically committed to a Christian life. That kingdom will not come by slow, insensible changes independent of conscious volition. Whatever we have seen of God's kingdom so far emphasizes our Lord's declaration that it is the reward of force. Every triumph of righteousness has cost blood, and has been won by men who counted not their lives dear. Error has never given up the ghost because pricked with a pin. The man who is not prepared to do something to bring in God's kingdom has no moral right to pray for its advent. Every step of its progress is marked with the blood of the bravest. It cost the life of half the "Mayflower" passengers to plant the seed of civil freedom in American soil. It cost tens of thousands of lives to make the whites of this nation free, and hundreds of thousands of lives to raise labor from the degradation of the slave pen to the responsibilities of citizenship. The kingdom of God can not be established or widened in any community by men in their slippers or women wholly devoted to their clubs. It will take prayer and labor and self-denial, and sacrifice of much that is held most dear, to bring that kingdom in for which we pray. A life divided between business and amusements never yet brought in God's kingdom anywhere; and God's people are called, especially now at the beginning of a new year, to decide whether they will cease to offer the petition or do something to make the prayer effective. — The Interior.

Scientific Idolatry

L. A. REED

There is that in man which tends to carry him away from God. Forever there is a downward pull that, without conscious effort on his part, will carry him into the deeps of woe. There is a mighty tide that flows darkly to the shoreless sea of despair. The carnal mind is not subject to God, neither indeed can be. Rom. 8:7.

Ever since the time when man hid from God amid the trees of the garden, he has sought to avoid the searching eye of the Sinless One. And though God comes seeking him, and, with a voice of pity and compassion, asks, "Where art thou?" man still seeks in vain to hide his life from the scrutiny of God.

Ever since evil came into the world, there have been substitutes for God. In every age there has been a strong tendency for man to exalt something into the place that belongs alone to the Creator. Ages ago it was all the fashion for humanity to worship some visible form instead of the invisible God. When the children of Israel had reached the foot of Mount Sinai, so strong was this tendency with them that God wrote on imperishable stone: "Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the water under the earth: thou shalt not bow down thyself to them, nor serve them."

And when God spoke these words while "the mountain burned with fire unto the midst of heaven," he intentionally did not appear in visible shape to their eyes. Moses, reminding them of the occasion, says, "Ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. . . . Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves; for

A Contented Mind

No longer forward nor behind
I look in hope and fear,
But grateful take the good I find,
The best of now and here.

All as God wills, who wisely heeds
To give or to withhold,
And knoweth more of all my needs
Than all my prayers have told.

Enough that blessings undeserved
Have marked my erring track —
That whereso'er my feet have swerved,
His chastening turned me back;

That more and more a providence
Of love is understood,
Making the springs of time and sense
Sweet with eternal good.

The Revelation of God *

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts, to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

Before the fall, not a cloud rested upon the minds of our first parents to obscure their clear perception of the character of God. They were perfectly conformed to the will of God. For a covering, a beautiful light, the light of God, surrounded them. The Lord visited the holy pair, and instructed them through the works of his hands. Nature was their lesson book. In the garden of Eden the existence of God was demonstrated in the objects of nature that surrounded them. Every tree of the garden spoke to them. The invisible things of God were clearly seen, being understood by the things which were made, even his eternal power and Godhead.

But while it is true that God could thus be discerned in nature, this does not favor the assertion that after the fall a perfect knowledge of God was revealed in the natural world to Adam and his posterity. Nature could convey her lessons to man in his innocence; but transgression brought a blight upon nature, and intervened between nature and nature's God. [Had Adam and Eve never disobeyed their Creator, had they remained in the path of perfect rectitude, they could have known and understood God. But when they listened to the voice (1) of the tempter, and sinned against God, the light of the garments of heavenly innocence departed from them; and in parting with the garments of innocence, they drew about them the dark robes of ignorance of God. The clear and perfect light that had hitherto surrounded them had lightened everything they approached; but deprived of that heavenly light, the posterity of Adam could no longer trace the character of God in his created works.]

The things of nature upon which we look to-day give us but a faint conception of Eden's beauty and glory; yet the natural world, with unmistakable voice, proclaims the glory of God. In the things of nature, marred as they are by the blight of sin, much that is beautiful remains. One omnipotent in power, great in goodness, in mercy, and love, has created the earth, and even in its blighted state it inculcates truths in regard to the skilful Master Artist. In this book of nature opened to us,— in the beautiful, scented flowers, with their varied and delicate coloring,— God gives to us an unmistakable expression of his love. After the transgression of Adam, God might have destroyed every opening bud and blooming flower, or he might have taken away their fragrance, so grateful to the senses. In the earth, seared and marred by the curse, in the briers, the thistles, the thorns, the tares, we may read the law of condemnation; but in the delicate color and perfume of the flowers, we may learn that God still loves us, that his mercy is not wholly withdrawn from the earth.

Nature is filled with spiritual lessons for mankind. The flowers die only to spring forth into new life; and in this we are taught the lesson of the resurrection. All who love God will bloom again in the Eden above. But nature can not teach the lesson of the great and marvelous love of God. Therefore, after the fall, nature was not the only teacher of man. In order that the world might not remain in darkness, in eternal spiritual night, the God of nature met us in Jesus Christ. The Son of God came to the world as the revelation of the Father. He was that "true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world." We are to behold "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

In the person of his only begotten Son, the God of heaven has condescended to stoop to our human nature. To the question of Thomas, Jesus said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life: no man cometh unto the Father, but by me. If ye had known me, ye should have known my Father also: and from henceforth ye know him, and have seen him. Philip saith unto him, Lord, show us the Father, and it sufficeth us. Jesus saith unto him, Have I been so long time with you, and yet hast thou not known me, Philip? he that hath seen me hath seen the Father; and how sayest thou then, Show us the Father? Believest thou not that I am in the Father, and the Father in me? the words that I speak unto you I speak not of myself: but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works. Believe me that I am in the Father, and the Father in me: or else believe me for the very works' sake."

The most difficult and humiliating lesson that man has to learn is his own inefficiency in depending upon human wisdom, and the sure failure of his own efforts to read nature correctly. Sin has obscured his vision, and of himself he can not interpret nature without placing it above God. He can not discern in it God, or Jesus Christ, whom he has sent. He is in the same position as were the Athenians, who erected their altars for the worship of nature. Standing in the midst of Mars Hill, Paul presented before the people of Athens the majesty of the living God in contrast with their idolatrous worship.

"Ye men of Athens," he said, "I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by, and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, TO THE UNKNOWN GOD. Whom therefore ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you. God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to all life, and breath, and all things; and hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth, and hath determined the times before appointed, and the bounds of their habitation; that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being; as certain also of your own poets have said, For we are also his offspring. Forasmuch then as we are the offspring of God, we ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, graven by art and man's device."

Those who have a true knowledge of God will not become so infatuated with the laws of matter or the operations of nature as to overlook, or refuse to acknowledge, the continual working of God in nature. Nature is not God, nor was it ever God. The voice of nature testifies of God, but nature is not God. As his created work, it simply bears a testimony to God's power. Deity is the author of nature. The natural world has, in itself, no power but that which God supplies. There is a personal God, the Father; there is a personal Christ, the Son. And "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds; who being the brightness of his glory, and the express image of his person, and upholding all things by the word of his power, when he had by himself purged our sins, sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on high."

The psalmist says: "The heavens declare the glory of God; and the firmament showeth his handiwork. Day unto day uttereth speech, and night unto night showeth knowledge. There is no speech nor language, where their voice is not heard." Some may suppose that these grand things in the natural world are God. They are not God. All these wonders in the heavens are only doing the work appointed them. They are the Lord's agencies. God is the superintendent, as well as the creator, of all things. The divine Being is engaged in upholding the things that he has created. The same hand that holds the mountains and balances them in position, guides the worlds in their mysterious march around the sun.

Commentary, Vol. 1 (1) p. 1084

There is scarcely an operation of nature to which we may not find reference in the Word of God. The Word declares that "he maketh his sun to rise," and "the rain to descend." He "maketh grass to grow upon the mountains. . . . He giveth snow like wool: he scattereth the hoar-frost like ashes. He casteth forth his ice like morsels: . . . he sendeth out his word, and melteth them: he causeth his wind to blow, and the waters flow." "He maketh lightnings for the rain; and bringeth the wind out of his treasuries."

These words of Holy Writ say nothing of the independent laws of nature. God furnishes the matter and the properties with which to carry out his plans. He employs his agencies that vegetation may flourish. He sends the dew and the rain and the sunshine, that verdure may spring forth, and spread its carpet over the earth; that the shrubs and fruit trees may bud and blossom and bring forth. It is not to be supposed that a law is set in motion for the seed to work itself, that the leaf appears because it must do so of itself. God has laws that he has instituted, but they are only the servants through which he effects results. It is through the immediate agency of God that every tiny seed breaks through the earth, and springs into life. Every leaf grows, every flower blooms, by the power of God.

The physical organism of man is under the supervision of God; but it is not like a clock, which is set in operation, and must go of itself. The heart beats, pulse succeeds pulse, breath succeeds breath, but the entire being is under the supervision of God. "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." In God we live and move and have our being. Each heart-beat, each breath, is the inspiration of him who breathed into the nostrils of Adam the breath of life, — the inspiration of the ever-present God, the great I AM.

The ancient philosophers prided themselves on their superior knowledge. Let us read the inspired apostle's understanding of the matter. "Professing themselves to be wise," he says, "they became fools, and changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things. . . . Who changed the truth of God into a lie, and worshiped and served the creature more than the Creator." In its human wisdom the world can not know God. Its wise men gather an imperfect knowledge of God from his created works, and then in their foolishness they exalt nature and the laws of nature above nature's God. Those who have not a knowledge of God through an acceptance of the revelation he has made of himself in Christ, will obtain only an imperfect knowledge of him in nature; and this knowledge, so far from giving elevated conceptions of God, and bringing the whole being into conformity to his will, will make men idolaters. Professing themselves to be wise, they will become fools.

Those who think they can obtain a knowledge of God aside from his Representative, whom the Word declares is "the express image of his person," will need to become fools in their own estimation before they can be wise. It is impossible to gain a perfect knowledge of God from nature alone; for nature itself is imperfect. In its imperfection it can not represent God, it can not reveal the character of God in its moral perfection. But Christ came as a personal Saviour to the world. He represented a personal God. As a personal Saviour, he ascended on high; and he will come again as he ascended to heaven,— a personal Saviour. He is the express image of the Father's person. "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

Fully Following the Lord*

"But my servant Caleb, because he had another spirit with him, and hath followed me fully, him will I bring into the land whereinto he went; and his seed shall possess it." Num. 14:24.

I would like to call your attention to this one thought of "fully following the Lord." The Lord requires of any man who intends to serve him, or pretends to serve him, a whole-hearted service; anything short of that is not acceptable to him. It does not make very much difference to the Lord about a man's position, or ability, or education; God looks straight into a man's heart, and requires implicit obedience, and the man who renders such obedience has acceptance with God.

That which is written of Caleb in this text brings him prominently before God's people in all the ages. He was one of the two men who saw light when other men saw darkness. He saw with the eye of faith the possibilities that lay before God's people, when all about him was confusion, chaos, and rebellion. God has ever recognized the loyal heart; he takes account of the men who are obedient to him, and he remembers it; and in this, Caleb, and Joshua, who was his companion in this matter of obedience and faith, have been examples to the people of God through all time since that day.

No excuse, no argument, no reason, can ever be given for not obeying God. Take the case of Solomon. God took Solomon, a strong, mighty man, and he dealt most wonderfully with him, and gave him very great blessings. You remember that God said to Solomon, "Ask what I shall give thee," and Solomon said: "I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in. . . . Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad." God bestowed upon Solomon the gift of wisdom in a pre-eminent degree, so that he could look out on all nature, and name every plant that grew in the field, and call every tree by name. "He spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes." His wisdom was proverbial, and kings and queens came from all nations "to hear his wisdom, which God had put in his heart."

But God required one thing of Solomon,— that he should fully follow the Lord,— and in that one thing Solomon failed. And when that man, who had received the greatest gifts that God could bestow, departed from the path of obedience, God left him to his folly, and he went down, as far as we know, in his idolatry and sin. How pitifully sad for a man to end his days in disobedience to God!

Take also the case of David, of whom God says that he was a man after his own heart. God loved David, and gave him almost every gift that he could desire; yet when he departed from the path of virtue, and followed his own way, he suffered intensely for his sin. And so our minds call up instance after instance in God's Word where the Lord gave great light and great power, but where that light became darkness when men departed from the Lord's way.

Take the sad story of the disobedient prophet, recorded in the thirteenth chapter of 1 Kings. You remember he came to the altar that Jeroboam had erected, and Jeroboam stretched out his hand, and said to his armed men, "Lay hold on him." And the hand that Jeroboam stretched out against the prophet was paralyzed. And Jeroboam said, "Pray for me, that my hand may be restored me again." The prophet prayed, and the Lord answered his prayer. Then said Jeroboam to the prophet, "Come home with me, and refresh thyself, and I will give thee a reward." But the Lord had told the prophet that he was not to go home by the way that he came, but was to return by another way. So when Jeroboam tried to persuade him to return to his house with him, he turned and looked upon him, and said, No, "if thou wilt give me half thine house, I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place." So the prophet started home another way. But there was an old prophet who dwelt in Bethel; and when he heard which way the young man went, he went out to meet him, and found him sitting under an oak. And he said to the young man, "Come home with me." But the young man said, "I may not return with thee. . . . For it was said to me by the word of the Lord, Thou shalt eat no bread nor drink water there, nor turn again to go by the way that thou camest." And the old prophet said to him, "I am a prophet also as thou art; and an angel spake unto me by the word of the Lord, saying, Bring him back with thee into thine house, that he may eat bread and drink water."

The young prophet listened to his lying words, and went back with him, and the man made a feast for him. He ate and drank; and what followed? — When he departed, a lion met him in the way, and he was destroyed. It seems hard, does it not? but it is a lesson to every man that believes in God, that he is to follow God, and that no man that

Still With Thee

ARCHER WRIGHT

How often in the watches, silent, solemn,
Between grave midnight and the joyous dawn,
From dreams of home and friends I wake, the column
Of life's recorded past to muse upon.

From earth my thoughts leap to the home up yonder,
Above the discord and the daily strife,
While through the open window breezes wander
With whispered echoes of eternal life.

When, thus awake, I draw aside the curtain
And see the bright stars in their purity,
Steals o'er me the assurance, sweet as certain,
"Lord, when I waken, I am still with thee."

Still with thee, Lord, when pressed by strong temptation;
With thee, though overwhelmed in sorrow's sea.
Without thee naught could give me consolation,
For thou, O Christ, art all in all to me.

Still with thee, Saviour, morning, noon, or twilight;
Still with thee when the deepening shadows fall,
Still, still with thee in death's dark hour of midnight;
Still with thee when thy voice the dead shall call.

With thee,—'tis strength and weakness met in union
To last unbroken through eternity:
Yet, sweetest thought of all life's sweet communion,
"Lord, when I waken, I am still with thee."

Co-workers With Christ

MRS. E. G. WHITE

CHRIST intended that a greater work should be done in soul-winning than we have yet seen. He did not intend that such large numbers should take their stand under the banner of Satan, enrolled as rebels against God. He has no pleasure in the death of the wicked. He did not design that human beings should live and die in sin. Why, then, are so few reached and saved?—It is because so many of those who profess to be Christians are working on the same lines as the great apostate. They let Satan plan and devise for them.

Very much more might be done for Christ if all who have the light of present truth would practise the truth. There are whole families who might be missionaries, engaging in personal labor, toiling for the Master with busy hands and active brains, devising new methods for the success of his work. There are earnest, prudent, warm-hearted men and women who could do much for Christ if they would give themselves to God, drawing near to him, and seeking him with the whole heart.

My dear brethren and sisters, take an active part in the work of soul-saving. This work will give life and vigor to the mental and spiritual powers. Light from Christ will shine into the mind. The Saviour will abide in your hearts, and in his light you will see light.

Consecrate yourselves wholly to the work of God. He is your strength, and he will be at your right hand, helping you to carry out his merciful designs. By personal labor reach those around you. Become acquainted with them. Preaching will not do the work that needs to be done. Angels of God attend you to the dwellings of those you visit. This work can not be done by proxy. Money lent or given will not accomplish it. Sermons can not do it. By visiting people, talking, praying, sympathizing with them, you will win hearts. This is the highest missionary work that you can do. To do it, you will need resolute, persevering faith, unwearying patience, and a deep love for souls.

Find access to the people in whose neighborhood you live. As you tell them of the truth, use words of Christlike sympathy. Remember that the Lord Jesus is the Master Worker. He waters the seed sown. He puts into your minds words that will reach hearts. Expect that God will sustain the consecrated, unselfish worker. Obedience, childlike faith, trust in God,—these will bring peace and joy. Cultivate thankfulness of heart. "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, . . . and be ye thankful." Work disinterestedly, lovingly, patiently, for all with whom you are brought into contact. Show no impatience. Utter not one unkind word. Let the love of Christ be in your hearts, the law of kindness on your lips.

It is a mystery that there are not hundreds at work for God where now there is but one. The heavenly universe is astonished at the apathy, the coldness, the listlessness, of those who profess to be sons and daughters of God. In the truth there is a living power. Go forth in faith, and proclaim the truth as if you believed it. Let those for whom you labor see that to you it is indeed a living reality.

The gospel standard is to be planted in every place where now it is not. With our eyes fixed on the cross of Calvary, believing that the Saviour will be with us until the end, as our shield, our strength, our efficiency, we are to work for God.

Why is it that we do not receive more from him who is the source of light and power? We expect too little. Has God lost his love for man? Is not this love still flowing earthward? Has he lost his desire to show himself strong in behalf of his people? Christ will give us victory in the conflict. Who can doubt this when we know that he laid aside his royal robe and kingly crown, and came to this world in the garb of humanity, that he might stand as man's substitute and surety?

We do not value as we should the power and efficacy of prayer. "The Spirit also helpeth our infirmities: for we know not what we should pray for as we ought: but the Spirit itself maketh intercession for us with groanings which can not be uttered." God desires us to come to him in prayer, that he may enlighten our minds. He alone can give clear conceptions of truth. He alone can soften and subdue the heart. He can quicken the understanding to discern truth from error. He can establish the wavering mind, and give it a knowledge and a faith that will endure the test. Pray then; pray without ceasing. The Lord who heard Daniel's prayer, will hear yours if you will approach him as Daniel did.

Let us live in close communion with God. The joy of the Christian arises from a sense of God's love and care for his children, and the assurance that he will not leave them alone in their weakness. The Lord never withholds his wisdom from those who are truly consecrated. Those who fear him and seek him daily, walk in security. It is the men who humble themselves even as a little child who are taught by God. The man who does not exalt himself can fill a place in God's plan that no self-sufficient man, however learned and well-prepared he may think himself, can fill. It makes every difference whether a man walks with God, or whether he is satisfied to walk with himself, trusting in his own abilities.

It is the fragrance of our love for our fellow men that reveals our love for God. It is patience in service that brings rest. It is through humble, diligent, faithful toilers that the welfare of Israel is promoted. God upholds and strengthens the one who is willing to learn in the school of Christ the lessons that he teaches.

The power of the Holy Spirit would come to our workers if they would ask for it aright. There will be no change made in the divine economy in order to bring about marked changes in the religious world. Men and women must rise to the emergency. They must receive the holy oil, the divine communication. This will enable them to arise and shine because their light has come.

Those who believe present truth are to live this truth. They are to bring the word of God into the daily life. This word is the bread of heaven, and those who read and study it, making its truths a part of the life, will be given power from above. O, can we not understand this? "This is the will of him that sent me," Christ said, "that every one which seeth the Son, and believeth on him, may have everlasting life: and I will raise him up at the last day." If this, the life of Christ, be in us, what may we not accomplish in his service?

We are in great need of large-hearted, level-headed men,—men whose daily life shows plainly that they have been with Jesus, and have learned of him,—men who, when called to bear burdens, do not complain, but move cheerfully forward, singing, yes, making melody in their hearts to the Lord.

To those who are presenting from the pulpit the truth for this time, I would say: Remember that you are engaged in a solemn, sacred work. Souls for whom Christ died, and who may have the life that measures with the life of God, are in the valley of decision. Before you present any subject to the people, talk with God in prayer. Hide self in Jesus. Receive the Holy Spirit, and then, in the power of this Spirit, speak to the people. Be sure that you are standing where you can be worked by the Spirit, "that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory, may give unto you the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of him: the eyes of your understanding being enlightened; that ye may know what is the hope of his calling, and what the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints, and what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us ward who believe, according to the working of his mighty power."

To our youth, I would say, As you use for God the talents that he has entrusted to you, you will obtain a knowledge that will make you dissatisfied with yourselves. You will see the great work that is to be done. You will see the need of separating from every hurtful habit or practise, lest you harm some other soul.

There are conscientious young men who are preparing to move into line, to strengthen the outposts. If they will walk with God, he will talk with them and teach them. Let them work where they are, doing what they can to pass along the truth that is so precious to them. Then, when there are vacancies to be filled, they will hear the words, Friend, come up higher. They may be reluctant to advance, but let them move forward, trusting in God, and bringing into his work a fresh, honest experience, and a heart filled with unswerving love.

Open the door of the heart to the knock of Christ. Welcome the heavenly Guest. Then if you are placed in a position of responsibility, you will not lift yourself up unto vanity. There are truths in the Word of God the meaning of which you do not comprehend, but these will open to you in their beauty and loveliness; for Christ is your teacher. If you have improved the past, it is still yours, because you have garnered the bright beams of the Sun of Righteousness. You have a treasure of knowledge to which you are constantly adding, and thus you are being raised to a higher plane of service. Impart that which you receive, and keep imparting, that you may continue to receive.

There is a place in the Hudson where, as you sail, you seem to be entirely hemmed in with hills. The boat drives straight on toward a rocky wall, and it seems as if it must either stop or be dashed to pieces. But just as you come within the shadow of the mountain, an opening is suddenly disclosed, and the boat passes out into one of the grandest bays on the river.

So it is with temptation. You are not to seek it, not to enter into it; God promises no way out in such a case. But if it meets you on your heavenward journey, you are to go straight on though you see no way out. God does not promise "a way of escape" until the temptation actually comes. The way will reveal itself in due time if you only keep on, your way being the way of duty. And remember that as in the river the beautiful bay lies just around the frowning rock, so often your sweetest and best experience of life lies just behind your most threatening temptation.— Christian Herald.

God does require the unexpected of his people, and he has required it in past days. I was thinking this morning of Abraham when he was in Padan Aram, living with his father's family. He had his wife and servants and his property, but he had ceased his idolatrous worship, and turned to the true God. His fathers were all idolaters before him. They worshiped the sun, moon, and stars, and were living like the people about them; but Abraham had given his heart to God. Let me read one thing that I think must have been a little hard to Abraham when he started out to fully serve the Lord: "The Lord said unto Abram, get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee." Back in that country, in the days when Abraham lived, there were no great public highways, no facilities for traveling; and the nations were only armed men, Arabs and Syrians, going hither and thither, ready to fall and prey upon any man not able to defend himself. "Get thee out of thy country, . . . unto a land that I will show thee," was God's command. Abram did not ask where that land was, nor how long it would take to get there; but he left his father's house, and went unto the land which the Lord had commanded him. Abraham stands out prominently before all of us as a man of faith. Why? — Because he was a man of obedience. Do you know that there was never yet a man of faith who was not a man of obedience? And, my friends, if you are weak in faith, doubting any of God's word, or hesitating over any of his precepts, the trouble lies in your disobedience. There is not a man who renders implicit obedience to his conscience who does not have faith in God. Obedience brings faith, brings confidence, brings hope; it brings the blessing of God into the soul. A man may talk about faith; but until the heart is ready to render obedience to God's requirements, he can not have faith. It is impossible. So, my friends, God always commands his people along lines that seem hard, utterly impossible for them to fulfil; but every command of God has to be received in faith.

I remember reading a story of a general who had led his armies through great battles, and had won every conflict. This time he had pitched his camp, and got his army all ready, and the battle was to be fought early in the morning. He was walking about among the tents in disguise, trying to discover whether his men had courage and faith or not. As he was creeping from one tent to another, listening to the conversation of the soldiers, who were lying inside, he came to one tent, and listened. One of them said, "We are defeated, we shall never gain this battle." The other one said, "Well, I think that is so. The general is a great captain, but he has made a fatal mistake this time. We never can gain this battle. Why, here we are, only forty thousand men, and the enemy has three times our number! It is impossible."

The general's heart was stirred. He lifted the curtain of the tent, and walked in, and said to the men, "How many do you count me for?"

"O," they said, "general, you have made an awful mistake in placing your men here. You ought never to fight this great number of men."

He answered, "How many do you count me for?"

"Yes, but it is impossible for us ever to get the victory on the morrow. I know it, because they are three to our one, and they are just as well trained as we."

"I want you to answer me just one question," said the general again. "How many do you count me for?"

There is a lesson for us in that. When it seems as if the battle must go against us, let us remember our General. With his might, his power, it is possible to win. And the requirements that God has made — we look at them, and say, It is impossible, it can not be done. Brethren, if the God of heaven has commanded it, it is possible for it to be done. And instead of our hesitating, and saying, It can not be done, I want to know, How many do you count God for? God is sufficient in every instance, when he commands, to see that that command is absolutely and fully obeyed by every child of his. I care not how we may be outnumbered, or what superior strength may come against us, just as surely as God has made a requirement of us, just so surely has he provided the possibility of that thing being done. It is possible. O, I would that his people — you and I — recognized this truth, and acted on it: God requires you and me to walk in perfect obedience to his will. It is possible. How? — Through the strength that God himself provides. The weakest child, the man who has the least power to resist the passions of his own heart,— when God commands, there is nothing for that poor, weak soul to do but to render perfect obedience. The grace of God is ready to enter into every heart, to give courage to undertake, fortitude to endure, and the victory in every conflict. Let us look at this question of obedience from the further light of the Testimonies concerning God's work. I have heard men say, since I have been here, that some of these things that we have been commanded to do are hard propositions; they are great, mighty undertakings. I have

God's Care

Though a gift of sorrow
 Crown the year,
What shall be to-morrow
 Do not fear:
Nothing need alarm thee,
Sorrow can not harm thee,
 God is near.

What of thy departed?
 Safe are they;
Be not thou faint-hearted,
 Trust and pray;
When the shadows gather,
Hasten to the Father
 Every day.

Lose no time in sighing;
 Trust and love;
Happy living, dying,
 Thou shalt prove
How he changes never,
How he loves forever,
 Friend above.

Therefore make to-morrow
 Glad with song;
Joy comes after sorrow,
 Peace stays long;
In his love abiding,
In his shelter hiding,
 Be thou strong.

The Result of Beholding Christ

MRS. E. G. WHITE

God has promised to draw near to all who will draw near to him. All may delight their souls in the Lord. All may grow in grace, in wisdom, and in love; through faithful continuance in well-doing all may become partakers of the divine nature.

Those who strive for the Spirit of God will be rewarded in accordance with the promise, "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." My brethren and sisters, will you not awake out of sleep? Will you not pray, and watch unto prayer? Through the power that Jesus gives, we can be "more than conquerors." But we can not manufacture this power. Only through the Spirit of God can we receive it. We need a deep insight into the nature of Christ and into the mystery of his love, "which passeth knowledge." We are to live in the warm, genial rays of the Sun of Righteousness. Nothing but Christ's loving compassion, his divine grace, his almighty power, can enable us to baffle the relentless foe, and subdue the opposition of our own hearts. What is our strength?— The joy of the Lord. Let the love of Christ fill our hearts, and then we shall be prepared to receive the power that he has for us.

Let us thank God every day for the blessings that are ours. If the human agent will humble himself before God, realizing how inappropriate it is for him to cherish self-sufficiency, realizing his utter inability to do the work that needs to be done in order that his soul may be purified; if he will cast away his own righteousness, Christ will abide in his heart. He will put his hand to the work of creating him anew, and will continue the work till he is complete in him.

Christ will never neglect the work that has been placed in his hands. He will inspire the resolute disciple with a sense of the perversity, the sin-stained condition, the depravity, of the heart upon which he is working. The true penitent learns the uselessness of self-importance. Looking to Jesus, comparing his own defective character with the Saviour's perfect character, he says only,—

> "In my hand no price I bring;
> Simply to thy cross I cling."

With Isaiah he declares, "Lord, thou wilt ordain peace for us: for thou also hast wrought all our works in us. O Lord our God, other lords beside thee have had dominion over us: but by thee only will we make mention of thy name."

"Dead in Trespasses and Sins"

"You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience: among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others."

Spiritual death is here spoken of. How many there are who are unwarned, and in consequence unconvicted. They are passing on, in harmony with the world and with the desires of their own undisciplined, unsubdued hearts. They live in pleasure and worldliness, and should sickness come, and death overtake them, they would be found unready. They are not interested in the race for eternal life. They do not look upon the conflict against sin, the warfare with principalities and powers, as essential. They are in need of light. Satan holds them in his power, and they see not their danger. They know nothing of the crucifixion that cuts away from the life all that separates the soul from Christ. They are subject to the power of the spirit that works in the children of disobedience.

This spirit is Satan, the fallen angel, the ruler of the power of darkness. He has control of the spirits of evil, and through them he seeks to gain control of human beings. He is the head of the fallen angels. He supplies them with vital force.

How many there are who are left in darkness because the lives of those who have had light, and who profess to believe the truth, are a falsehood, a fatal deception. These professed Christians have kept the truth in the outer court. It has not been brought into the daily life. They may belong to the church, but this will not save them. Those who do the works of a sinner will receive the punishment of a sinner. Profession is but a snare to those who have no experience in the reality of true Christianity, who know not the principles that lead the Christian to inquire at every step, "Is this the way of the Lord?"

Raised to Spiritual Life

"But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ, . . . and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus."

As God raised Christ from the dead, that he might bring life and immortality to light through the gospel, and thus save his people from their sins, so Christ has raised fallen human beings to spiritual life, quickening them with his life, filling their hearts with hope and joy.

"That was the true Light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

Power That Gains the Victory

Beholding Christ for the purpose of becoming like him, the seeker after truth sees the perfection of the principles of God's law, and he becomes dissatisfied with everything but perfection. Hiding his life in the life of Christ, he sees the holiness of the divine law as revealed in the character of Christ, and more and more earnestly he strives to be like him. A warfare may be expected at any time; for the tempter sees that he is losing one of his subjects. A battle must be fought with the attributes that Satan has been strengthening for his own use.

The human agent sees what he has to contend with,— a strange power opposed to the idea of attaining the perfection that Christ holds out. But he knows that with the Redeemer there is saving power that will gain for him the victory in the conflict. The Saviour will strengthen and help him as he comes pleading for grace and efficiency.

Paul's Experience

Paul had a wonderful experience. He says: "If any man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more; circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the law a Pharisee; concerning zeal, persecuting the church; touching the righteousness which is of the law, blameless." That is, he was trying to keep the letter of the law perfectly.

But a change came in his life. On his way to Damascus to persecute the followers of Christ, he was suddenly stopped. Christ revealed himself to him. Henceforth his testimony was: —

"Yea verily, and I count all things to be loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord: for whom I suffered the loss of all things, and do count them but refuse, that I may gain Christ, and be found in him, not having a righteousness of mine own, even that which is of the law, but that which is through faith in Christ, the righteousness which is from God by faith."

The righteousness that heretofore he had thought of so much worth was now worthless in his sight. The longing of his soul was, "That I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death."

In his estimation no treasure could equal the gift of the knowledge of Christ. He trusted in the Saviour's power to save even him, who had persecuted his followers.

If God's people to-day would see how far short they fall of being what they ought to be; if they would strive with the powers of the whole being to reach the standard that God has declared they must reach; if they would put into their efforts an energy and a perseverance proportionate to the greatness of the reward offered, how wonderfully they would be blessed, and how much God would accomplish through them!

The adversary stands ready to lead church-members into strange paths. Let them keep the soul fully guarded, and filled with the light and grace and life that heaven is always ready to supply. "Ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ." We are children of one family,— a family acknowledged to be of heavenly extraction. We are to live lives that declare us to be children of God. We are not to follow the customs and the policy of the world, but the law of heaven. We are Christ's purchased possession, and we are to put away envy and evil-surmising, and love one another as Christ has loved us, helping one another to press onward and upward.

(Concluded)

There was a great commotion in the camp of Israel when this report of the returned spies had been given. Ten men had already given their views of the country; and now Caleb came before Moses, and said, "Let us go up at once, and possess it." "Don't go ahead," the practical rulers in Israel said, "it can not be done." I wonder what they came out of Egypt for, if not to go up and possess the land. They forgot. They were only looking at the practical side. I tell you, my friends, the practical side has ruined many a man in God's work. "But Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said, Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it. But the men that went with him said, We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we." They forgot that God was leading them. "And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had searched unto the children of Israel, . . . and all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron: and the whole congregation said unto them, Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt! or would God we had died in this wilderness! And wherefore hath the Lord brought us into this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey? Were it not better for us to return into Egypt?" Of the land they said, further, "The land, through which we have gone to search it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof." Very strange — a famished land, an impoverished land, a land that the people can not get their living from! "And all the people that we saw in it are men of a great stature. And there we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants: and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight."

Brethren, that is exactly what a man will do when he sits down to count all the difficulties in carrying out what God commands. He concludes it can not be done. I heard a man say the other day that he did not believe it was possible for Seventh-day Adventists to give the third angel's message to all the world in this generation. But, if God has said it shall be done, it is possible. And it doesn't make any difference whether you believe it or not, it is a possibility, and it can be done, if God has to raise up the very stones to preach the message. He can take the unlearned, the illiterate, the farmer from the plow, and the clerk from the desk, and send them out to preach this message to the world, if you and I fail to give it.

You say, "It is impossible. Think of the world to be warned." Yes, but think of that great city of Nineveh — one of the mightiest cities on this earth. Historians estimate the population at from six hundred thousand to six million. It was a great and mighty city. God sent one lone, weak prophet down to that city, and in three short days the king, with all his lords and nobles, were clothed in sackcloth and ashes, and a great fast was proclaimed throughout that city for every man and woman that lived there. How long? — Three days.

Take God's people, imbued with the Spirit, believing this message going to the world, and they can give a warning in a short time, when God is their leader. You need not doubt it.

"And all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night." Did they weep for Canaan? Did they weep for the promised land, which had been theirs back in the days of Abraham? — O, no! they wept because there were giants that stood in their way, and they could not conquer them, because of those great nations that they could not subdue. If they had seen the arm of God, the power of Jehovah, they would have arisen as one man, and said, "We can go over and take Canaan." But they wept that night.

Notice what else they did. "And all the children of Israel murmured." Of course; just as soon as a man gets discouraged by looking on the dark side, he begins to murmur. And the strange thing about all murmurers is that they never murmur against themselves. All the murmurings that ever come out of the heart — out of my heart and yours — are against somebody else. Another thing: you hardly ever hear a man murmuring against somebody who is putting on the brakes, and turning off the steam, and holding back God's work; you always hear the complainers murmur against somebody who is trying to get on, to forge ahead, and to help forward God's work. That is the class I murmur against. If any man sets a pace any quicker than mine, and says, "Forward move! quick step!" I say, naturally, "You are in too big a hurry. Just wait for me." And it was just that way with those murmurers so long ago. They began to murmur against the men that God had used all those years to bring them from their bondage. "The children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron: and the whole congregation said unto them, Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt! or would God we had died in this wilderness!" Is not that a terrible condition when people would rather live in bondage than follow the commandments of the Lord? It is an awful state for a people to get into, brethren. But I tell you there are some Seventh-day Adventists to-day who would rather allow the Lord's cause to be long delayed than to lay their own children on the altar, to go out into foreign fields. A thousand times rather lay your children on the altar of service, that they may go to the most deadly climates, and to the darkest nations of the earth, than to keep them here in this land of plenty, and have them go to destruction. There is many a son and daughter who will go out into these dark fields, if we will only lay them on the altar of service, and gain there experiences that they can never gain in this home country. The fields are languishing for the strong and brave, the men of faith in God. I tell you, dear friends, here in this very audience, you who hear my voice, we need your sons and daughters for God. We need them in India, China, Africa, South America,— everywhere, in unfavorable climates, under hardships and trials and privations, we want your sons and daughters to carry this truth!

But Israel began their murmurings and complainings, and they went straight against those men who had faith and hope in God. You see how far they dared go. "Wherefore," they said, "hath the Lord brought us into this land, to fall by the sword?" "Were it not better for us to return into Egypt?"

"And they said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt." They knew very well that Moses would not take them back. They knew that Aaron would not head their army. Let us do what? —"Make us a captain" (after their own kind, do you see?), "and let us return into Egypt." O, we do like leaders after our own stamp, do we not? — men who take the slow pace if we are slow,— men who are worldly if we are worldly,— men who look for the Lord to come a long way off, if we put off the day of his appearing. We like leaders who are after our

When I Have Time

When I have time, so many things I'll do
To make life happier and more fair
For those whose lives are crowded now with care;
I'll help to lift them from their low despair,
When I have time.

When I have time, the friend I love so well
Shall know no more those weary, toiling days;
I'll lead her feet in pleasant paths always,
And cheer her heart with words of sweetest praise.
When I have time.

When you have time! The friend you hold so dear
May be beyond the reach of your intent;
May never know that you so kindly meant
To fill her life with sweet content,
When you had time. (1)

Now is the time! Ah, friend! no longer wait
To scatter loving smiles and words of cheer
To those around whose lives are now so
dear;
They may not meet you in the coming year —
Now is the time.

Help in Every Time of Need

MRS. E. G. WHITE

To My Sisters Tempted by Discouragement,—

To each one of us has been given the inestimable privilege of being a child of God. Why, then, should we be unhappy? We are all sinful, but we have a Saviour who can take away our sins; for in him is no sin. We all have many difficulties (2) to meet, many perplexing problems to solve. But we have an all-powerful Helper, who will listen to our requests as willingly and gladly as he listened to the requests of those who, when he was on this earth in person, came to him for help. I ask you not to take the ordering of your life out of his hands.

When discouragement presses heavily upon you, read the following scriptures: —

"My tears have been my meat day and night, while they continually say unto me, Where is thy God? . . . Why art thou cast down, O my soul? and why art thou disquieted in me? Hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him for the help of his countenance." (3)

"Deep calleth unto deep at the noise of thy water-spouts: all thy waves and thy billows are gone over me. Yet the Lord will command his loving-kindness in the daytime, and in the night his song shall be with me, and my prayer unto the God of my life. I will say unto God my rock, Why hast thou forgotten me? why go I mourning because of the oppression of the enemy? As with a sword in my bones, mine enemies reproach me; while they say daily unto me, Where is thy God?

"Why art thou cast down, O my soul; and why art thou disquieted within me? Hope thou in God: for I shall yet praise him, who is the health of my countenance, and my God."

"God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will we not fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof."

"For this God is our God forever and ever: he will be our guide even unto death."

Do you make mistakes? Do not let this discourage you. The Lord may permit you to make small mistakes in order to save you from making larger mistakes. Go to Jesus, and ask him to forgive you, and then believe that he does. "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness."

When unkind, discouraging words are spoken to you, do not retaliate. Do not reply unless you can return a pleasant answer. Say to yourself, "I will not disappoint my Saviour. The Christian woman is a gentlewoman. On her lips is ever the law of kindness. She utters no hasty words. To speak gentle words when you are irritated will bring sunshine into your hearts, and make your path more smooth. A schoolgirl, when asked for a definition of meekness, said, "Meek people are those who give soft answers to rough questions." Christ says, "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." They will be fit subjects for the kingdom of heaven; for they are willing to be taught.

Do not treat life as a romance, but as a reality. Perform your smallest duty in the fear and love of God, with faithfulness and cheerfulness. God declares, "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much."

Study the life that Christ lived while on this earth. He did not neglect the smallest, simplest duty. Perfection marked all that he did. Look to him for help, and you will be enabled to perform your daily duties with the grace and dignity of one who is seeking for the crown of immortal life.

We dwell much on the grandeur of Christ's life. We speak of the great things that he accomplished, of the miracles he wrought, of how he spoke peace to the tempestuous waters, restored sight to the blind and hearing to the deaf, and raised the dead to life. But his attention to small things is even higher proof of his greatness. Listen to him speaking to Martha, as she comes to him with the request that he bid her sister help her with the serving. He tells her not to allow the cares of the household to disturb the peace of her soul. "Martha, Martha," he says, "thou art careful and troubled about many things: but one thing is needful: and Mary hath chosen that good part, which shall not be taken away from her." (3)

Listen to the words that he spoke as the weary mothers brought their children to him to be blessed. The disciples, unwilling that their Master should be disturbed, were sending the women away. But Christ said, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God." And taking them in his arms, he blessed them. Could the future of these children be opened before us, we could see the mothers recalling to the minds of the children the scene of that day, and repeating the loving words of the Saviour. We should see, too, how often, in after years, the memory of those words kept the children from straying from the path cast up for the ransomed of the Lord.

Think of the words that Christ spoke to the one woman in Samaria. He was sitting by Jacob's well, and the woman came to draw water. Christ asked a favor of her. "Give me to drink," he said. He wanted a cool draft, and he wished, also, to open the way whereby he might give her the water of life.

"How is it," said the woman, "that thou, being a Jew, askest drink of me, which am a woman of Samaria?" Jesus answered, "If thou knewest the gift of God, and who it is that saith to thee, Give me to drink; thou wouldest have asked of him, and he would have given thee living water. . . . Whosoever drinketh of this water shall thirst again: but whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

How much interest Christ manifested in this one woman! How earnest and eloquent were his words! When the woman heard them, she left her waterpot, and went into the city, saying to (4) those she met, "Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?" We read that many of the Samaritans of that city believed on him. And who can estimate the influence that these words have exerted for the saving of souls in the years that have passed since then!

My dear sisters, this same Jesus is your Saviour. Have faith in him. Do not distrust him. He is a present help in every time of need. Do not take your troubles to human beings. Take them to the Lord. You may think that others ought to sympathize with you in your trials; but you will sometimes be disappointed. Jesus never disappoints the one who comes to him for help. He is saying to you to-day, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest." He will give you rest in him. No one who comes to him goes away unhelped. Take your burdens to the divine burden-bearer, and leave them with him, knowing that he will carry them for you. He is the Christ, the One who bears the sins of the world. He will take you under his watchcare; for he loves you. He will accept you, and set you apart for his service. By the indwelling of his Spirit, he will make you more than conquerors.

Act your part in helping yourselves, as all must do who would be blessed. Do not dwell upon the hardship of the Christian life. Do not talk of your trials. If you do, you will become more and more inclined to complain. God asks you to speak no unkind words of the Saviour. Instead of bemoaning your weakness, and feeling that you are hardly used, talk of the goodness and mercy of the Lord.

(1) Do not utter one despondent word; for such words please Satan. Talk of Christ's goodness and tell of his power. Words of hope and trust and courage are as easily spoken as words of complaint. "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice."

When the enemy tells you that the Lord has forsaken you, tell him that you know he has not; for he declares, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." Dismiss the enemy. Tell him you will not dishonor the Lord by doubting his love.

Christ asks us to believe in him as one who is able to keep us from falling. There is no limit to the help that the Saviour is willing to bestow on us. He asks us to bring into our lives the grace that will keep us from sin. From the cross of Calvary there comes to us liberty, hope, and strength. Do not dishonor your Redeemer by doubting his power. Trust him all the time. Take hold of the riches of his grace, saying, "I will believe, I do believe that Jesus died for me." The way before you may seem dark, but Jesus can make it light.

(2) Be joyful in God. Christ is light, and in him is no darkness at all. Look toward the light. Accustom yourselves to speak the praise of God. Make others happy. This is your first work. It will strengthen the best traits of character. Throw the windows of the soul wide open heavenward, and let the sunshine of Christ's righteousness in. Morning, noon, and night your hearts may be filled with the bright rays of heaven's light.

The Sign of a Finished Work

E. E. ANDROSS

"In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth." "By the word of the Lord were the heavens made; and all the host of them by the breath of his mouth." "For he spake, and it was done; he commanded, and it stood fast." Gen. 1:1; Ps. 33:6, 9.

As the earth came forth from the hand of its Maker, it was exceedingly beautiful. Everything was perfect. Man, having been made in the image and likeness of God, was now crowned with glory and honor, and set over the works of God's hands. Heb. 2:6-8.

"Thus the heavens and the earth were finished, and all the host of them." "And God saw everything that he had made, and, behold, it was very good." Gen. 2:1; 1:31. No taint of sin, no tear of sorrow, no pain or shadow of death, marred the happiness of the holy pair that had been placed in the garden of God. The great Jehovah had clothed the whole world in a garb of beauty. Everything revealed the touch of the Master Artist. The delicate flower, the beautiful landscape, the broad expanse of the heavens, all bore silent witness to the fact that the divine hand had wrought.

"In six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed." Ex. 31:17. "The eternal purpose which he purposed in Jesus Christ our Lord" (Eph. 3:11) was now, so far as God's part was concerned, completed; it only remained for man to prove, by his loyalty to his Creator, that he was worthy of such a high calling. While the "morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy" (Job 38:7), while the Lord took delight in his finished work, the great memorial of the Creator's power to complete his glorious work in righteousness was erected (Ps. 111:4; 135:13): the eternal sign that he is God was given. Eze. 20:19, 20.

"And God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it." The seventh day now became the blessed, sanctified rest day of the Creator. And since what God blesses shall be blessed forever (1 Chron. 17:27), it is still his blessed, sanctified rest day. The Hebrew verb qadash, here rendered sanctified, is defined by Gesenius, "To pronounce holy, to sanctify; to institute any holy thing, to appoint." The Lord, therefore, set apart the seventh day to man's holy use for all time. Mark 2:27.

This beautiful scene was soon changed. The tempter, lurking in the garden of delight, induced man to accept him as his master. In sorrow and shame he is now driven forth from his paradise home. Instead of the pleasant labor hitherto appointed him, he was now to be subject to anxious toil, disappointment, grief, pain, and finally to death. Before leaving his beautiful home, however, he is given the glorious promise of a Saviour. The One who made the world, and all things therein, and who upholds all things by the word of his power (John 1:3, 10; Col. 1:13-17; Heb. 1:1-3), who had given to man the Sabbath, now promised a new creation. The great plan of redemption was opened up to man. The Creator was to be the Redeemer. The Sabbath which had been given as the sign of the eternal power and godhead of the Creator, is now to become the seal of the new and everlasting covenant by which he is to be restored to his lost home in the "new earth," which "shall remain before me, saith the Lord," and in which "affliction shall not rise up the second time." Ex. 31:16, 17; Isa. 65:17; 66:22, 23; Nahum 1:9.

All things save the marriage rite and the Sabbath — the one the safeguard of the family, and the other of the church — are lost to man through the fall. The two sole relics of man's Edenic rest are preserved to him, are brought beyond the cherubim-guarded gates of paradise, and the Sabbath now serves to encourage him to trust to the omnipotent arm of his Creator and Redeemer to restore him to his lost estate.

The rest, the blessing, and the sanctification which man had known while obedient to the will of God had now departed; but with extended arms and bleeding hands, in pitying love and forgiving mercy, the great Creator calls him, saying, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest." "I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save," will "bless you, in turning away every one of you from his iniquities." I will be your "wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." Matt. 11:28; Isa. 63:1; Acts 3:26; 1 Cor. 1:30. At the same time he says to the man who is thus made "a new creature in Christ Jesus," "Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations: that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you." Ex. 31:13. It is the sign "that he which hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." Phil. 1:6.

Thus from the moment that the gates of paradise were closed upon disobedient man, to the blessed moment when they will once more be opened to the obedient (Rev. 22:14; Isa. 26:2), the Sabbath remains as the sign of his finished work, the pledge of our glorious and final rest. Heb. 4:3-11.

Practical Lessons From Nehemiah Eight

Giving and Receiving Bible Instruction

S. N. HASKELL

The subject of this chapter is Bible instruction. The people came together to learn for themselves the law of God. From this meeting began one of the greatest reformations recorded in the Bible; hence it can be studied with profit.

It was the desire of the people that they should be taught from the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel. Neh. 8:1.

The congregation was composed of men, women, and children, all who could hear with understanding. Ezra was the principal teacher. Verse 2.

They met in the morning, and the meeting lasted all the forenoon. They were all attentive. Verse 3.

The priest stood upon an elevation so that all could see him. There were also thirteen others with him in the desk, which gave dignity to the service. No mention is made of other priests holding business meetings elsewhere, although at this time there was much business to attend to. Verse 4.

When the priest opened his book, all showed their respect to the law by rising to their feet. Verse 5.

Prayer was offered at the opening, and "all the people answered, Amen, Amen, with lifting up their hands: and they bowed their heads, and worshiped the Lord." Verse 6.

Those who were with the instructor "caused the people to understand the law." Verse 7.

Their manner of teaching was, first,

Life Divine

EACH hour we think
Of others more than self, that hour will live again,
And every lowly sacrifice we make
For others' good shall make life more than self.
Then ope the windows of thy soul to light
From higher spheres. So hail thy lot with joy.

Upward to God let heart and mind aspire,
For thee shall evermore be worlds to come
And melt the clouds in arching irises
On heights cerulean. Help every one
And hinder none: forgiveness thee forgives
And makes thy life divine.

*Partakers of the Divine Nature

MRS. E. G. WHITE (1)

"GRACE and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

"Partakers of the divine nature." Is this possible? Of ourselves we can do no good thing. How, then, can we be partakers of the divine nature? — By coming to Christ just as we are, needy, helpless, dependent. He died to make it possible for us to be partakers of the divine nature. He took humanity upon himself that he might reach humanity. With the golden chain of his matchless love he has bound us to the throne of God. We are to have power to overcome as he overcame.

To all he gives the invitation: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

We have a part to act in this work. Let none think that men and women are going to be taken to heaven without engaging in the struggle here below. We have a battle to fight, a victory to gain. God says to us, "Work out your own salvation." How? — "With fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." God works, and man works. We are to co-operate with God. Thus only can we be partakers of the divine nature.

Messages to Young People, p. 81, 82

Here is the consistency of true religion. We are to be "laborers together with God," working in harmony with him. "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." This figure represents human character, which is to be wrought upon point by point. Each day God works on his building to perfect the structure, that it may become a holy temple for him. Man is to co-operate with God, striving in his strength to make himself what God designs him to be, building his life with pure, noble deeds.

[Those who are partakers of the divine nature will not give way to temptation. The enemy is working with all his might to overcome those who are striving to live the Christian life. He comes to them with temptations, in the hope that they will yield. Thus he hopes to discourage them. But those who have planted their feet firmly on the Rock of Ages will not yield to his devices. They will remember that God is their Father and Christ their Helper. The Saviour came to our world to bring to every tried, tempted soul strength to overcome even as he overcame. I know the power of temptation: I know the dangers that are in the way; but I know, too, that strength sufficient for every time of need is provided for those who are struggling against temptation.

"God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able: but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that ye may be able to bear it." And we also have a part to act. We are not to place ourselves needlessly in the way of temptation. God says, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, . . . and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters." If by associating with worldlings for pleasure, by conforming to worldly practises, by uniting our interests with unbelievers, we place our feet in the path of temptation and sin, how can we expect God to keep us from falling.

Keep yourselves away from the corrupting influences of the world. Do not go unbidden to places where the forces of the enemy are strongly entrenched. Do not go where you will be tempted and led astray. But if you have a message for unbelievers, and if you live so near to God that you can speak to them a word in season, you can do a work that will help them and will honor God. "I pray not," Christ said, "that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil."]

The Plan of Addition

"And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience."

Notice that patience comes after temperance. In order to be patient, we must be temperate. Those who give loose reign to appetite will be dyspeptics; and we all know how hard it is to live peaceably with a dyspeptic. When the digestive organs are abused and irritated, nervous, hasty, impatient words follow.

God has a work for each one of us to do, and into this work we are to put all the power of brain, bone, and muscle. We are to keep ourselves in the best condition for the accomplishment of this work. We are not our own: we have been bought with a price: and in all that we do or say, we are to glorify God.

"And to patience godliness." In thought, word, and deed, God's people are to be Christlike.

"And to godliness brotherly kindness." Those who are controlled by the Spirit of the Holy One will be kind in the family. They will conduct the affairs of the home without irritation, knowing that irritation on the part of father or mother arouses irritation in the child. Kind, gentle words, which show tenderness and unselfish interest, exert a powerful influence for the right.

We are to live on the plan of addition, and as we do this, God will work for us on the plan of multiplication. Grace and peace will be multiplied unto us.

An Eternal Life Insurance Policy

"If these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

This is your life insurance policy. Act well your part, and you will be given entrance into the kingdom of glory. God has chosen you to have eternal life if you will do his will.

One Day at a Time

We shall pass through this world only once. Let us, then, be careful how we speak and act. Let us be careful where we place our feet, lest the lame be turned out of the way. Let us so live that God can make us partakers of the divine nature, enabling us to obtain victories, and to overcome as Christ overcame.

God asks us to live only one day at a time. You need not look a week or a month ahead. To-day do your best. To-day speak and act in a way that will honor God. The promise is, "As thy days, so shall thy strength be."

Courage in the Lord

[Troublous times are before us. The judgments of God are abroad in the land. Calamities follow one another in rapid succession. Soon God is to rise out of his place to shake terribly the earth, and to punish the inhabitants for their iniquity. Then he will stand up in behalf of his people, and will give them his protecting care. He will throw his everlasting arms around them to shield them from all harm.] (2)

After the passing of the time in 1844, a number of the brethren and sisters were assembled in a meeting. All were very sad; for the disappointment had been sore. Presently a man came in, crying, "Courage in the Lord, brethren, courage in the Lord." This he repeated again and again, till every face was aglow, and every voice was lifted in praise to God. And this morning I say to you, "Courage in the Lord." Ever since 1844 I have been proclaiming present truth, and to-day this truth is dearer to me than ever before.

God loves his believing people. Go through the Psalms, and find all the places where God has promised you his love and his help. Praise him for these promises, and make them your own. Do your best every day, and trust God for the future. We are his little children, and he desires us to trust him as a child trusts its earthly parents.

A Significant Discussion

G. B. THOMPSON

The investigation in the United States Senate as to the right of Reed Smoot, of Utah, to retain his seat in the Senate, has given rise to considerable discussion in the press of Canada, as to the propriety of allowing the large immigration of Mormons into the North West Territories. Large numbers of them are now settling in this Territory, and some of the papers took the grounds that persons with undesirable religious beliefs should not be admitted. One such paper was the Hamilton (Ontario) Spectator. The Herald of the same city took a different position, and took the Spectator to task for its position, and sought to point out the danger and impracticability of excluding persons because of their opinions. I take the following from an editorial: —

"We need not repeat the reasons already advanced to show why the principle supported by the Spectator is foolish, dangerous, and impracticable. A few pointed questions will perhaps help the Spectator to see the force of those reasons.

"Who is to decide as to what beliefs are so 'undesirable' that those who hold them can not be permitted to enter Canada as settlers?

"Should these 'undesirable' beliefs be of the nature of religious or moral beliefs only? If so, why? Are there not also undesirable social and political beliefs, not to mention undesirable beliefs with regard to science, art, and economics?

"By what method would those immigrants who hold undesirable beliefs be distinguished from those whose beliefs are desirable? And in cases of doubt as to the desirability or undesirability of immigrants' beliefs (there would be many such cases), who would be the final arbiter?

"The Spectator says that all Mormons, even those of them who do not practise polygamy, should be excluded from Canada because they believe that polygamy is permissible under the divine law. They should be excluded because that belief makes them undesirable. Undesirable to whom? — Why, to the vast majority of the Canadian people. And why? — Because their belief is repugnant to the belief of the majority of the Canadian people. Therefore any person whose belief is repugnant to that of the majority of the Canadian people should not be admitted into Canada. That is the Spectator's position. But ——

"The vast majority of the Canadian people believe in the existence of God, and atheism is repugnant to them. Would it be right therefore to exclude atheists from Canada? And if not, why not?

"The majority of Canadians believe that it is wrong under any circumstances to lie and commit perjury. There are men who believe it is permissible to commit perjury in a good cause — for instance, to 'lie like a gentleman' in the witness-box in a case involving the honor of a woman. Should such persons be excluded from Canada as 'undesirables'? And if not, why not?

"The majority of the Canadian people believe in observing the first day of the week as the Sabbath day, and in recognizing its sanctity more or less. The Seventh-day Adventists believe in observing the seventh day as the Sabbath and in working on Sunday. Should therefore all Seventh-day Adventists be excluded from Canada? If not, why not?

"Many similar questions will occur to the reader. It should not require much reflection to convince any sensible person that to exclude people from Canada because their mere opinions — apart altogether from practise — are repugnant to the majority of Canadian people, would be a foolish, unjust, and dangerous exercise of power."

It is not without its significance that the press of the country is discussing whether or not those who hold to religious beliefs contrary to that of the majority shall be allowed to remain in the country. Russia sends such persons into exile amid the cold snows of Siberia; and let the principle once be adopted that persons, simply because of their opinions, regardless of practise, are undesirable, and we shall have the Inquisition in all its glory. It was for holding "undesirable" religious beliefs that so many were banished, strangled, and burned during the Dark Ages. That an "image" will exercise this frightful power does not seem to be a very remote probability. It is Mormonism now that the discussion is over, but it will be other beliefs later. These statements were made by the spirit of prophecy several years ago: —

"If God has ever spoken by me, the time will come when you will be brought before councils, and every position of truth which you hold will be severely criticized. The time that so many are now allowing to go to waste should be devoted to the charge that God has given us, of preparing for the approaching crisis." — "Testimony for the Church," No. 33, page 245.

"The members of the church will individually be tested and proved. They will be placed in circumstances where they will be forced to bear witness for the truth. Many will be called to speak before councils and in courts of justice, perhaps separately and alone." — Id., No. 32, page 219.

But more sad, if possible, than all this is the following: —

"I have been shown that many who profess to have a knowledge of present truth know not what they believe. They do not understand the evidences of their faith. They have no just appreciation of the work for the present time. When the time of trial shall come, there are men now preaching to others, who will find, upon examining the positions they hold, that there are many things for which they can give no satisfactory reason. Until thus tested, they know not their great ignorance. And there are many in the church who take it for granted that they understand what they believe, but until controversy arises, they do not know their own weakness. When separated from those of like faith, and compelled to stand singly and alone to explain their belief, they will be surprised to see how confused are their ideas of what they had accepted as truth." — Id., No. 33, page 235.

It is no time now to have our minds filled with worldly matters, or to allow any philosophical mysteries to divert our minds from the plain truths of the message that God has sent to condemn or save the world. At this time we need, as never before, to study the plain, simple truths of this message, that when asked to give a reason of our faith, we can do it, and not be put to shame because of our ignorance of what we believe.

A Most Encouraging Experience

A NEW ENGLAND WORKER

"Wherefore . . . I believe God, that it shall be even as it was told me." Acts 27:25.

There have always been times in the history of God's work, from Adam's day to the present, when faith was peculiarly needed in God's plans, for the circumstances seemed altogether impossible for their fulfilment. But when we remember that God, the Creator and Preserver of all things, is the One who speaks, whatever the means used for the conveying of that message, this ought to be sufficient for every true and devoted follower of the Lord Jesus, and faith in that message ought to be direct and receptive. Such a time is surely the present, especially as related to "Christ's Object Lessons."

As we all know, about three years ago there came a message from the Lord, through the spirit of prophecy, telling us that he had a way whereby our schools should be relieved from the burden of indebtedness. This is the word: "The Lord's institutions are in peril. Because of the terrible burden of debt under which our schools are struggling, the work is hindered on every side. In our great necessity, God has made a way through the difficulty, and has invited us to co-operate with him in accomplishing his purpose. It was his plan that the book, 'Christ's Object Lessons,'

"If Thou Hadst Known"

"If thou hadst known!" so spake the Saviour Lord
To those who spurned his pure, life-giving word
As o'er Jerusalem his tears were poured —
"If thou hadst known!"

"If thou hadst known!" heaven-chosen, favored race,
What meant the lifting on thee of his face,
Thou couldst not have despised such wondrous grace,
"If thou hadst known!"

Lord, make us know, "while it is called to-day,"
The things that to our peace belong, and may
We never hear thee, sorrowing o'er us, say,
"If thou hadst known!"

Salvation seeking only in thy cross,
May those eternal things our hearts engross,
For which we surely must count all things loss,
Did we but know.

Though now at best we know thee but in part,
Yet all we can receive of what thou art,
Do thou reveal to each believing heart,
That we may know.

Co-operation Between the School and the Home

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The work of the teachers in our schools is a part of the work of the Lord for this time. Church-school teachers must not lightly regard the responsibilities of their work. Their influence is an important factor in the formation of the characters of the children and youth under their care. If they will strive diligently to keep the way of the Lord, they will be a blessing and a help to their pupils, aiding them to form characters that will stand in the day of judgment.

The character of the work done in our church-schools should be of the very highest order. Great care should be shown in selecting teachers. Wise men, who can discern character, should make the selection; for the very best talent is needed to educate and mold the minds of the children and youth, and to carry on successfully the many kinds of work that will need to be done by the teachers in our church-schools. No one of an inferior or narrow cast of mind should ever be placed in charge of one of these schools. Do not place over the children young and inexperienced teachers, who have no managing ability; for their efforts will tend to disorganization, and every school should in this respect be a model of heaven.

The teachers chosen should have the true missionary spirit; for the children placed in their charge are to be trained to become missionaries. The teachers are to learn constantly in the school of Christ. Unless they have learned to obey God's requirements, how can they teach their pupils to obey? Unless they have learned to be patient, they are not prepared to meet the many trials and annoyances of the schoolroom.

In their work our church-school teachers will find many perplexities. They will have to contend against the prejudices of parents who have incorrect ideas of the characters which their children should form; for there are many parents who, though professing to believe the Bible, fail of bringing its principles into the home life. But if the teachers are constant learners in the school of Christ, these circumstances will never conquer them.

Unjust Criticism

The teachers should not be left to carry alone the burden of their work. They need the sympathy, the kindness, the co-operation, and the love of every church-member. But there are church-members who have been quick to catch up unkind suppositions, and to speak disparagingly of the teacher before other church-members, and even in the presence of the children. Some have talked freely and bitterly concerning a teacher, though not clearly understanding the difficulty of which they were speaking. This should not be. Let the one who thinks that a teacher has done wrong, follow the directions that Christ has given. He says, "If thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone." Until you have done this, you are not justified in telling others of your brother's mistakes.

Let the church-members in places where schools are established, keep their own souls in the love of God, lest they become channels through which Satan will communicate evil surmisings and false accusations. Let all rally to the support of the teacher. A spirit of disunion, cherished by a few, will communicate itself to others, and will undo the influence for good that might otherwise be exerted by the school. Let church-members close the windows of the heart against the poisonous malaria of complaint and fault-finding, and open them heavenward to the healing rays of Christ's righteousness.

The Parents' Responsibility

We are not to concern ourselves so much about the course that others are following, as about the course that we ourselves are following. If the children attending a church-school do not improve in manners, the parents should not unduly blame the teacher. They should, rather, closely examine themselves, to see if in the home they are such teachers as God can approve. In many cases the children are greatly neglected in the home, and are more disorderly there than they are in the school. If children who for years have been neglected in the home are not led by the teacher to live Christian lives, shall the parents, because of this, set in circulation unkind criticisms regarding the teacher? Let them rather blame themselves for their own neglect.

Parents have a very important part to act in making the school a success. When they faithfully act their part in the home, the work of the teacher will be greatly lightened. His courage and hope will be increased. But by a failure to govern their households, parents make the work of the teacher hard and discouraging. Parents whose hearts are filled with the love of Christ will refrain from finding fault, and will do all in their power to encourage and help the one whom they have chosen as a teacher for their children. They will be willing to believe that he is just as conscientious in his work as they are in theirs. They will encourage him by showing him that they appreciate his efforts. They will not say nor do anything that will foster insubordination in their children.

I am instructed to say to parents, Raise the standard of behavior in your own homes. Teach your children to obey. Rule them by the combined influence of affection and Christlike authority. Let your lives be such that of you may be spoken the words of commendation spoken of Cornelius, of whom it is said that he "feared God with all his house." (1)

A Reformation Needed

A reformation is needed among our children. Let there be co-operation between parents and teachers. Let a righteous influence be exerted in the home and in the school. Parents need to take an advance step. Let them remember that everything which brings discord is the work of the enemy of souls. Let them carefully refrain from criticizing the teacher, and begin to do practical missionary work in their own homes.

Parents, shall your children be lost because of your lack of faithfulness? Neither you nor they will prosper in any other path than the path of obedience. If you have failed in your duty to your family, confess your sins before God. Gather your children about you, and acknowledge your neglect. Tell them that you desire to bring about a reformation in the home, and ask them to help you to make the home what it ought to be. Read to them the directions found in the Word of God. Pray with them; and ask God to spare their lives, and to help them to prepare for a home in his kingdom. Thus you may begin and continue a work of true reform.

Be pleasant in the home. Restrain every word that would arouse unholy temper. "Fathers, provoke not your children to wrath," is a divine injunction. Remember that your children are young in years and experience. In controlling and disciplining them, be firm, but kind. (2) Encourage them to do their duty as members of the family firm. Express your appreciation of the efforts they put forth to conquer their inclinations to wrong. Let the Word of God be your rule, and ever keep in mind the responsibilities for which in the great day of judgment you must give account.

Of the patriarch Abraham, the Omniscient One said, "I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment."

Abraham's household comprised more than a thousand souls. Those who were led by his teachings to worship the true God found a home in his encampment; and here, as in a school, they received such instruction as would prepare them to be representatives of the truth.

Abraham's affection for his children and his household led him to guard their religious faith, to impart to them a knowledge of the divine statutes, as the most precious legacy he could transmit to them, and through them to the world. All were taught that they were under the rule of the God of heaven. There was to be no oppression on the part of parents, and no disobedience on the part of children. God's law had appointed to each his duties, and only in obedience could any secure happiness and prosperity.

His own example, the silent influence of his daily life, was a constant lesson. The unswerving integrity, the benevolence, and unselfish courtesy which had won the admiration of kings, were displayed in the home. There was a fragrance about the life, a nobility and loveliness of character, which revealed to all that he was connected with heaven. He did not neglect the soul of the humblest servant. In his household there was not one law for the master, and one for the servant; a royal way for the rich, and another for the poor. All were treated with justice and compassion, as inheritors with him of the grace of life.

He "will command his household." There would be no sinful neglect to restrain the evil propensities of his children, no weak, unwise, indulgent favoritism, no yielding of his conviction of duty to the claims of mistaken affection. Abraham would not only give right instruction, but he would maintain the authority of just and righteous laws.

How few there are in our day who follow this example. On the part of too many parents there is a blind and selfish sentimentalism, which is manifested in leaving children, with their unformed judgment and undisciplined passions, to the control of their own will. This is the worst cruelty to the youth, and a great wrong to the world. Parental indulgence causes disorder in families and in society. It confirms in the young a desire to follow inclination, instead of submitting to the divine requirements. Thus they grow up with hearts averse to doing God's will, and they transmit their irreligious, insubordinate spirit to their children, and their children's children. Like Abraham, parents should command their households after them. Let obedience to parental authority be taught and enforced as the first step in obedience to the authority of God.

The Lord is our Creator, and we are his children, subject to his rule. God's method of government is an example of how parents are to train their children. There is no oppression in the Lord's service, and there is to be no oppression in the home. Parents and guardians are to treat those under their care even as God treats his earthly children, with kindness and love.

In the home and in the school there is to be strict and faithful discipline. Neither parents nor teacher are to allow disregard of their authority to go unnoticed. They are to make immediate efforts to lead the offender into right paths. Should they neglect to correct the children when they do wrong, God would hold them accountable for the results of their neglect. But let them be sparing of censure. Let kindness be the law of the home and of the school. Let children be taught to keep the law of the Lord, and let a firm, loving influence restrain them from evil.

Parents, humble your own hearts before God. Begin a thorough work with your children. Plead with the Lord to forgive your disregard of his work in neglecting to train your children in the way they should go. Ask for light and guidance, for a tender conscience, and for clear discernment, that you may see your mistakes and failures. God will hear such prayers.

The world is watching, and it will take notice of every defect in the lives of Christ's followers. Let our words and acts be such that our lives shall not dishonor the Master. May God help fathers and mothers to purify their souls, that they may stand before him and before the world as those who are keeping the way of the Lord.

Dwellers Upon the Earth

R. HARE

"In the world, but not of the world," must at all times illustrate the position of God's people on this earth, but especially so in these last days. Subject indeed to the environments of life they must be, but not subject to the soul-absorbing worldliness that makes men dwellers upon the earth. God designs that the solemn warning of Christ's second coming, and the hope of his glorious appearing, will exercise an elevating power that can lift the soul above the atmosphere of worldly gain or loss.

God beholds but two classes in the world to-day,— the dwellers upon the earth, and those who seek a better country. Of Abraham it is said that he sojourned as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles, "For he looked for a city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God." Heb. 11:10. Lot was satisfied with the goodly land, and "pitched his tent toward Sodom." He soon became acquainted with the Sodomites, and took up his dwelling in their unholy city. The result of that contaminating citizenship can only be told in the dark record of a blighted life. The two daughters that did escape with their father brought with them the impurity of Sodom. They each committed a shameful crime, and as a result two nations came into existence that God had to destroy with the sword of vengeance. There were two classes in the days of Abraham, and there are but two classes now.

Paul, in writing of these two classes to the Philippians, says of one, "Whose end is destruction, whose god is their belly, and whose glory is their shame, who the things on the earth are minding." But the other class he places in direct contrast: "For our citizenship is in the heavens, from whence also the Saviour we await." Phil. 3:19, 20.— Young's Translation.

Christian Citizenship

"Our citizenship is in heaven." Blessed thought for the tired and weary toiler. Blessed assurance for the unknown stranger that has no resting-place here, and thrice blessed prospect for all who look for a coming Saviour. The inheritance, "undefiled, and that fadeth not away," is still reserved in heaven. Peter speaks of our sojourning below "in fear." 1 Peter 1:17. And we are admonished as "strangers and pilgrims" to abstain from fleshly lusts. 1 Peter 2:11.

The necessity is thus presented of disconnecting from the absorbing interests that hold so many as captive dwellers upon the earth. Christ said, "Where your treasure is, there will the heart be also." Luke 12:34. How important, then, that we have our treasure above; and if this be the case, its glory will eclipse all earthly possessions. Yes; it will do more; that treasure in heaven will give us a right in the better country.

It is only those who have their minds liberated from the blinding enchantments of earthly things who will be able to comprehend the solemn warnings of the approaching end. In presenting the signs of his coming to the disciples, Christ said to them, "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Luke 21:34, 35. This does not include those who are prepared for the Lord's coming. Of them we read, "But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief." 1 Thess. 5:4. The "surfeiting, drunkenness, and cares of this life" distinguish the class — the great majority — taken up with these things, and it is upon them that the second coming of Christ comes as a snare and a thief.

Earth Dwellers

Those who dwell upon the earth will also "worship the beast." This will include all whose names are not written in the book of life. Rev. 13:8. Having made the world their portion, they will obey the mandates of earthly governments sooner than incur loss or disadvantage. Those who seek for a better country will worship "him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." Rev. 14:7.

Give Your Best (1)

THERE are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Give love, and love to your life will flow,
A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith, and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

Give truth, and your gift will be paid in kind,
And honor will honor meet;
And a smile that is sweet will surely find
A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is the mirror of king and slave;
'Tis just what we are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

Our Duty to the Unsaved (2)

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE judgments of God are in the land. Calamities are following one another in quick succession. Shall we allow these things to be, without telling people what they mean, and how to escape the destruction soon to come upon all the world? Shall we allow men and women to go down into the darkness without having been told how to gain a preparation for the future life?

I am grieved in spirit as I see how weak are the efforts put forth to reach the unsanctified and the unsaved. We need more workers to gather in the sheaves. Believers in the truth should watch for souls as they that must give an account. They should seek for opportunities to speak words of warning and encouragement to unbelievers, inviting them to come to the Saviour. Many will refuse, but some will come. If you say nothing to those around you about the love of God, if you allow them to continue unwarned, the time will come when you will bitterly regret your wasted opportunities.

We are to let our light shine amid the moral darkness. Many, as they see the reflection of the Light of the world, will realize that they have a hope of salvation. Your light may be small, but remember that it is what God has given you, and that he holds you responsible to let it shine forth. Some one may light his taper from yours, and his light may be the means of leading others out from darkness.

All around you are doors open for service. All around you are men and women who will gladly receive the message of salvation. Take your Bible, and show them the beauty of the truth for this time. Become acquainted with your neighbors, and seek to draw them to Christ. As you do this, he will co-operate with you.

The Need for More Workers

I hear of workers whose health is breaking down under the strain of the burdens they are bearing. This ought not to be. God desires us to remember that we are mortal. We are not to embrace too much in our work. We are not to keep ourselves under such a strain that our physical and mental powers shall be exhausted.

More workers are needed, that some of the burdens may be removed from those now so heavily loaded down. The Lord desires those who have gained an experience in his service to be educators. They are to be learners in the school of Christ, that they may teach others, and that they may plan wisely for the carrying forward of God's work.

God calls for ministers, Bible workers, and canvassers. Let our young men and young women go forth as canvassers, evangelists, and Bible workers, in company with laborers of experience, who can show them how to labor successfully. Let canvassers carry our publications from house to house. When opportunity offers, let them speak of the truth for this time to those whom they meet, and let them sing and pray with them. When in our work for God right methods are energetically followed, a harvest of souls will be gathered.

There is room in the work of God for all who are filled with the spirit of self-sacrifice. God is calling for men and women who are willing to deny self for the sake of others, willing to consecrate all they have and are to his work. Men are needed who, when they encounter difficulties, will move steadily on, saying, We will not fail or become discouraged. Men are needed who will strengthen and build up the work that others are trying to do.

Different Instrumentalities

It is God's plan that in his work there shall be unity in diversity. In a garden there are no two flowers just alike. Each leaf on a tree differs from every other leaf. So in the work of God, men of different minds and capabilities are needed.

When the tabernacle was to be erected, the Lord instructed Moses: "See, I have called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, . . . and I have filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship, to devise cunning works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in cutting of stones, to set them, and in carving of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship."

But Bezaleel was not to work alone. God chose another man to stand at his side to help him. "Behold," he said, "I have given with him Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan: and in the hearts of all that are wise hearted I have put wisdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee."

One man is not to carry the burden of the whole work in the cause of God to-day. God has given each one a special place and a special work. Each one is to fill his appointed place, and is to help others in their God-given work. And each one is to be willing to receive help from those who can assist him.

Our minds need to be broadened, that we may see beyond our opinions and ideas and ways to the purposes and plans of God. We must give our fellow workers elbow room. If their ideas are not precisely like ours, we must remember that God has given them ideas, and we must seek to work in harmony with them, under the guidance of Christ.

Brethren, if you are so situated that the work presses too heavily upon you, and you are unable to do all that you think should be done, do the best you can without endangering your health, and then carry your burdens to the Lord. And when he sends some one to help you, do not be afraid to trust the one who is to associate with you, fearing that he will not work in accordance with your ideas. Do not say, "This man does not agree with me; if I unite with him in labor, he will spoil the work that I have been trying to do. He will introduce plans that will divert my mind from the plans that I have laid." Perhaps God desires your mind to be diverted from the plans that you have been following. Perhaps he desires you to have a change of place.

Give room for all to work. Do not watch to see if another's footsteps measure exactly with yours. Keep your eyes fixed on your Leader. Then you will not be continually criticizing what others do. Remember that God has other workmen, who, even though they do not follow exactly in your footsteps, are serving him in his appointed way.

Satan is seeking to hinder the work of God by filling the hearts of the workers with a desire for recognition and supremacy. Contention and strife as to who shall be the greatest have robbed the Lord's working force of grace and power. God calls for a decided change; it is his purpose that we shall be one in Christ. It is no time now for us to draw apart. Among God's people love and unity are to prevail. Each worker, while preserving his individuality, is to labor in harmony with every other worker. Each is to be united with his fellow workers in the bonds of Christian love, and all are to be united with the Lord. The aim of every one is to be the advancement of the cause of truth. Each is to seek earnestly for the impartation of the Holy Spirit. Each is to look to Jesus, believing that he will receive the blessings he must have in order to be a strength to the work.

The Need of the Church

God's people would put on joy and gladness as a garment if they would only receive what he is waiting to give them, — that which would make them strong to help those in need of help. Our people need the breath of life breathed into them, that they may arouse to spiritual action. Many have lost their vital energy; they are sluggish, dead, as it were. Let those who have been receiving the grace of Christ help these souls to arouse to action. Let us keep in the current of life that comes from Christ, that we may kindle life in some other soul. Healthy, happy, united action is what is needed in the church to-day.

God calls for self-denying, self-sacrificing workers. Those who devote their time to hunting for souls, watching for souls as they that must give an account, will obtain a rich experience. As they communicate the precious truths of God's Word to others, their own hearts will be opened for the entrance of the word. They will be instructed by the Great Teacher.

Christ has opened a fountain for the sinful, suffering world, and the voice of divine mercy is heard, Come, all ye thirsting souls, come and drink. You may take of the water of life freely. Let him that heareth say, Come; and whosoever will, let him come. Every believer in the truth is to sound this message. Then the work will be carried to the waste places of the earth. The scripture will be fulfilled, In that day the Lord shall open fountains in the valleys, and rivers in the desert, and "with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation."

L. H. CHRISTIAN

There are two truths with which every student of church history may be conversant,— truths that are of intense interest to those who at the present time honor and defend the Bible Sabbath.

The first is that in every age of the Christian era a large number of loyal, heroic believers have observed the seventh day as the Sabbath. In spite of the bitterest opposition, yes, in spite of the bloodiest persecution, they adhered to this vital principle of the divine law, gladly suffering not only all the many inconveniences that always of necessity belong to a despised minority, but even imprisonment, torture, and death. When the redeemed are permitted to study church history in the library of heaven, they will find a record of many a noble Christian who has offered his life for the true Sabbath.

The second truth alluded to above is that in the great revivals of the past when God's Holy Spirit, bringing new power and truth, has rested on his servants, some of the most learned and God-fearing among the converted ones have been led to accept God's holy Sabbath. It is a source of encouragement and inspiration to remember this.

The evidences of these truths have often been presented in the Review and in our books — not too often, however, as the Sabbath message can not possibly be too strongly urged and emphasized. We have read of the Sabbath-keepers in England, Germany, Bohemia, Russia, Switzerland, and Abyssinia, but nothing has been told about the ancient Sabbatarians in Scandinavia.

While studying in the university library at Christiania last fall, I noticed in a historical magazine an article entitled "Saturday-keeping in Scandinavia." The essay, though written by a good author, was quite unfair, yet it clearly showed that there had been a large number of faithful Sabbath-keepers in these countries both before and after the Reformation. And it contained several valuable references to other impartial, reliable works on the same subject. From these I will endeavor to give a brief account of this ancient Sabbath movement in Scandinavia.

The Lutheran catechism as used to-day in Scandinavia is very much like the Catholic. In it the Sabbath commandment reads: "Remember to keep holy the rest day." But the Scandinavian catechisms have not always given the commandment in that form. In one of the very first catechisms or Bible-lesson books published in Scandinavia the Sabbath commandment reads: "Remember the seventh day to keep it holy;" and in the next edition, or the second part of the same work, it is rendered: "Do not forget to keep the seventh day holy." [See Bishop Bang's "History of the Lutheran Catechism," Vol. I, page 87.] These books were printed or written about the year 1400.

No book — not even the Bible — has such a vast, decided, molding influence on the Scandinavians as their catechisms. That is true to-day, and it was far more true in the past; consequently when the catechism mentioned the seventh day as holy, we may know that many would endeavor to keep the day so plainly designated. That such, too, was actually the case is proved beyond all doubt by the strenuous laws and edicts which the church in Scandinavia enacted against "Saturday-keeping." At a provincial church council held at Bergen, Norway, in 1435, the following decree was issued: —

"The archbishop has learned that some in different districts of the kingdom, partly through their own weakness of the flesh, partly by the deception and urging of the devil, have presumed (dared) to adopt and observe holy days, which neither God nor the holy church has commanded and permitted, but such as are directly contrary to both God and the church, especially Saturday-keeping, which the Jews and heathen, but not the Christians, did anciently observe. The church law does emphatically prohibit the adoption or observance of any holy day aside from those commanded by the pope, the archbishop, or the bishops. For this reason the archbishop and the clergy assembled in this provincial council at Bergen do decide that the keeping of Saturday must never be permitted to exist except as granted in the church law. Let all, then, under the threat of church penalty abstain from this evil."— Keyser's "Norske Kirkes Historie," Vol. II, page 488.

This council at Bergen was one of great importance to the Catholic Church in Norway. Its object was to strengthen the then somewhat waning power of the papal hierarchy in Scandinavia. At another council held by the same archbishop at Christiania the next year (1436) the following decree was given among other strong edicts: —

It is under heavy penalties "forbidden to keep Saturday holy by abstaining from work according to the custom of the Jews."

The fact that such severe laws were enacted against the Sabbath is in itself the very best proof of the existence of true Sabbath-keepers. Even modern legislation, with its overgrowth of verbosity and bewildering exemplifications and details, does not make laws against things that do not exist at all; much less did the church and state anciently issue decrees without a cause.

But it was not the laity alone that began to keep the Sabbath; even some of the priests were disposed to do the same. Norway's state historian, Prof. L. Daae, writing in a prominent Lutheran theological magazine about the ancient Saturday-keepers in Scandinavia, states that in the Danish royal archives he has found an old, forgotten manuscript that gives some interesting facts in regard to this matter. Among other things it is declared: —

"The priests have also deceived or persuaded the laity to promise that they will keep Saturday as Sunday."

What a blessing it would be if many of the priests of to-day would lead the laity into the same "deception"!

Not only before the Reformation, while the Catholic Church was supreme in Scandinavia, did many of both the laity and the clergy keep the seventh day as their Sabbath, but this belief spread greatly after the Reformation, and continued for more than a century. The Lutheran religion was by coercion and intrigues made the state religion of Denmark and Norway in 1539, during the reign of King Kristian III. In 1544 some severe laws were enacted against Saturday-keeping, which at that time was very common in Norway, if not in Denmark. These laws are known as the "recesses of feudal Lord Huitfeldt," and read in part as follows: —

"I, Christian Huitfeldt (Whitefield), Lord of Bergen, Stavanger, and Vardo, greet with kind and good intention all the people who dwell in the diocese of Bergen. Master Geble Peterson, Superintendent (Bishop), has informed me that some of you, especially in Aardal — directly contrary to the warning I gave you last year — keep Saturday. In this you have done very wickedly, and would be brought into serious trouble if I should punish you. . . . Now the rulers of these two dioceses, Bergen and Stavanger, have decided that all who are found keeping Saturday shall be punished. I command you to give heed to this. . . . You are rebellious and disobedient in regard to your holy days, since you refuse to be satisfied with the holy days that are given you by the priest and the church ordinance. I bid you, therefore, on behalf of his majesty the king, that you faithfully follow his gracious commands. He that trans-

The Blessing of Service

MRS. E. G. WHITE

GOD'S people are to place in his treasury all the means that they can spare. For this means, needy, unworked fields are calling. From many lands is sounding the cry, "Come over and help us." Our church-members should feel a deep interest in home and foreign missions. Great blessing will come to them as they make self-sacrificing efforts to plant the standard of truth in new territory. The money invested in this work will bring rich returns. New converts, rejoicing in the light received from the Word, will in their turn give of their means to carry the light to others.

The Lord is calling upon his people to take up different lines of missionary service. Those in the highways and byways of life are to hear the gospel message. Church-members are to do evangelistic work in the homes of their neighbors who have not yet received full evidence of the truth for this time.

Let those who take up this work make the life of Christ their constant study. Let them be intensely in earnest, using every capability in the Lord's service. Precious results will follow sincere, unselfish efforts. From the Great Teacher the workers will receive the highest of all education. But those who do not impart the light they have received will one day realize that they have sustained a fearful loss. (1)

Many of God's people are to go forth with our publications into places where the third angel's message has never been proclaimed. The work of the canvasser-evangelist whose heart is imbued with the Holy Spirit is fraught with wonderful possibilities for good. The presentation of the truth, in love and simplicity, from house to house, is in harmony with the instruction that Christ gave his disciples when he sent them out on their first missionary tour. By songs of praise, humble, heartfelt prayers, and a simple presentation of truth in the family circle, (1) many will be reached. The divine Worker will be present to send conviction to hearts. "I am with you alway," is his promise. With the assurance of the abiding presence of such a helper, we may labor with faith and hope and courage.

The monotony of our service for God needs to be broken up. Every church-member should be engaged in some special service for the Master. Let those who are well established in the truth go into neighboring places, and hold meetings. Let God's Word be read, and let the ideas expressed be such that they will be readily comprehended by all.

There are others who can visit the people in their homes, and speak to them of the love of Christ. By such labor souls will be convicted and converted. Those who do this work should be able to speak and read with clearness and feeling.

There are those who, because of pressing home duties, may not be able to do house-to-house work. But let them not think that they can do nothing to help. They can encourage and pray for those who have opportunity to do this work, and they can give of their means for its advancement.

Medical Missionary Work

When Christ sent his disciples out on their first missionary journey, he said to them, "As ye go, preach, saying, The kingdom of heaven is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead, cast out devils: freely ye have received, freely give." And when at the close of his earthly ministry he gave them their commission, he said, "These signs shall follow them that believe; In my name shall they cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover."

Of the disciples after Christ's ascension, we read, "They went forth, and preached everywhere, the Lord working with them, and confirming the word with signs following."

To Christ's disciples to-day there come countless opportunities to minister to sin-sick souls and to those in need of physical healing. Physical healing is bound up with the gospel commission. Medical missionary work is the pioneer work of the gospel.

God's people are to be genuine medical missionaries. They are to learn to minister to the needs of soul and body. They should know how to give the simple (2) treatments that do so much to relieve pain and remove disease. They should be familiar with the principles of health reform, that they may show others how, by right habits of eating, drinking, and dressing, disease may be prevented and health regained. A demonstration of the value of the principles of health reform will do much toward removing prejudice against our evangelical work. The Great Physician, the originator of medical missionary work, will bless every one who will go forward humbly and trustfully, seeking to impart the truth for this time. (2)

Establishing Sanitariums

Sanitariums are to be established in many places, to stand as memorials for God. I know that the truth will reach the hearts of many who, but for the agency of these institutions, would never be enlightened by the brightness of the gospel message. Self-sacrificing workers, who have full faith in God, should be chosen to take charge of these institutions. They are to take up this work, not with the hope of gaining financial advantage, but because their hearts are weighted with the burden of the message for this time. They are to be willing to sacrifice personal gain and personal convenience for the sake of saving souls.

A Work Demanding Sacrifice

The work of God is to be carried forward in self-denial and self-sacrifice. "Whosoever will come after me," Christ said, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." Christ became poor that we might be partakers of the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." We are to practise the same self-sacrifice that led him to give himself up to the death of the cross to make it possible for human beings to have eternal life. In all that we do or say, in all our expenditure of means, we are to strive with full purpose of heart to fulfil the purpose of him who is the Alpha and Omega of medical missionary work. Beside all waters we are to sow the seeds of truth, winning souls to Christ by tender compassion and unselfish interest.

We are to seek to understand the necessities of those with whom we are brought into contact, and to obtain their confidence. People are eager to hear the truth from those whose lips are governed by the law of kindness. The divine word, spoken by such messengers, will be as music in their ears. Thus many of those whose minds are now filled with prejudice against present truth may be won to Christ.

Our work is a great and solemn one, and it needs men who understand what it means to give themselves to unselfish effort for the saving of the lost. But there is no need for the service of men who are lukewarm. Men and women are needed whose hearts are touched with human woe and suffering, men and women who have heard a message from heaven, and whose lives give evidence that they are receiving and imparting light and life and grace.

Our Efficiency

Our faith is to be broader, deeper, more trustful, than it has been. We are to bring all our necessities to Christ, knowing that he will supply our need. The deeper our appreciation of his love, the keener will be our sense of need, and the stronger our faith. And we shall receive according to our faith.

Our belief in Christ is not to be a casual belief, but a belief that enters into every part of the life. Such a belief leads us to ask for his help because we realize that he is our only dependence. A casual belief admits that he is the

Welfare Ministry p (1) 127; My Life Today, p (2) 226

Redeemer, but does not honor him by receiving him as a friend, a helper. Those who have such a belief work at a great disadvantage; for they do not take Christ into their confidence.

Shall we not avail ourselves of our high privilege in Christ,— sanctification through the truth? O, how greatly our souls need to be revived, quickened, spiritualized, filled with a love for the Saviour that leads us to choose his society, saying with real satisfaction, "In the Lord will I rejoice. His Word is my comfort and my guide." A constant reliance on Christ for success gives an abiding satisfaction. It is a source of peace that the world can neither give nor take away.

Laborers Together With God

By pen and voice, by the circulation of literature, by the preaching of the word, by medical missionary work, by every other agency that can be employed in consecrated service, the work of warning the world is to be carried forward. Every church-member is to do something. God's people are to be laborers together with him. As they take up his work, there will be a manifest increase of faith and piety. There will be greater readiness to offer prayer and praise in the testimony meetings held.

Our ministers may visit our churches, and may offer public prayer to God for the comfort of the sorrowing, asking him to dispel doubt from their minds, and shed light into their darkened hearts. But this will not be so effective in helping these sorrowful, doubting, sin-burdened ones, as to lead them to work for those more needy than themselves. The darkness will be dispelled if they can be led to help others.

Which Is the Greater Sacrifice?

GEO. F. ENOCH

NOT long ago, we had occasion to write a letter to the homeland, acknowledging a gift sent by some of our loyal young people for the regions beyond. In writing that letter, one thought was uppermost, and that was the necessity of having sturdy, faithful believers in the homeland, "holding the ropes," refusing to be turned aside by any of the side-tracks which are now running so close to the trunk line of the advent faith.

The laborer in the message, toiling in a strange land, beneath a tropical sun, by the side of pestilential swamps and rivers, has frequently pressed upon him the question, "If I fall in the heat of the battle, are re-enforcements behind, ready to step forward and grasp the standard as it falls from my lifeless hands, and keep the banner from trailing in the dust?"

He has noted those who have fallen in like circumstances, and the tardy way in which the gaps have been filled. He has noted the thousands of young people passing through the doors of our sanitariums and colleges, only to be apparently swallowed up in the great rushing world, and has wondered if they have forgotten the motto, "The Advent Message to the World in This Generation." Does the fault lie with our institutions, our young people, or the homes of our people?

Such thoughts seemed to have stirred this Young People's Society, and one member with a tender heart said that as he saw what sacrifice others were making for this work, it seemed to him that he had never sacrificed very much for it. That came to us as an odd statement of the case, and we thought on this wise: —

What Has the Toiler in the Mission Station Sacrificed?

As we thought it all carefully over, we were surprised to see how small was the list of real sacrifices. The only thing we could find was the loss of not being permitted to gather with father or mother, brother or sister, at the home circle. But that had but little weight, as, after all, whether at home or abroad, we can not stay beneath the home roof, but each one must pass out into the busy world to make his own way. Then the separation is only temporary, as there will be a glad reunion in the near future, for which the world can not look.

What, then, does the missionary sacrifice? Is it gold or silver? Is it fame or honor? Is it the privilege(?) of joining the mad rush in the battle for bread, in which the majority are wrecked, with blasted hopes and blighted lives, and the few who succeed find the prize swept from their unwilling grasp by the pitiless monster, death? All this is nothing.

But What Do They Gain?

They gain, first of all, the blessed privilege of walking in the footsteps of their beloved Master, and enjoy the fellowship of his presence, which comes through wearing his yoke. The Lord makes friends for them wherever they turn, in the person of those whose hearts he opens; they are sharers in the joy that thrills heaven when the lost sheep returns to the fold; and when this short life is ended, they receive the crown of life, and enter the eternal home, where throughout eternity they will find joy inexpressible, in the midst of such splendor and beauty as the richest magnate of earth has never conceived. Do not name such a life a life of sacrifice.

What Do Those Who Stay With the World Sacrifice?

They sacrifice the eternal world for a few short years in such a world as this; they sacrifice immortality for mortality; life for death; the joys of eternity for the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season; the wealth of earth made new, and the beautiful city of gold, for the gold and silver of this world, which are of no value when life is finally ebbing away; the undying friendship, love, and home of the purified throng, for the selfish friendship of this present evil world; the privilege of being honored by the King of the universe for the empty honors of earth!

And What Have They Gained?

Nothing. Like the wise man, they can only say, "Vanity of vanities, . . . all is vanity." To such a one the words of Jesus are, "Thou fool, this night thy soul shall be required of thee." His sun then sinks behind the clouds of despair, only to set in unending night.

The missionaries at the front do not wish to hear anything about their sacrifices. Let us hear no idle talk, asking if our missions really pay. When the missionaries in other lands faint beneath the burden of the day, let none wisely shake their heads in condemnation. Let us allow these worn and weary toilers to enjoy the rest they have earned with heaven's blessing upon them, and let us fill the gaps, pressing the battle to the very gates, with our faces set as flint Zionward. Then when the work is done, we shall all rejoice in the harvest home.

L. H. CHRISTIAN

IN Finland and Sweden the movement in favor of the Bible Sabbath assumed very large proportions, especially after the Reformation. Many historical writers have wrestled with this religious phenomenon, which seemed so strange to them. The Sabbath-keepers in Sweden appear to have published several small books in their defense; but here in Denmark I am unable to secure a copy of any of these writings. Consequently all I can write about the Sabbath-keepers of Scandinavia must be gathered from books whose authors were more or less prejudiced against them. One well-known historian who regards the Sabbath movement as a return to Judaism, writes as follows: —

"We can find traces of these Judaizing doctrines throughout all Sweden, as it then existed from Finland, northern Sweden, Dolurne, Westmanland, and Neriko down to Westgothland and Smaaland. Even King Gustaf I (1544) wrote a special letter warning the people of Finland against the then widespread error that 'people, because of the famine, ought to become Jews, and rest on Saturday.' The king states in this writing that many among the common people refused to work on the Sabbath, but lived like Jews under the Old Testament law of Moses. They even claimed to have received this Sabbath doctrine through visions and revelations. The letter is in itself quite a theological argument by the old king against this erroneous teaching."

"The next trace of Judaism [Sabbath-keeping] is seen in Westeraas in 1597. The church records of the cathedral at this place contain an account of several trials in which two Jewish teachers — a rich citizen and a peasant — were examined."

"On the sixth of April and the fourteenth of May the church dignitaries placed the wealthy citizen, Hans Jonsson, on trial because of his religious convictions. He promised to reform. On the basis of these promises a sealed agreement, a compromise, which he accepted, was made; on the seventh of November this was read and ratified in the presence of the bishop, priests, city mayor, and council. The case of Hofdesta Peter,

My Saviour

UNDER an Eastern sky,
Amid a rabble cry,
A Man went forth to die
For me.

Thorn-crowned his blessed head,
Blood-stained his weary tread,
Cross-laden, on he sped
For me.

Pierced were his hands and feet.
Three hours on him beat
Fierce rays of noontide heat,
For me.

Thus wert thou made all mine.

Grant grace and strength divine

Into Clearer Light

MRS. E. G. WHITE

CORNELIUS, the Roman centurion, was not even accounted a disciple of Christ; but he had faith in God, according to the light that he had, and he was reaching out for more light. The Lord saw this man would do honor to the church, and he brought him into connection with the apostle Peter. He sent a special message from heaven to him, and by another message directed Peter to visit him, and give him light. That is God's way of working. Daily prayers for light and guidance will surely be answered.

In our world there are many such men as Cornelius, and for them the Lord desires his servants to make special efforts. The Lord showed Peter, the Jew, that there were Gentiles who were serving God as acceptably as he was. There are to-day many in the world who are nearer the kingdom of God than we suppose. They are walking in all the light they have, and in the future they will be led into clearer and still clearer light.

In this dark world of sin the Lord has many precious jewels, to whom he will guide his messengers. God will use his believing ones as his instrumentalities, through them ministering to souls fainting for the bread of life. Words of hope and cheer falling from lips that have been touched by a live coal from God's altar, will revive and comfort those who are weary and distressed.

There are many who are represented to me as being like Cornelius, men whom God desires to connect with his church. Their sympathies are with the Lord's people. But the threads that bind them to the world hold them firmly. They have not the moral courage to take their position with the lowly ones. We are to make special efforts for these souls, who are in need of earnest labor because of their responsibilities and temptations.

We talk and write much of the neglected poor; should not some attention be given to the neglected rich? Many look upon this class as hopeless, and they do little to open the eyes of those who, blinded and dazed by the power of Satan, have lost eternity out of their reckoning. Thousands of wealthy men have gone to their graves unwarned, because they have been judged by appearance, and passed by as hopeless subjects. But, indifferent as they may appear, most of this class are soul-burdened. There are thousands of rich men who are starving for spiritual food. Many in official life feel their need of something which they have not. Few among them go to church; for they feel that they receive no benefit. The teaching they hear does not touch the soul. Shall we make no personal appeal in their behalf?

God calls for earnest, humble workers, who will carry the truth to the higher classes. It is by no casual, accidental touch that wealthy, world-loving, world-worshiping souls can be drawn to Christ. Decided personal effort must be put forth by men and women imbued with the missionary spirit, those who will not fail nor become discouraged.

There are some who are especially fitted to work for the higher classes. These should seek the Lord daily, making it a study how to reach these persons, not to make merely a casual acquaintance with them, but to lay hold of them by personal effort and living faith, manifesting a deep love for their souls, a real concern that they shall have a knowledge of the truth as it is in Jesus.

In order to reach these people, believers themselves must be living epistles, "known and read of all men." We do not represent as fully as we might the elevating, ennobling character of the truth. We are in danger of becoming narrow and selfish. With fear and trembling lest we fail, we should ever remember this.

Let those who work for the higher classes bear themselves with true dignity, remembering that angels are their companions. Let them keep the treasure-house of mind and heart filled with "It is written." Hang in memory's hall the precious words of Christ. They are to be valued far above silver or gold.

There are miracles to be wrought in genuine conversion,— miracles that are not now discerned. The greatest men of the earth are not beyond the power of a wonder-working God. If those who are workers together with him will be men of opportunity, doing their duty bravely and faithfully, God will convert men who occupy responsible positions, men of intellect and influence. Through the power of the Holy Spirit many will accept the divine principles. Converted to the truth, they will become agencies in the hand of God to communicate the light. They will have a special burden for other souls of this neglected class. They will feel that a dispensation of the gospel is committed to them for those who have made this world their all. Time and money will be consecrated to God, means will be brought into his treasury, talent and influence will be converted to the truth, and new efficiency and power will be added to the church.

Everywhere there are those who will take their stand for present truth. Beside all waters we are to sow the seeds of truth. Let us never allow ourselves to be controlled by feelings of hopelessness. God's work will be done. The Lord knows those that are his. In his providence he will direct them as he directed Cornelius.

Have we not a work to do for the Lord? and should we not labor more intelligently, more earnestly, than we have labored in the past for those who need help? Let us remember that we are God's helping hand. With the Bible as our guide and counselor, let us go forth to work for the Lord, serving him in the way he has appointed, proclaiming the message of present truth in a way that will make it impressive and acceptable. We are weak, but if we will but believe, God will give us his enduring strength.

Sunday Legislation in Canada

G. B. THOMPSON

AT the present writing I am unable to find that anything further has been done by the Dominion Parliament to promote the desired Sunday legislation. Some of the members of Parliament have expressed themselves as being desirous of not meddling further in this matter if not urged to it by their constituency. The Lord's Day Alliance, however, is not idle, and its agitators, who are principally preachers, are doing what they can to stir up the people and influence Parliament to give the matter consideration. They express themselves as determined to enforce the laws already in existence, and to use every available means of securing more stringent enactments. Rev. T. Albert Moore, field secretary of the Alliance, held a meeting at Woodstock, Ontario, recently. The following item gives the attitude of the Alliance: —

"Before the evening sermon, Rev. Mr. Moore took occasion to make a short explanation of his connection with the Lord's Day Alliance. In their work of preserving the integrity of the Lord's day they have been able to prevent two hundred and fifty companies obtaining permission to work on Sundays. There were one hundred and fifty thousand people at that time working on the Sabbath, and it was their aim to prevent such desecration. It had been whispered to him that there might be work of that kind going on soon not very far from Woodstock. This would be investigated at once. If street-cars were to run, or any other form of Sunday labor were to be contemplated, the Lord's Day Alliance would put a stop to it."

The Sentinel-Review from which I quoted the preceding paragraph, pertinently asks, "What was Mr. Moore's meaning? Whether he had reference to

Nothing to Pay

NOTHING to pay! Ah, nothing to pay!
Never a word of excuse to say!
Year after year thou hast filled the score,
Owing thy Lord still more and more;
Hear the voice of Jesus say,
"Verily, thou hast nothing to pay!
Ruined, lost, art thou, and yet
I forgive thee all that debt."

Nothing to pay! The debt is so great;
What will you do with the awful weight?
How shall the way of escape be made?
Nothing to pay! yet it must be paid!
Hear the voice of Jesus say,
"Verily, thou hast nothing to pay!
All has been put to my account,
I have paid the full amount."

Nothing to pay; yes, nothing to pay!
Jesus has cleared all the debt away,
Blotted it out with his bleeding hand!
Free and forgiven and loved you stand.
Hear the voice of Jesus say,
"Verily, thou hast nothing to pay!
Paid is the debt, and the debtor free!
Now I ask thee, lovest thou me?"

The Promise of the Spirit

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) CHRIST declared that after his ascension, he would send to his church, as his crowning gift, the Comforter, who was to take his place. This Comforter is the Holy Spirit,— the soul of his life, the efficacy of his church, the light and life of the world. With his Spirit Christ sends a reconciling influence and a power that takes away sin.

(1) In the gift of the Spirit, Jesus gave to man the highest good that heaven could bestow. The Saviour looked on humanity, and saw that it was under the power of the prince of darkness; but he saw also that there was hope for human beings because there was power in the divine nature successfully to contend with evil agencies. With glad assurance he said, "Now is the judgment of this world: now shall the prince of this world be cast out. And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

The Spirit was given as a regenerating agency, and without this the sacrifice of Christ would have been of no avail. The power of evil had been strengthening for centuries, and the submission of man to this satanic captivity was amazing. Sin could be resisted and overcome only through the mighty agency of the third person of the Godhead, who would come with no modified energy, but in the fullness of divine power. (1) It is the Spirit that makes effectual what has been wrought out by the world's Redeemer. It is by the Spirit that the heart is made pure. Through the Spirit the believer becomes a partaker of the divine nature. Christ has given his Spirit as a divine power to overcome all hereditary and cultivated tendencies to evil, and to impress his own character upon the church. (1)

(2) Christ said of the Spirit, "He shall glorify me." As Christ glorified the Father by the demonstration of his love, so the Spirit was to glorify Christ by revealing to the world the riches of his grace. The very image of God is to be reproduced in humanity. The honor of God, the honor of Christ, is involved in the perfection of the character of his people.

(3) At the cost of infinite sacrifice and suffering, Christ has provided for us every essential to success in the Christian warfare. The Holy Spirit brings power that enables man to overcome. It is through the agency of the Spirit that the government of Satan is to be subdued. It is the Spirit that convinces of sin, and, with the consent of the human being, expels sin from the heart. The mind is then brought under a new law,— the royal law of liberty.

(2) The Spirit works in us by bringing to mind, vividly and often, the precious truths of the plan of redemption. We should forget these truths, and for us God's rich promises would lose their efficiency, were it not for the Spirit, who takes of the things of God, and shows them to us. Our hearts are warmed by the contemplation of Jesus and his love, and we long to speak to others the comforting assurances that have been brought to our minds.

(1) It is the privilege of every son and daughter of God to have the indwelling of the Spirit. If those who know the truth would love and fear the Lord alway, if they would abide in Christ, they would have moral and spiritual power. The grace of Christ would be in them as a well of water, springing up unto everlasting life, and would flow from them as streams of living water.

(2) The Spirit illumines our darkness, informs our ignorance, and helps us in our manifold necessities. But the mind must be constantly going out after God. If worldliness is allowed to come in, if we have no desire to pray, no desire to commune with him who is the source of strength and wisdom, the Spirit will not abide with us. Those who are unbelieving do not receive the rich endowment of grace that would make them wise unto salvation, patient, forbearing, quick to perceive and appreciate heavenly ministrations, quick to discern Satan's devices, and strong to resist sin. God can not do his mighty work for them because of their unbelief.

(4) Christ has promised the gift of the Spirit to his church, and the promise belongs to us as much as to the first disciples. But like every other promise, it is given on conditions. There are many who believe, and profess to claim the Lord's promise; they talk about Christ and about the Holy Spirit, yet receive no benefit. They do not surrender the soul to be guided and controlled by the divine agencies. We can not use the Holy Spirit. The Spirit is to use us. Through the Spirit God works in his people "to will and to do of his good pleasure." But many will not submit to this. They want to manage themselves. This is why they do not receive the heavenly gift. Only to those who wait humbly upon God, who watch for his guidance and grace, is the Spirit given. (4)

Christ declared that the divine influence was to be with his followers to the end. But the promise is not accepted and believed by God's people; therefore its fulfilment is not seen. The promise of the Spirit is a matter little thought of; and the result is only what might be expected,— spiritual drought, spiritual weakness, spiritual declension and death. Minor matters occupy the attention, and the divine power that is necessary for the growth and prosperity of the church, and which would bring all other blessings in its train, is lacking, though offered in its infinite plentitude.

Just so long as the church is satisfied with small things will it fail of receiving the great things of God. Why do we not hunger and thirst after the gift of the Spirit, since this is the means by which we are to receive power? Talk of it, pray for it, preach concerning it. The Lord is more willing to give the Holy Spirit to us than parents are to give good gifts to their children.

If our workers realized the responsibility resting upon them, would they enter the work without cherishing a deep sense of its sacredness? Should we not see the deep movings of the Spirit of God upon the men who present themselves for the ministry? For the baptism of the Holy Spirit, every worker should be offering his prayer to God. Companies should be gathered together to ask for special help, for heavenly wisdom, that they may know how to devise and execute. Especially should men pray that God will baptize his missionaries with the Holy Spirit.

There is no limit to the usefulness of one who, putting aside self, makes room for the working of the Holy Spirit upon his heart, and lives a life wholly consecrated to God. (4) If men will endure the necessary discipline, without complaining or fainting by the way, God will teach them hour by hour, and day by day. He longs to reveal his grace. If his people will remove the obstructions, he will pour forth the waters of salvation in abundant streams through human channels. (4) If men in humble life were encouraged to do all the good they could do, if restraining hands were not laid upon them to repress the zeal, there would be one hundred workers for Christ where now there is one.

God takes men as they are, and educates them for his service, if they will yield themselves to him. The Spirit of God, received into the soul, will quicken all its faculties. Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, the mind that is devoted unreservedly to God develops harmoniously, and is strengthened to comprehend and fulfil the requirements of God. The weak, vacillating character becomes changed to one of strength and steadfastness. Continual devotion establishes so close a relation between Jesus and his disciples that the Christian becomes like him in mind and character. Through a connection with Christ he will have clearer and broader views. His discernment will be more penetrative, his judgment better balanced.

The presence of the Holy Spirit with God's workers will give the presentation of truth a power that not all the honor or glory of the world could give. (1) [The Spirit furnishes the strength that sustains striving, wrestling souls in every emergency, amid the unfriendliness of relatives, the hatred of the world, and the realization of their own imperfections and mistakes.

A union of divine and human endeavor, a close connection first, last, and ever, with God, the source of all strength, — this is absolutely necessary in our work.]

*Christian Unity

LET us consider first a few verses found in the seventeenth chapter of John, beginning to read at the sixteenth verse: "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth. As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world. And for their sakes I sanctify myself, that they also might be sanctified through the truth. Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word. That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

In these few verses we have brought before us the aim of the gospel, the object of Christ's mission to this earth, the true purpose regarding the church of God,—"that they may be one." This is the mystery of godliness, how men and women of different minds, plans, and ideas can unite together, all speak the same thing, and be of the same mind, and yet be so different in their individuality. It is a mystery how there can be unity in diversity, and yet this is what the gospel is to accomplish, and is to be the greatest evidence to the world of the power of Christianity. Satan knows this, and so his plans are constantly to keep people divided. God's purpose is to unify.

I have thought a great deal of this lately. Although a member of the church, I now believe I held views which had in them the very element of separation that is in the world. I used to feel that it was necessary for every man to live up to his own convictions, regardless of what others might think. I must be true to myself. This is the position I have maintained for years. Now, while there is truth in this, there is also a great error in it.

When Peter came to the Saviour and said, "What shall this man do?" referring to John, the Saviour said, "What is that to thee? follow thou me." This says clearly that God never has given authority to one man to dictate to another what he should do, that we stand related to God as individuals, and that it is impossible for any man to exercise authority of this kind. In another place the Saviour said that among the Gentiles, that is, among men of the world, they do exercise this authority one over the other, but "it shall not be so among you;" for "all ye are brethren." While it is a sublime truth that man has an individuality, and is to sustain it, yet the carnal heart readily receives this also, and naturally cherishes its own plans, opinions, and ideas; but a sanctified individuality and conscience will feel the need of the counsel, advice, and help that can be received by fellowship; and it is for this very reason we are told that in the closing days "they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name. And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my jewels." That is why the apostle Paul exhorts us not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is, and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

I wish to refer to a few texts to show you that the conscience is not a safe guide. It can not always be relied upon. I will speak first of the experience of St. Paul. In the twenty-third chapter of Acts, the first verse, we find the following words: "And Paul, earnestly beholding the council, said, Men and brethren, I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day." I have no doubt that Paul stated the truth, and he was thoroughly conscientious, as we call it. He had lived in all good conscience before God and man up to that time, and thought he was doing right. He had thought that he had a conscience of his own, and that he must be true to it. "I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day." The twenty-fourth chapter of Acts and the sixteenth verse makes it plain that this was Paul's idea, he must be true to his conscience. "And herein do I exercise myself," he said, "to have always a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward men."

In the third chapter of Philippians, the third verse, we find that Paul had a conversion upon this point; for the time came in his experience when he said, "For we are the circumcision, which worship God in the spirit, and rejoice in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh. Though I might also have confidence in the flesh. If any other man thinketh that he hath whereof he might trust in the flesh, I more: circumcised the eighth day, of the stock of Israel, of the tribe of Benjamin, an Hebrew of the Hebrews; as touching the righteousness which is in the law, blameless. But what things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ." Turning again to the twenty-sixth chapter of Acts, beginning at verse nine, we notice some of the things this conscience led Paul to do. "I verily thought with myself, that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. Which thing I also did in Jerusalem: and many of the saints did I shut up in prison, having received authority from the high priests; and when they were put to death, I gave my voice against them. And I punished them oft in every synagogue, and compelled them to blaspheme; and being exceedingly mad against them, I persecuted them even unto strange cities." This is what conscience led Paul to do; and what it caused him to do it will cause any other man to do who takes the same position, who makes a god of his conscience.

I think we might with profit study the experience that came to Paul, as recorded in the ninth chapter. In the record of the stoning of Stephen, in the seventh chapter, it is stated that "the witnesses laid down their clothes at a young man's feet, whose name was Saul." The first verse of the eighth chapter says, "And Saul was consenting unto his death." The third verse of the same chapter says, "As for Saul, he made havoc of the church, entering into every house, and haling men and women committed them to prison." The first verse of the ninth chapter speaks of the continued attitude of opposition to the church of God that Saul adopted: "And Saul, yet breathing out threatenings and slaughter against the disciples of the Lord, went unto the high priest, and desired of him letters to Damascus to the synagogues, that if he found any of this way, whether they were men or women, he might bring them bound unto Jerusalem." While Saul was journeying to fulfil his mission, "he came near Damascus: and suddenly there shined round about him a light from heaven: and he fell to the earth, and heard a voice saying unto him, Saul, Saul, why persecutest thou me? And he said, Who art thou, Lord? And the Lord said, I am Jesus whom thou persecutest: it is hard for thee to kick against the pricks. And he trembling and astonished said, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?"

The Lord could have told Saul what he had for him to do. The Lord could have said, I want you to go into Arabia, or to such a place, and preach the gospel. But if the Lord had done that, it would have forever kept him separated from the body of believers, the church of God. So when Saul said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" the Lord said to him, "Arise, and go into the city, and it shall be told thee what thou must do." God by this action united Paul to the church, and showed that he was to recognize God's voice through the church. From this we see that the true object of the gospel is to draw men together, to lead men to feel that although they have an individuality of their own, they can

Loving — Living — Working

"That the world may believe."

ON the heights of self-denial,
  Love with sorrow blends,
As One prays, in hour of trial,
  For his friends: —
    "Keep these one in us, O Father!
      That all men may know
    They are my disciples, truly —
      Loving so!"

As he hears their faith's confession —
  "Do ye now believe?"
Lo! my loving, parting blessing —
  Peace — receive!
    "In the world is tribulation;
      But ye need not fear;
    I have overcome it for you,
      Be of cheer!"

Not alone for those disciples,
  Jesus' prayer was heard;
But for us who have believed
  Through their word!
    "Keep them one, O Holy Father!
      That the world may know
    Thou hast sent me — when they see these Living so!"

Blessed Jesus! o'er earth's turmoil
  We thy voice have heard.
May we e'er in loving union
  Keep thy word!
    While we love and help each other,
      Men beholding, see
    That we are thy true disciples —
      Loving thee!

Church of Jesus Christ! Awaken!
  Founded on the Rock,
View the judgment scenes, unshaken —
  Fear no shock!
    Mission workers! speed the tidings
      Swift to dying men —
    Jesus leaves his Father's glory —
      Comes again!

Like a radiant, bannered army —
  Church! be strong and fair!
One in heart, God grant ye meet him,
  In the air!
    "One in heart!" we will remember!
      "That the world may know"
    God sent Jesus! when they see us,
      Working so!

*Words of Encouragement

MRS. E. G. WHITE

WE need to understand the meaning of the instruction given in the first chapter of second Peter. "Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ," writes his second epistle, "to them that have obtained like precious faith" with himself. In order that we may realize the importance of God's claims upon us, we need constantly to cherish the faith that the early Christians cherished. This faith is obtained not through any righteousness of our own, but "through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ."

To those who have obtained the faith that filled the hearts of Christians in Peter's time, are written the words: "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord." In the light of this instruction, how important it is that we give strict attention to the formation of character! He who by faith daily lays hold firmly upon the invisible One, will reveal the character of Jesus. With lowliness of heart he will accept Christ's invitation to the weary and the heavy laden. Instead of unloading his burdens upon his neighbor, with whose heart-sorrows and burdens he is unacquainted, he will seek rest by taking upon himself the yoke of Christ. Let us abide in Jesus. Then he alone — formed within, the hope of glory — will appear in our every word and deed.

"According as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue." (1)

Before us there has been placed an open door, which no man can shut. In the third of Revelation we read: "Behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it." Why are we so slow to enter this door? The promises given us are yea and amen. Christ declares: "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you: for every one that asketh receiveth; and he that seeketh findeth; and to him that knocketh it shall be opened."

Are we not inexcusable for unloading all our troubles upon our neighbors? Are we not thus insulting God? Is not this why there is among us so much spiritual feebleness? Why do we not take everything to the Lord in prayer? He stands at the head of humanity, enabling men through his sacrifice to become partakers of the divine nature, — to lay hold upon an infinite power that will transform them into the likeness of the Divine.

In co-partnership with Christ, we are to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling, by doing the works he bids us do. We are to be meek and lowly. Trials sometimes come to lead us to humble ourselves before him, and to depend wholly upon him for grace and guidance. We can not afford to live without Christ's presence; for perfection of character comes only through the gift of his righteousness. When we are in trouble, let us go to him instead of to some defective human being. We have a friend in Jesus, and we are without excuse for placing upon our brethren and sisters the burdens that our Saviour alone is able to bear for us.

Peter writes of "the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord." To know Jesus, is to know that he is my personal Saviour, — to know that he pities me, that upon his sympathizing heart he bears the wounds of my transgressions.

My brethren and sisters, this is the great Medical Missionary, the greatest Medical Missionary that ever stood on earthly soil. Sometimes when I speak of him, it seems as if the fountain of my heart would break at the thought of how wicked the world is to-day, notwithstanding the fact that they have among them a Medical Missionary ready to help them at any time.

Let us guard against speaking words that discourage. Let us resolve never to engage in evil-speaking and backbiting. Let us refuse to serve Satan by implanting seeds of doubt. Let us guard against cherishing unbelief, or expressing it to others. Many, many times I have wished that there might be circulated a pledge containing a solemn promise to speak only those words that are pleasing to God. There is as great need for such a pledge as there is for one against the use of intoxicating liquor. Let us begin to discipline the tongue, remembering always that we can do this only by disciplining the mind; for "out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." (2)

Through the help that Christ can give, we shall be able to learn to bridle the tongue. Sorely as he was tried on the point of hasty and angry speech, he never once sinned with his lips. With patient calmness he met the sneers, the taunts, and the ridicule of his fellow workers at the carpenter's bench. Instead of retorting angrily, he would begin to sing one of David's beautiful psalms; and his companions, before realizing what they were doing, would unite with him in the hymn. What a transformation would be wrought in this world if men and women to-day would follow Christ's example in the use of words!

"Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."

Little do we realize the prevalence of evil among those who claim to be Christians. We, as believers, are exhorted to cultivate the Christian graces. Immediately after holding before us the hope of escaping from the corruption that is in the world through lust, the apostle further declares: "And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity [love]."

Daily we have a sum to prove; daily we are to add these graces to the character we are perfecting. Faithfulness in the carrying out of this scripture in the life-practise, will result in the conversion of hundreds and of thousands, as upon the day of Pentecost.

"For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins." (3)

Commentary, Vol. 2 p. 936

Our High Calling, (2) p. 291

(1) When we submit to the solemn rite of baptism, we testify to angels and to men that we are purged from our old sins, and that henceforth, having died to the world, we will "seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." Let us not forget our baptismal vow. In the presence of the three highest powers of heaven,— the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit,— we have pledged ourselves to do the will of him who, over the rent sepulcher of Joseph, declared, "I am the resurrection and the life." Christ forgives every penitent sinner, and as the forgiven one, at the time of baptism, rises from the watery grave, he is declared a new creature, whose life is hid with Christ in God. Let us ever remember that it is our high privilege to be purged from our old sins.

(2) Faithfulness to our baptismal vow gives the heart-preparation needful for saving souls. O how many we might save! As I look over the congregation before me, I realize that there is a work for every church-member to do. All may not have lived up to their baptismal vow; but let every erring one do all in his power to redeem the past, turning from the path that has led astray, to the path of humble obedience. You, my brother, my sister, are to win heaven, and a life that measures with the life of God. You know not how soon your own life may be taken away. Have you secured the better life? Make sure of salvation, I beg of you, while you still have the opportunity. (4)

"Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall."

This is the only election regarding which the Bible speaks. Fallen in sin, we may become partakers of the divine nature, and attain to a knowledge far in advance of any scientific learning. By partaking of the flesh and the blood of our crucified Lord, we shall gain life eternal. In the sixth of John we read: "Whoso eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life. . . . It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." None need lose eternal life. Every one who chooses daily to learn of the Heavenly Teacher, will make his calling and election sure. Let us humble our hearts before God, and follow on to know him whom to know aright is life eternal. (4)

"Give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall: for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

(3) Here are your life-insurance papers. This is not an insurance policy the value of which some one else will receive after your death; it is a policy that assures you a life measuring with the life of God,— even eternal life. O what an assurance! what a hope! Let us ever reveal to the world that we are seeking for a better country, even a heavenly. Heaven has been made for us, and we want a part in it. We can not afford to allow anything to separate us from God and heaven. In this life we must be partakers of the divine nature. Brethren and sisters, you have only one life to live. O let it be a life of virtue, a life hid with Christ in God!

Unitedly we are to help one another gain perfection of character. To this end, we are to cease all criticism. Onward and still onward we may advance toward perfection, until at last there will be ministered unto us an abundant entrance into the heavenly kingdom.

"Wherefore," says Peter, "I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance."

Supposing we were to cherish a remembrance of the bright chapters in our Christian experience, and dwell upon these in our testimony meetings; would not this be pleasing to God? If unbelievers are present in these meetings, they will recognize the right ring in such testimonies. Why? — Because angels of God are with those who have gained a personal knowledge of Christ Jesus, and these angels will impress hearts.

The Work in Washington

In the city of Washington there is much to be done. I am thankful to God for the privilege of seeing the land that has been purchased for our institutional work in this place. The securing of this land was in the Lord's providence, and I praise God that our brethren had the faith to take this forward step.

As I look over this city, I realize the magnitude of the work to be accomplished. Let every professed Christian feel the necessity of self-denial. Let every one guard against the tendency to expend, for the gratification of mere vanity, money that belongs to God,— especially in this time when our people are making every effort possible to build in the capital of the nation memorials that will stand in vindication of present truth. Let us study the use of every penny. Some may have formed habits of extravagance; let all such now choose another way — the way of obedience and self-denial.

God now calls upon every believer in this center to act his individual part in helping to build up the work that must be done. If you do your duty faithfully, you will find no time for dwelling upon the little trials and annoyances and perplexities that come to you. As the result of laboring earnestly to provide facilities for the salvation of unbelievers, and for the training of many of our own people for soul-saving service, you will find that your souls are refreshed with heaven's richest blessings.

In some respects the situation in Washington reminds me of our pioneer experiences in Cooranbong, Australia. There we secured fifteen hundred acres in the heart of the woods, and began the work of establishing a school. With willing hands the workmen toiled early and late. One by one, at great personal sacrifice to many of our dear brethren and sisters in Australia, the school buildings were erected.

Before this work was finished, the problem of providing a meeting-house at Cooranbong arose. This problem proved to be a perplexing one. It seemed that we had done about all we could, and that it would be impossible to raise means sufficient for erecting a suitable house of worship. Finally, during a council meeting in which the matter was receiving consideration, I offered to go through our settlement, and try to secure gifts of labor and material. Accompanied by my secretary, I visited the workmen living for miles around, and solicited help. Just at this time it happened that several of the carpenters who had been laboring on the school buildings, were temporarily out of employment; and these men generously responded, offering to work on the proposed meeting-house at a very low wage, — less than one half the usual rate. Several worked for nothing a portion of the time.

The erection of the meeting-house was pushed forward rapidly. In the providence of God, two hundred pounds came to me from the Wessels family in Africa, just as we were ready to secure lumber; this money brought great relief, as it enabled us to proceed without delay. Many smaller gifts came in. Within a remarkably short time, the building was completed.

May not we hope to have here in Washington some experiences similar to those we had in Australia, and to receive the same blessings that we received there? May God help us to do what we can in this place. May he give us hearts willing to make sacrifices. O, I am thankful, so thankful, that the work which for nearly twenty years I have hoped would be done at the nation's capital, has now been begun! As we plan and labor, let us do a great deal more praying than talking. If we lean heavily upon the Mighty One, and live on the plan of addition, the heavenly graces will be multiplied unto us, and we shall see of the salvation of God.

Sometimes I hardly know how to express my gratitude to God because the work in this place has actually begun. We are to remember that we can now see simply the alpha; we desire to see the omega. Having begun, let us not cease our efforts before completing the work. Christ declares, "I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end." He has been with us at the beginning; and he will round out all the work we shall do, if by faith we continue to walk in the way in which he leads.

Let us talk faith, and not unbelief; let us praise God, and go forward. The Lord is good, and greatly to be praised. At every step let us praise him from whom all blessings flow. (4)

THE FIELD WORK

Arkansas

Gentry.— About four miles from this place meetings were begun March 4, and as a result eleven were added to the church, and several others have begun to keep the Sabbath of the Lord. This makes twenty-five who have been added to the Gentry church since last fall. Pray for the work here, that the waste places may become fruitful fields.

Corinth.— Since the first of March, 1904, we have given away several periodicals, made forty-one missionary visits, had as many Bible and health conversations, prayed with the sick and dying, conducted one funeral service, and given fifty-two treatments. Many patients who had despaired of recovering under the doctors' care are now well.

We have been the only family of Seventh-day Adventists in this town for about four years. Two sisters are now canvassing in this place, and are meeting with success in taking orders for "Coming King" and "Bible Readings for the Home Circle." We are praying that they will deliver all the books ordered, and many more. We feel it a great privilege to have these workers with us. The truth is more and more precious to us. We are busy beyond our strength, but thankful for these opportunities to labor for the Master. We have gained the confidence of the general public, and do all we can to enlighten the people. Pray for us and the work here.

East Michigan

The work in the East Michigan Conference is onward. Encouraging reports are coming in from the laborers in the field. Following our good State meeting held at Ithaca in March, Brethren C. N. Sanders and P. C. Hayward carried on a series of meetings, resulting in several taking a stand for the truth. Elder Wm. Ostrander, assisted by two Bible workers, is just taking up the work in Saginaw. This is an important field, and let us pray for the success of the work there. The work in Detroit is advancing encouragingly. From time to time souls are deciding for the truth in that large city. Brother O. F. Butcher is in charge of the work in Detroit, having the assistance of one Bible worker.

Meetings were held at Mt. Forest by Delmer P. Wood and E. R. Lauda the latter part of the winter. The Lord blessed their labor, and sixteen souls are waiting at that place for baptism. A good work is being done in Jackson and Flint. Good reports are coming in from the churches.

The Sabbath-school and church-school work throughout the entire conference is well organized, and most effective work is being done. Efforts to organize the young people of the conference have met with some success, and a good work is started. An army of young people is waiting to be trained for the work in this conference. Plans are being made to provide for this need.

Our Work in Washington

Takoma Park, D. C., May 13, 1904.

I am grateful to my Heavenly Father for the blessings that he has bestowed upon me since we left St. Helena.

I have several times gone over the land which has been purchased for school and sanitarium purposes, and all that I have seen is most satisfactory. The land resembles representations that have been shown me by the Lord. It is well adapted for the purpose for which it is to be used. There is on it ample room for a school and a sanitarium, without crowding either institution. The fine stream running through the land is a treasure more valuable than gold or silver.

Our Sanitarium is to have an abundance of water free for five years. The school will pay seven cents for each one thousand gallons used.

To-day our contract with the Takoma Park Town Council for the removal of the sewer-farm was signed, and we can now go forward in carrying out the plans that have been laid. The sewer-farm is to be moved one mile down the creek. We are to have most excellent sewer facilities.

No pains or money should be spared to secure perfect sewer arrangements in connection with our schools and sanitariums. Message after message in regard to this matter has been given to those bearing responsibilities in our institutions. I have been plainly instructed that carelessness or neglect in regard to sanitary conditions, in home or in public buildings, means a withdrawal of the blessing of God. Special directions in reference to sanitary arrangements were given to the children of Israel. Every one was charged to keep his premises clean, within and without, lest the Lord, passing by, should see uncleanness, and should remove his presence from those who were careless and indifferent in this respect.

A week ago we took a drive through various portions of Takoma Park, and Sister Daniells showed me the quiet and beautiful settlements near our land, half hidden by the natural forest. These settlements reminded me of Oakland, as it was thirty years ago. We feel thankful that our work can be located in such a place. It seems as if this place has been waiting to be occupied by our working forces.

The situation here fills me with hope and courage. We know that the Lord desires us to go forward as speedily as possible with the work before us. This work is to be a representation of the work that can be done in other parts of the South. It is to give a clear representation of the principles held by Seventh-day Adventists.

There will be much to do in various branches of the work, and young men and women of solid worth will be needed, who can enter the school as students when the buildings are ready. Wise, experienced teachers will be needed,— men and women who can give the youth lessons in business lines, and who can teach them, also, how to do true missionary work. Nothing is to be neglected that will give a thorough training in right principles.

The Bible is to be made the foundation of all study, the basis of the education given. Thus the students will be taught to build upon the Rock. Many in our world do not understand the truth for this time. Our young men and women should be wise unto salvation. They should know what is required of them.

The true motive of service is to be kept before old and young. The students are to be taught in such a way that they will develop into useful men and women. Every means that will elevate and ennoble them is to be employed. They are to be taught to put their powers to the best use. Physical and mental powers are to be equally taxed. No part of the living machinery is to be overworked, or left to become useless.

Our school here is to follow the plan of the schools of the prophets. It is to be the earnest endeavor of every one to use the powers that God has given him in harmony with God's laws. Habits of order and discipline are to be cultivated. All that is done is to brace nerve and muscle and will to more resolute effort for the harmonious development of the whole being. The power that is exerted by a true, pure life is to be kept before the students. This will aid them in their preparation for useful service. Daily they will grow purer and stronger, better prepared, through his grace and a study of his Word, to put forth aggressive efforts against evil.

Canadian Union Conference

Since my last report to the Review we have had a very interesting religious liberty campaign. An association known as the Lord's Day Alliance of Canada has been making a strong effort to get a Dominion Sunday law enacted.

This being an opportune time to set before Parliament, as well as before all the people of Canada, the true principles of religious liberty, we had literature prepared for the occasion. Four-page tracts taking up different phases of the question were sent to members of Parliament, judges, lawyers, ministers, editors, and to the people in general, and the subject has been freely presented from the desk by our ministers.

Elder H. E. Rickard, of the Quebec Conference, and Mr. T. H. Robinson, of the Ontario Conference, went to Ottawa soon after Parliament convened, and while Mr. Robinson stayed only a few days, Elder Rickard remained nearly three weeks, and the Lord blessed the efforts.

As soon as the right of Parliament to legislate upon religious questions was contested, the Sabbath question began to be discussed through the daily papers. Mr. Robinson wrote a short article for the Ottawa Evening Journal in which he stated that he was willing to give one thousand dollars to the one who could frame a Sunday bill that would become

The Road Leads Home

O pilgrim, as you journey, do you ever gladly say,
In spite of heavy burdens and the roughness of the way,
That it does not surely matter,— all the strange and bitter stress,
Heat and cold, and toil and sorrow,— 'twill be healed with blessedness,
For the road leads home?

Home! the safe and blissful shelter where is glad and full content,
And companionship of kindred; and the treasures early rent
From your holding shall be given back more precious than before.
O, you will not mind the journey with such blessedness in store,
When the road leads home!

O, you will not mind the roughness nor the steepness of the way,
Nor the chill, unrested morning, nor the dreariness of the day;
And you will not take a turning to the left nor to the right,
But go straight ahead, nor tremble at the coming of the night,
For the road leads home.

And often for your comfort you will read the guide and chart,
It has wisdom for the mind and sweet solace for the heart;
It will serve you as a mentor, it will guide you sure and straight
All the time that you will journey, be the ending soon or late —
And the road leads home.

Shall We Colonize Around Our Institutions?

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Special light has been given me in regard to moving our publishing houses and sanitariums and schools out of the cities into places more favorable for their work, where those connected with them will not be exposed to all the temptations of city life. Especially should our schools be away from the cities. It is not for the spiritual good of the workers in our institutions for them to be located in the cities, where the temptations of the enemy abound on every hand.

The instruction given regarding the removal of the publishing work from Battle Creek to some rural place near Washington, D. C., was clear and distinct, and I earnestly hope that this work may be hastened.

Instruction has also been given that the Pacific Press should be moved from Oakland. As the years have passed by, the city has grown, and it is now necessary to establish the printing plant in some more rural place, where land can be secured for the homes of the employees. Those who are connected with our offices of publication should not be obliged to live in the crowded cities. They should have opportunity to obtain homes where they will be able to live without requiring high wages.

The apprentices in our publishing houses should receive more fatherly care than they have had. They are to be given a thorough training in the different lines of the printing business; and they are also to be given every opportunity to gain a knowledge of the Bible; for the time is at hand when believers will be scattered into many lands. The workers in our publishing houses are to be taught what it means to be sincere followers of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. In the past, many souls have been left unguarded. They have not been taught what is comprehended in the science of godliness. Not all of those who have borne responsibilities have lived the Christian life.

Consecrated Workers Needed

I listened to words spoken by One who understands the past, the present, and the future. A most solemn representation was given, delineating the characters that should be possessed by those who are accepted as yokefellows in our institutions. These institutions need men who are temperate in the full acceptance of the term. God forbid that men who have not learned to control themselves, and who neglect their own character-building in order to make plans for some one else, should be brought into our institutions at Washington, D. C., and Mountain View, Cal.

The workers in our institutions are to heed the instruction given by Christ. When the truth abides in the hearts of those in charge, when they walk in the light shining from God's Word, the younger workers will wish to understand better the words they hear in the assembly of God's people. They will ask for fuller explanations, and there will be special seasons of seeking the Lord and studying his Word. It was in some quiet room or some retired spot in the country that Christ explained to the disciples the parables which he had spoken before the multitude. This is the work that will need to be done for the youth in our publishing houses.

The Tendency to Colonize

Those who are necessarily situated near our institutions should be careful how they send out glowing reports of the place. Everywhere there are people who are restless and dissatisfied, and who long to go to some place where they think they will do better than in their present surroundings. They think that if they could be given work in connection with some one of our institutions, they would have a better chance to earn a living.

Those who are tempted to gather about our institutions should understand that it is skilled workers that are needed, and that heavy burdens fall upon all who are properly related to the work. Those who are connected with our institutions must be producers as well as consumers. To those who desire to change their location, and settle near one of our institutions, I would say: Do you think that in settling near an institution you will be able to get a living without perplexity or hard work? Have you counseled with the Lord in regard to this matter? Have you evidence that your desire for a change of location is free from selfish motives, and would be for the honor of God?

From letters received by those connected with our institutions, and by movements already made, we see that many desire to obtain homes near these institutions. My mind is weighed down with perplexity regarding this, because I have received instruction from the Lord in regard to the influence that would be exerted upon individuals and upon our work for our people selfishly to gather around our institutions.

For years, in warnings often repeated, I have testified to our people that God was not pleased to see families leaving the smaller churches, and gathering into the places where our publishing houses, sanitariums, and schools are established, for their own convenience, ease, or worldly profit.

In Australia, we went into the forest and secured a large tract of land for our school. Plans were laid to sell to our brethren building lots near the school homes and near the meeting-house. But I was instructed to protest against permitting families to settle near our school homes. The counsel given was that it would be much better for families not to live near the school, and not to live too close to one another.

Those who feel like settling close to our publishing house or our sanitarium and school at Takoma Park, should take counsel before they move.

To those who are looking toward Mountain View as a favorable place in which to live, because the Pacific Press is to be established there, I would say: Look to other parts of the world, which need the light that you have received in trust. Remember that God has given to every man his work. Choose some locality where you will have opportunity to let your light shine forth amid the moral darkness.

It is always the case that when an institution is established in a place, there are many families who desire to settle near it. Thus it has been in Battle Creek and in Oakland, and, to some extent, in almost every place where we have a school or a sanitarium.

There are restless ones who, were they to go to a new place to live, would still be dissatisfied, because the spirit of disaffection is in their hearts, and a change of place does not bring a change of heart. Their characters have not been refined and ennobled by the Spirit of Christ. They need to learn the lesson of contentment. They do not study from cause to effect. They do not seek to understand the Bible tests of character, which are essential to true success.

There are many who are desirous of changing their employment. They wish to obtain advantages which they suppose exist in some other place. Let them ask themselves of what benefit it would be to them to move if they have not learned to be kind and patient and helpful where they are. Let them look at themselves in the light of the Word of God, and then work to the point where improvement is needed.

Let those who are thinking of settling at Mountain View remember that this is not wisdom unless they are called there to connect with the publishing work. The world is large; its needs are great. Go, make new centers in places where there is need of light. Do not crowd into one place, making the same mistake that has been made in Battle Creek. There are hundreds of places that need the light God has given you.

And wherever you live, whatever your circumstances may be, be sure to bring the teachings of the Word of God into your homes, into your daily life. Seek God as your light, your strength, your way to heaven. Remember that to every man God has entrusted talents, to be used for him. Learn at the feet of Jesus the lessons of meekness and lowliness, and then work in the spirit of the Saviour for those around you. By willing obedience to the commandments, make your home a place where God's honor will love to dwell. "Thus saith the high and lofty One that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones."

We each have an individual work to do. We are to consecrate ourselves, body and soul and spirit, to God. Each child of his has something to do for his name's honor and glory. Wherever you are, you may be a blessing.

If there seems to be but a slender chance of obtaining a livelihood where you are, make the most of every opportunity. Devise wise plans. Put to use every jot of ability that God has given you. Do your duty to yourself, improving in understanding and adaptability, daily becoming better able to turn to the best account the mental and physical powers that God has given you. He wants you to be a success. He wants you to be a blessing in your home and in the neighborhood in which you live.

Parents, help your children to help you and to help one another. Be kind and courteous to your neighbors. By good works let your light shine forth amid the moral darkness. If you are true Christians, you will become more and more able to understand what the will of the Lord is, and you will move forward step by step in the light of his Word.

Study the life of Christ, and strive to follow the pattern he has given you. Ask yourselves if you have done your whole duty to the church in your own house, and your duty to your neighbors. Have you been faithful in teaching your children lessons of Christian politeness? Are there not many opportunities for improvement in the government of your home? Do not neglect your children. Learn how to discipline yourselves, that you may be worthy of the respect of your children and your neighbors. If Christ is not abiding in your hearts, how can you teach others the lessons of patience and kindness that must be manifest in the life of every Christian? Be sure that you are keeping the way of the Lord, and then teach the truth to those around you.

Morning Prayer

MRS. D. A. FITCH

LORD, we thank thee for the night,
  For all its rest and care;
And as we view the morning light,
  Hear thou our thankful prayer.

May the day's untried scenes be wisely met,
  Depending on thy strength alone.
To our account let pardon now be set;
  The blood of Jesus only can atone.

May wounded spirits quick be healed
  By quiet tongue and silent prayer.
May all the world be one rich field
  In whose great work we all may share.

O let the day to us be token
  That Jesus soon will come again!
He who in love for us wast broken
  Will come to break sin's strongest chain.

The Stone Kingdom

E. W. FARNSWORTH

THE prophet said, "And the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth." Dan. 2:35.

The figure of a mountain representing a government was not entirely new in Daniel's time. Isaiah, two hundred years before, used the same figure: "It shall come to pass in the last days, that the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains." Isa. 2:2. That is to say that in the last days the professed church of Christ would be united with the governments of earth.

Again the same prophet said, speaking of Babylon: "Lift up a banner upon the high mountain. . . . The noise of a multitude in the mountains, like as of a great people; a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together." Isa. 13:2, 4.

Jeremiah used the same illustration of Babylon when he said: "Behold, I am against thee, O destroying mountain, saith the Lord, which destroyest all the earth: and I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and will make thee a burnt mountain." Jer. 51:25.

We see in these scriptures that a nation is sometimes represented under the figure of a great, towering mountain.

In like manner we understand the "stone" cut out without hands becomes a great mountain, or a great kingdom, and fills the whole earth. Other scriptures add clearness to this thought.

"And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him." Dan. 7:27.

"And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke 1:32, 33.

Again we read: "The field is the world. . . . The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity." Matt. 13:38, 41. "For the promise, that he should be the heir of the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." Rom. 4:13. "Blessed are the meek: for they shall inherit the earth." Matt. 5:5. "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth." Zech. 14:9. "And his dominion shall be from sea even to sea, and from the river even to the ends of the earth." Zech. 9:10.

These scriptures make it very clear that the stone that dashes all other kingdoms to atoms is the kingdom of God, with Christ as its eternal King.

That Christ should be represented as a stone, and his kingdom as a stone kingdom, was not new in Daniel's time, and later writers used the same figure. Notice how the term is used in the following scriptures: —

"He is the Rock, his work is perfect: for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he." "Then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation." "Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and hast forgotten God that formed thee." "How should one chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight, except their Rock had sold them, and the Lord had shut them up? for their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges." Deut. 32:4, 15, 18, 30, 31.

Will the reader note carefully all these scriptures? In them a great truth is taught, and a great error also is corrected by them.

"There is none holy as the Lord: for there is none beside thee: neither is there any rock like our God." 1 Sam. 2:2. "The Lord is my rock." "For who is God, save the Lord? and who is a rock, save our God?" "The Lord liveth; and blessed be my Rock; and exalted be the God of the Rock of my salvation." 2 Sam. 22:2, 32, 47. "The God of Israel said, the Rock of Israel spake to me." 2 Sam. 23:3. "Unto thee will I cry, O Lord my rock." Ps. 28:1. "Lead me to the Rock that is higher than I." Ps. 61:2. "He only is my rock and my salvation." Ps. 62:2, 7. "And they remembered that God was their rock." Ps. 78:35; see also Ps. 89:26; 92:15; 94:22; 95:1.

Isaiah speaks as follows: "Trust ye in the Lord forever: for in the Lord Jehovah is the Rock of ages." Isa. 26:4, margin. "Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation: he that believeth shall not make haste." Isa. 28:16.

Trust God

MRS. MINNIE E. PARKER

Trust Him in the darkness,
Day is near at hand;
Trust him on the ocean,
He will bring to land.

Trust him in the daylight;
Snares beset thy feet,
But his watchful presence
Makes the journey sweet.

Trust him on the water,
Trust him on the land,
Trust that he will guide thee,
Let him hold thy hand.

Trust him as a Father;
Trust him as a Friend,
He will guide and keep thee
Ever to the end.

He will share thy sorrow
Through this vale of tears;
Thou shalt share his glory
Through eternal years.

The Great Medical Missionary

MRS. E. G. WHITE

In the days of Christ there were no sanitariums in the holy land. But wherever the Great Physician went, he carried with him the healing efficacy that was a cure for every disease, spiritual and physical. This he imparted to those who were under the afflicting power of the enemy. In every city, every town, every village through which he passed, with the solicitude of a loving father he laid his hands upon the afflicted ones, making them whole, and speaking words of tenderest sympathy and compassion. How precious to them were his words! From him flowed a stream of healing power, which made the sick whole. He healed men and women with unhesitating willingness and with hearty joyfulness; for he was glad to be able to restore suffering ones to health.

The Mighty Healer worked so incessantly, so intensely,— and often without food,— that some of his friends feared he could not much longer endure the constant strain. His brothers heard of this, and also of the charge brought by the Pharisees that he cast out devils through the power of Satan. They felt keenly the reproach that came upon them through their relation to Jesus. They decided that he must be persuaded or constrained to cease his manner of labor, and they induced Mary to unite with them, thinking that through his love for her they might prevail upon him to be more prudent.

Jesus was teaching the people when his disciples brought the message that his mother and his brothers were without, and desired to see him. He knew what was in their hearts, and "he answered and said unto him that told him, Who is my mother? and who are my brethren? And he stretched forth his hand toward his disciples, and said, Behold my mother and my brethren! For whosoever shall do the will of my father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother."

The enmity kindled in the human heart against the gospel was keenly felt by the Son of God, and it was most painful to him in his home; for his own heart was full of kindness and love, and he appreciated tender regard in the family relation. But with their short measuring-line his brothers could not fathom the mission that he came to fulfil, and therefore could not sympathize with him in his trials.

Some of those whom Christ healed he charged to tell no man. He knew that the more the Pharisees and Sadducees and rulers heard of his miracles, the more they would try to hedge up his way. But notwithstanding his precautions, "so much the more went there a fame abroad of him: and great multitudes came together to hear, and to be healed by him of their infirmities." Again and again he was followed by the priests, who expressed their violent sentiments against him in order to stir up the enmity of the people. But when he could no longer safely remain in one place, he went to another.

In doing medical missionary work we shall meet the same opposition that Christ met. He declares: "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake: but he that endureth to the end shall be saved. But when they persecute you in this city, flee ye into another: for verily I say unto you, Ye shall not have gone over the cities of Israel, till the Son of man be come."

The life of Christ and his ministry to the afflicted are inseparably connected. From the light that has been given me, I know that an intimate relationship should ever exist between the medical missionary work and the gospel ministry. They are bound together in sacred union as one work, and are never to be divorced. The principles of heaven are to be adopted and practised by those who claim to walk in the Saviour's footsteps. By his example he has shown us that medical missionary work is not to take the place of the preaching of the gospel, but is to be bound up with it. Christ gave a perfect representation of true godliness by combining the work of a physician and a minister, ministering to the needs of both body and soul, healing physical disease, and then speaking words that brought peace to the troubled heart.

Christ has empowered his church to do the same work that he did during his ministry. To-day he is the same compassionate physician that he was while on this earth. We should let the afflicted understand that in him there is healing balm for every disease, restoring power for every infirmity. His disciples in this time are to pray for the sick as verily as his disciples of old prayed. And recoveries will follow; for "the prayer of faith shall save the sick." We need the Holy Spirit's power, the calm assurance of faith that can claim God's promises.

We should ever remember that the efficiency of the medical missionary work is in pointing sin-sick men and women to the Man of Calvary, who taketh away the sin of the world. By beholding him they will be changed into his likeness. Our object in establishing sanitariums is to encourage the sick and suffering to look to Jesus and live. Let the workers in our medical institutions keep Christ, the Great Physician, constantly before those to whom disease of body and soul has brought discouragement. Point them to the One who can heal both physical and spiritual diseases. Tell them of the One who is touched with the feeling of their infirmities. Encourage them to place themselves in the care of him who gave his life to make it possible for them to have life eternal. Keep their minds fixed upon the One altogether lovely, the Chiefest among ten thousand. Talk of his love; tell of his power to save.

The Lord desires every worker to do his best. Those who have not had special training in one of our medical institutions may think that they can do very little; but, my dear fellow workers, remember that in the parable of the talents, Christ did not represent all the servants as receiving the same number. To one servant was given five talents; to another, two; and to still another, one. If you have but one talent, use it wisely, increasing it by putting it out to the exchangers. Some can not do as much as others, but every one is to do all he can to roll back the wave of disease and distress that is sweeping over our world. Come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty powers of darkness. God desires every one of his children to have intelligence and knowledge, so that with unmistakable clearness and power his glory shall be revealed in our world.

"See That Thou Build All Things According to the Pattern"

D. H. KRESS

There is a great significance in the following words of inspiration: "The birth of Jesus Christ was on this wise."

The instruction was given to Moses, "See . . . that thou make all things according to the pattern showed to thee in the mount."

It is evident that God designs ever to keep before man the birth of Christ, his humble parentage and life of toil, as a pattern in planning to carry forward his work. The Saviour of men was not born in a palace, neither was he surrounded with pomp and worldly splendor at his birth. He was born in a stable, at Bethlehem, cradled in a manger, and brought up in an obscure town in Galilee. Though he held the wealth of this world in his hands, he emptied himself, and his great work and mission were begun in poverty, without worldly rank or recognition. This was God's way of revealing himself, of intro-

Have Faith in God

"Have faith in God"—
What though behind, the foe,
In front, the sea may rise with threat'ning might!
The pillar of God's presence, in the night
As fire shall glow;
Darkness around, he will to thee give light,
Thy foes o'erthrow.
Stretch forth, in trust, prayer's wonder-working rod;
Have faith in God.

"Have faith in God"—
He holds the winds and waves
Within the hollow of his own strong hand!
All things obey one word of his command,
And Jesus saves!
The starry hosts he binds with circling band,
Shuts storms in caves,
His sacred feet the surging billows trod;
Have faith in God.

"Have faith in God"—
Though fig-tree blossom not,
The labor of the olive seem to fail,
The vine leaves wither 'neath the pelting hail,
And falling, rot;
They shall enrich the mold; while we bewail
Their wasted lot,
New fruit is forming down below the sod;
Have faith in God.

"Have faith in God"—
Omnipotent his love!
Though mountains bar thy way, he shall again
Thresh the high hills, till they become a plain,
Or far remove;
Things deemed impossible by men, and vain,
Are wrought above,
And for rough places, feet with iron are shod;
Have faith in God.

Medical Missionary Workers to Reveal Christ's Character

MRS. E. G. WHITE

True medical missionary work is of divine origin, and has a most glorious mission to fulfil. In all its bearings it is to be in conformity with Christ's work.

At this stage of the medical missionary work nothing will help us more than to understand the mission of the greatest Medical Missionary that ever trod the earth; nothing will help us more than to realize how sacred is this line of service, and how perfectly it corresponds to the life-work of the Great Missionary. The object of our mission is the same as the object of Christ's mission. Why did God send his Son to the fallen world?—To make known to mankind his love for them. Christ came as a Redeemer. Throughout his ministry he kept prominent his mission to save sinners.

When Christ was about to ascend to heaven, he committed to his disciples the mission that his Father had committed to him; and he taught them how to fulfil this mission. He declared that as he had represented his Father to the world, so they were to represent him. Although he would be invisible to the natural eye, yet all who believed on him would be able to behold him by faith. He told his followers to work as he had worked. They were to be a spectacle to worlds unfallen, to angels, and to men, revealing the Father through a revelation of the Son.

The Saviour lived on this earth a life that love for God will constrain every true believer in Christ to live. Following his example, in our medical missionary work we shall reveal to the world that we are his representatives, and that our credentials are from above.

Christ knew that his Father had chosen him to carry out the great plan of redemption by coming to the fallen world to die for sinners. And when he came to fulfil his mission, he was, in every sense of the term, a medical missionary. We can do medical missionary work in a Christlike manner only when we are one with him. United with him, we receive spiritual life and power, and learn to be "laborers together with God," manifesting love for every one for whom he died, and working earnestly to bring into the heavenly garner a harvest of souls. Filled with his Spirit, men and women are animated with the same desire to save sinners that animated Christ in his life-work as a missionary sent of God.

I am instructed to say that God desires to have the medical missionary work cleansed from the tarnish of earthliness, and elevated to its true position before the world. Our medical missionary workers must rise to heights that can be reached only by a living, working faith. At this time in our history, we are to allow no confusion of sentiment to prevail in regard to what should be expected of medical missionaries sent of God. There should be a more clear, definite understanding of what medical missionary work comprehends. Those who desire to honor God will not mingle worldly policy plans with his plans in attempting to accomplish that which this work is ordained by him to accomplish.

Clothed with humanity, Christ performed a work that revealed the invisible Father, in order that his disciples might understand the meaning of the prayer, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." But how many who claim to be his followers concede to a worldly policy! This is because their hearts are not filled with love for the truth. God's purpose in committing to men and women the mission that he committed to Christ, is to separate his followers from worldly policy.

The people of God, those who claim to love him and to keep his commandments, are to reflect a much clearer, purer light than they now reflect. Even Christ desired men to know that he was not acting independently, but in behalf of another, who had sent him. He never for a moment lost sight of the greatness of his mission. He was always conscious of the fact that he was the Sent of God. And to his Father he declares concerning his disciples, "As thou hast sent me into the world, even so have I also sent them into the world."

Our work is clearly defined. As the Father sent his only begotten Son into our world, even so Christ sends us, his disciples, as his medical missionary workers. In fulfilling this high and holy mission, we are to do the will of God. No one man's ideas or judgment are to be our criterion as to what constitutes genuine medical missionary work. We can have power and efficiency only by working as Christ worked. And we can be Christlike in word and deed only when his will is perfected in us. Then shall his righteousness go before us, and the glory of the Lord shall be our rearward.

The life of Christ must become our life, our light, our exceeding great reward. Our words and works must bear a living testimony that in our lives we are not lying against the truth we claim to believe. If Christ is indeed formed within, the hope of glory, we shall manifest that tenderness, that love, that fervency of spirit, which reveals his character. Our hearts will be humble, our spirits contrite. Our works will bear witness to his indwelling presence. His disposition, his kindness, his compassion, manifested in us, will inspire hope in the hearts of the most hopeless. Thus in act, as well as in word, we shall reveal to the world the character of the Unseen.

A Short Sermon by a Layman

H. F. PHELPS

I heard a short sermon the other day, and I want to tell it to others. It was delivered on the cars. Returning from a visit to one of our churches, the train stopped at ——, where there had been an organized church. Among the passengers that boarded the train was Brother ——. As was natural, we began to talk about the past, and made inquiry for some with whom we had walked to the house of God in company. Some had moved to other places. Of one it was said that he was sometimes up, and sometimes down; of others, that they had gone back into the world.

After a moment of silence, this brother laid his hand on my knee, and exclaimed: "I tell you what it is, Brother Phelps, when a man gives up family worship, he is gone!" With deep feeling he added: "It don't seem to me that I could live if it were not for family worship."

Let these words be well considered, and ever remembered. In them is the sermon by a layman. They tell an everlasting truth. "When a man gives up family worship, he is gone." And a

Even So, Come

"He which testifieth these things saith, Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. 22:20.

Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come;
All creation groans for thee,
Sin abounds from sea to sea,
Millions grope in misery;
Even so, Lord Jesus, come.

Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come;
Death and darkness everywhere,
Satan's legions fill the air,
E'en elect ones to ensnare;
Even so, Lord Jesus, come.

Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come;
Burdens, heartaches, tears, and strife,
Shedding blood, and taking life,
Through the whole of earth are rife;
Even so, Lord Jesus, come.

Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come;
Erring daughters throng the way,
Dearest sons from homes astray,
Weeping mothers watch and pray;
Even so, Lord Jesus, come.

Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come;
Helpless millions cry for bread,
Robbed by ruling ones for greed,
Heeding not though loud they plead;
Even so, Lord Jesus, come.

Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come;
Men blaspheme thy holy name,
Live in wanton sin and shame,
Mock the words, "He'll come again;"
Even so, Lord Jesus, come.

Come, Lord Jesus, quickly come;
Come and claim thy ready bride,
Call her safely to thy side,
E'er thy wrath this world betide;
Even so, Lord Jesus, come.

Our Work

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I have been instructed to direct the minds of our people to the fifty-sixth chapter of Isaiah. This chapter contains important lessons for those who are fighting on the Lord's side in the conflict between good and evil.

"Thus saith the Lord, Keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed. Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that layeth hold on it; that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil.

"Neither let the son of the stranger, that hath joined himself to the Lord, speak, saying, The Lord hath utterly separated me from his people: neither let the eunuch say, Behold, I am a dry tree. For thus saith the Lord unto the eunuchs that keep my Sabbaths, and choose the things that please me, and take hold of my covenant; even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off.

"Also the sons of the stranger, that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer; their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called a house of prayer."

"And taketh hold of my covenant." This is the covenant spoken of in the following scripture: —

"Moses went up unto God, and the Lord called him out of the mountain, saying, Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and tell the children of Israel: Ye have seen what I did unto the Egyptians, and how I bear you on eagles' wings, and brought you unto myself. Now therefore, if ye will obey my voice indeed," — in truth, earnestness, and sincerity, — "and keep my covenant, then ye shall be a peculiar treasure unto me . . . for all the earth is mine: and ye shall be unto me a kingdom of priests, and an holy nation. These are the words which thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel.

"And Moses came and called for the elders of the people, and laid before their faces all these words which the Lord commanded him. And all the people answered together, and said, All that the Lord hath spoken we will do."

(1) This is the pledge that God's people are to make in these last days. Their acceptance with God depends on a faithful fulfilment of the terms of their agreement with him. God includes in his covenant all who will obey him. To all who will do justice and judgment, keeping their hand from doing any evil, the promise is, "Even unto them will I give in mine house and within my walls a place and a name better than of sons and of daughters: I will give them an everlasting name, that shall not be cut off."

"The Lord God which gathereth the outcasts of Israel saith, Yet will I gather others to him, besides those that are gathered unto him."

"Seek ye out of the book of the law, and read." "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious. And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth."

These words outline our work. This scripture is to be received by our people as a message for to-day. The glad tidings of salvation are to be carried to those who have not heard them.

Among the people of God there is to be no colonizing. The word of the Lord to them is, "Thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left." They are to make plants in all places. Everywhere the truth for this time is to be proclaimed. Those into whose hearts the light has shone are to remember that they are God's workmen, his witnesses. To serve and honor him is to be their science. They are to call upon others to keep his commandments and live. To all people and nations and kindreds and tongues the truth is to be proclaimed. The time has come for much aggressive work to be done in the cities, and in all neglected, unworked fields. This the enemy knows, and he tries to keep the minds of those to whom this work has been committed, occupied with nonessentials. Thus he seeks to lead them to neglect the precious opportunities that come to them to present the truth to those who know it not.

Shall those who know the truth, and who ought to be filled with zeal for its advancement, allow Satan to turn their thoughts from the great truth that has been given them to give to others? The enemy is determined to place God's people in a false light before the world. He is pleased when their lives reveal defects, when they cherish objectionable traits of character. These traits of character he uses in his service.

Many yield to his temptations, and the time and influence of God's servants, which should be used in making known to unbelievers the truth for this time, is used in efforts to recover professing believers from Satan's snares. Thus the way of the advancement of the truth is blocked.

God sees the struggle that is to take place in our world, the whole progress and outcome of which has been traced in the pages of his Word. He sees also the diseased, defective eyesight of his people, which prevents them from discerning their own deficiencies, and from taking an earnest interest in the things of eternity. Christ calls upon the members of his church to cherish the true, genuine hope of the gospel. He points them upward, distinctly assuring them that the riches that endure are above, not below. Their hope is in heaven, not on the earth. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness," he says, "and all these things" — all that is essential for your good — "shall be added unto you."

With many, the things of this world obscure the glorious view of the eternal weight of glory that awaits the saints of the Most High. They can not distinguish the true, the real, the enduring substance, from the false, the counterfeit, the passing shadow. Christ urges them to remove from before their eyes that which is obscuring their view of eternal realities. He insists upon the removal of that which is causing them to mistake phantoms for realities, and realities for phantoms. God entreats his people to give the strength of body, mind, and soul to the service that he expects them to perform. He calls upon them to (2

He does not leave us in ignorance of what is before us. He shows us the vast confederacy arrayed against us. He tells us plainly that we are battling against a mighty foe. But he assures us that we shall not be left to fight alone. Angels are in the ranks of God's soldiers. And One more powerful than angels is there. The Captain of our salvation leads the way, saying, "Be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

The Test for To-day

Disobedience to God was the sin by which our first parents fell. Before God's work is finished in the world, he will reverse Satan's success, and confront the adversary with a people that, under every test, display a perfect obedience to God. "The dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." Rev. 12:17.

This obedience will not be a partial one governed by human reason or expediency. God himself will pronounce the remnant church without spot or blemish. "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Rev. 14:12.

The call is now being given to the world. The time for the message of Rev. 14:6-12 is here. Unbelief says that the commandments of God are a burdensome yoke, that to keep them is impossible in these days of competition, and that to turn from Sunday-keeping to the Sabbath-keeping of the fourth commandment would be equal to suicide.

Faith recognizes that when God speaks, there is but one thing to do. All consequences of obeying God can be left with him. If he is calling out a people to be an example of obedience to the world, through whom he may vindicate his name, and put to silence the adversary, the true believer wants to be among them. He counts not his life dear if he may honor God by showing confidence in him before the world.

Those that honor God he will honor. Soon the gates of glory will swing back, and "the righteous nation which keepeth the truth" will enter in. Isa. 26:1-4. They may be reproached for their obedience in this life, but it will not move them; for they know that very soon every adverse verdict will be silenced, and that, through their obedience, the Lord can take away the reproach of his people from off all the earth. Isa. 25:8. Then it will be seen that "blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22:14.—Present Truth.

The center of the whole universe is the cross of Calvary.—Maclaren.

The Second Coming of Christ the Hope of the Church

Six thousand years ago sin entered this world. At that time the robe of light and glory which had enshrouded Adam departed from him, and he began to realize the truthfulness of the words of God, "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

The death was of a twofold nature, being both spiritual and physical. The instant that he disobeyed God, he died to all righteousness, and as the result of being deprived of the tree of life he began to die physically. Gen. 2:17, margin.

In the following there was hope, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." When Eve gave birth to her first-born, she exclaimed, "I have gotten the man, the Lord" (Spurrell). She thought the promised seed had come. When Cain rose up and slew his brother, then darkness and gloom settled over her hopes.

The apostle to the Gentiles gives a short comment in saying, "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment: so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Heb. 9:27, 28. It is, first, death; second, judgment; and third, the second coming of the Lord. The hope of the church is to look for this coming. The same apostle declared, "Now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." So, in looking for the second coming of Christ, the thought is grasped that in the shedding of his blood upon the cross a cleansing fountain is opened to prepare the one who looks for his second coming, to reign in the kingdom of glory.

In this atoning work we notice four steps. Two have passed, and two are yet future. First, Christ's death upon the cross because man had sinned, and he must die. "His own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed." 1 Peter 2:24. An acceptance of these two steps, and the receiving of Christ's righteousness, is a pledge of what follows — salvation, at his second coming, if our faith grasps it, and we look for it.

And in this promise is more than we lost through Adam; for it not only destroys sin and the sinner, but restores the believer and saves him from the effects of sin. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." 1 John 3:8.

The restoration begins even in this life by restoring the image of God in the soul, and at the second coming of Christ the original image of God will be restored in the body. "As we have borne the image of the earthly, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly." 1 Cor. 15:48. When the first man came from the hand of his Maker, he bore both the spiritual and the physical image of God. "God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." Gen. 1:27.

This restoration has ever been the hope of the church. Job, who lived in the days of Moses, wrote, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth: and though after my skin worms destroy this body, yet in my flesh shall I see God: whom I shall see for myself, and mine eyes shall behold, and not another; though my reins be consumed within me." Job 19:25-27. The sweet psalmist of Israel exclaimed, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness." Ps. 17:15. The prophet Isaiah said, "He will swallow up death in victory, and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth, for the Lord hath spoken it." Again, "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." Isa. 25:8, 9; 26:19. Hosea takes up the strain: "I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes." Hosea 13:14. This has been the faith of God's people from the earliest times; and will be till the end.

The disciples were greatly disappointed when they saw their Lord helpless in death. But among the last words of Christ before his ascension were the following: "In my Father's house are many mansions; if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." John 14:2, 3. Thus from the first book in the Bible to the seer of Patmos is this hope echoed and re-echoed, that Christ will come again, and wipe from creation this blot of sin. And he that hath this hope will purify himself even as He is pure, and so will see him as he is and dwell with him forever, even forever and ever, on the earth made new.—S. N. Haskell, in Southern Watchman.

There Is a Vast Difference

Between being sorry for sin and being sorry you are "caught."

Between confessing your sins and confessing some other fellow's.

Between seeing your own faults and seeing some other person's.

Between conversion of the head and conversion of the heart.

Between being led by the Holy Spirit and led by your own imagination.

Between being persecuted for "right-

SOMETIMES the sun shines faintly
Through mist and haze;
Sometimes his light is shaded
For days and days.

Sometimes the rain-drops gather —
The leaves are still;
But rain and shine together
Perform his will.

Sometimes the tempest lowers —
The storm king raves;
My quaintly molded flowers
Fall to their graves.

Sometimes the stars are hidden
By leaden skies
That folding round, unbidden,
Bring tearful eyes.

Sometimes the chill wind blowing,
Creeps to the heart;
And all the sleet and snowing
Know well their part.

Far worse when faith is shaken
In fellow men;
When for the good partaken
There comes again

Base envy's arrant arrow
(The coward's dart),
Used only by the narrow,
Weak, shriveled heart.

And so the recreant water
Where bread was thrown,
Dashing in heartless clatter,
Returns alone!

Through storm and shadow singing,
And trusting still;
With heart and hand still clinging
To principle,

Brave, lofty, eagle spirits
Can toil and wait,
Pressing God-given merits
To heaven's gate;

Each duty well performing,
As seeing him
Invisible, who, yearning
Through ages dim,

For faith and love that look above
The gloom of night,
For motives pure that can endure
Till dawns the light —
Till comes the right!

The Workers Needed

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE work of God demands true, stanch, whole-hearted, spiritual-minded men, — men who are in earnest, and who have a clear understanding of what is truth,— men who are not fashioned after a worldly mold, but who realize that at this time Satan's power will be exercised through believers who have not held the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end. Men are needed who acknowledge Christ as their Master; who realize, as did Elijah and Jeremiah, that they hold their commission from God, and that they are accountable to him for the use they make of the talents entrusted to them. Men are needed who can speak intelligently of the sacredness and importance of the truth, — men who can point their fellow men to the needs of the present hour, — men who have an inspiring message to bear against perverted principles, and who watch for souls as they that must give an account.

To Every Man His Work

Men of varied gifts are needed. In the building of the tabernacle, different lines of work were assigned to different ones; but all worked under the supervision of God. The Lord gives men talents that will enable them to carry forward special lines of work. Each one is to be allowed to do the work for which he is fitted. It is the Lord's purpose that there shall be unity in diversity. He endows men with different degrees of capability, and then places them where they can do the work for which they are best adapted. The trust given to each worker is proportioned to his ability.

While traveling in Switzerland, we passed by a large building in process of erection. Many men were at work. Some were bringing stone from the quarry; others were squaring, shaping, and measuring these stones; and still others were placing them in the building. In charge of the different departments were experienced workers, whose part it was to see that the work was done with care and thoroughness. Over all the men, superintending the work on the entire structure, was the master builder.

United action and perfect order prevailed among the men, and the work moved forward rapidly. Every one was doing something. I was told that in the mountains other men were felling trees for the timber needed in the building, and floating them down the stream.

To me this was an object-lesson of the way in which the Lord's work is to be carried forward. In his work there are many different branches. Workers of different talents and capabilities are needed. Every one is to do his best, under the direction of the great Head of the church.

But there has been and still is great danger of one man meddling with another man's work, not from a desire to help him, but in order to confuse him. The Lord is not in this. He has not given to the one who is neglecting his own work the outlines of his brother's work. How can one improve the methods of his fellow worker by making suggestions and criticisms that only harass and discourage? If he will attend to his own work, the Great Teacher, though unseen, will take the oversight of the work that in his wisdom he has entrusted to other hands.

What was Christ's answer when Peter asked him concerning the work of John? "Lord, and what shall this man do?" Peter inquired. And Jesus answered, "If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me."

To-day many are making the mistake that Peter made. They are so busily engaged in trying to arrange their brother's work according to their ideas that they neglect the work God has placed in their own hands. They lose all sense of the responsibility resting on them.

He who attempts to unravel another man's work will find in his hands a tangle that he can not straighten. Let every man stand in his own place, doing faithfully the work committed to him. It is the questioning, criticizing spirit cherished that puts so many workers in hard places. Let men humble themselves before God, feeling that it is a sin to criticize and condemn. Satan has snares prepared for the feet of the one who is eager to place himself where God has not placed him.

How rapidly God's work would go forward if when a man received a work from God, he would put his own attention on the faithful performance of this work, and if the next man, receiving his task, would also do with humility and fidelity the work entrusted to him, perfecting it in the simplicity of true faith and earnest prayer.

Let men cease to complain and criticize, and let them do their appointed work. Let them be guided by the Lord. Then the different parts of the work of God, varied in kind, and brought together by Christ, the master workman, will be found to fit perfectly.

A Threefold Duty

To those bearing responsibilities in the work of God, this charge is given: "The elders which are among you I exhort, . . . Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock."

In this charge there is a threefold duty. "Feed the flock of God," — by giving them his word and setting them a right example. "Feed the flock of God," "taking the oversight thereof." having a personal care for the blood-bought heritage committed to your charge; "being ensamples to the flock," following Christ in self-denial and sacrifice, in the life revealing holiness to the Lord. All this must be done of a ready, cheerful mind, "neither as being lords over God's heritage," tyrannizing over them.

Let those who have been given responsibilities in the cause of God, who are set as guardians of their fellow workers, pray most earnestly for divine grace. Before they take up the work of the day, let them make a solemn covenant with God, promising him that they will keep watchful guard over their lips, not speaking harshly, but kindly, to those who come to them for direction. Let them remember that they themselves are ever to be under the control of the Spirit of God, rendering prompt and cheerful obedience to his commands.

Let them remember that they are living epistles, known and read of all men, and that because they are Christ's representatives, they are to be one with him, ever looking to him, and from him receiving strength for every conflict.

O, what a power a converted man, one who is transformed daily, can exert to bring blessing and gladness to those around him! Those who bear responsibilities in God's institutions are to grow in grace and in a knowledge of divine things. They are ever to remember that the talent of speech is entrusted to them by God for the help and blessing of others. It is left with them to decide whether they will speak words that will honor Christ, or words that will be a hindrance to those who hear. O, what a blessing are pleasant, sympathetic words,— words that strengthen and uplift! When asked a question, one should not answer abruptly, but kindly. The heart of the one who is asking may be sorely grieved by a hidden sorrow, which may not be told. Therefore let the words of the one addressed be always kind and sympathetic. By a few well-chosen, helpful words he may remove a heavy burden from a fellow worker's mind.

The Lips and the Life

Every true Christian, whether in high or humble station, is bound to be a preacher of the gospel. Remember that there are manifold ways of preaching Christ's gospel without choosing a text or addressing a congregation. Wilberforce and Lord Shaftesbury preached God's truth on the floor of the British Parliament; Dr. Wayland, Mark Hopkins, and James McCosh from the presidential chairs of a college; William Carvosso, the saintly Methodist class leader, brought hundreds of souls to Christ; and humble John Pounds, the shoemaker who baited poor street boys into his shop with a biscuit or a potato, was the founder of "Ragged Schools"! Halyburton, when laid aside by illness, made a sick-bed his pulpit. "It is the best one I was ever in," he said; "I am laid here for the very end that I may commend my Lord and Saviour."

A Christ-loving heart is the true ordination after all. "As ye go, preach!" "Let him that heareth say, Come!" These are the heavenly commissions to every one who has felt the love of Jesus in his soul. Knowing the gospel fixes at once the obligation to make it known to others. If I have drunk from the well of salvation, I am bound to call out, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." God has a vast variety of pulpits for his servants to preach from. Yours, my friend, may be in a Sunday-school teacher's seat or in the nursery or a mother's arm-chair; it may be at a work-bench or in a counting-room. You may preach by a Bible or a tract or a loaf of bread on a poor man's table, or by an earnest talk in a mission school, or a faithful pleading with an impenitent soul — any way that will give you a hold on a sinner's heart and draw him to the Saviour; any way so that he who heareth says, Come!

But there are other methods of saying "Come!" besides the voice or the printed page. Clean, consistent, Christly living is a mighty magnet to draw souls to Jesus. A godly example is the most powerful attractor toward heaven. Even the most eloquent pastor will find that his people look at him during the week to find out what he means on the Sabbath. Preaching piety on one day of the week does not counteract the practising of selfishness or cowardice or compromise with wrong on the other six days. If we say "Come!" with the lips, it is well; if we say "Come!" with the life, it is still better.

Bible religion made attractive to others is the most potent instrument for the conversion of souls. But few people are eloquent with the lips; yet every Christian may rise to the eloquence of a winsome example. If you can not utter a truth from the desk or the platform, you can live out the truth; that is the best preaching after all. No infidel can answer that. It draws silently but surely. It says Come! by showing the way. The "living epistle" never needs a translation or a commentary. It is in plain English, that a child can understand. An arrant skeptic once spent a day or two with Fenelon, and, on leaving, he said to him: "If I stay here much longer, I shall become a Christian in spite of myself." Stanley also confessed that when he left London for Africa in search of Livingstone, he was "as much prejudiced against religion as the worst infidel," but a few weeks of companionship with the heroic missionary so impressed him that he said: "I was converted by him, although he had not tried to do it."

More eloquent often than words is the silent beauty of conduct and of Christly character. A poor sick girl, for example, is wearing away her young life in a chamber of confinement. All day long and all the night for weary weeks and months the patient sufferer suffers on. But she bears the sorrows of her lot so meekly, she speaks of her discipline so sweetly, she exhibits such quiet trust in Him whose strong arm is underneath her, she lives out so much religion in that sick-room, that her worldly minded father and her fashion-loving sisters are deeply touched by it. Her example is a "means of grace" to that whole family; they get no better preaching from any pulpit. Her deep, tranquil joys beside the well of salvation are a constant voice speaking to them, "Come, come ye to this fountain!"

I might multiply illustrations of this truth that godly acts often speak more impressively than words. A God-fearing youth occupies the same room with two or three giddy scoffers — his fellow clerks or fellow students. Night and morning he bends the knee in prayer before them. They make game of him at first; but he prays on. The daily reminder of that fearless act of devotion awakens presently in the minds of his companions the memory that they, too, had once been taught to pray, but now have learned to scoff. Example is an arrow of conviction; they, too, "remember their God and are troubled."

In his day Rev. John Angall James, of Birmingham, was the most popular and influential of the evangelical preachers and writers in England. He said in one of his discourses: "If I have a right to consider myself a Christian, and if I have attained to any usefulness in the church of Christ, I owe it, in the way of instrumentality, to the sight of a companion who slept in the same room with me, and who always bent his knees in prayer on retiring to rest. That scene roused my slumbering conscience, and sent an arrow to my heart; for, though I had been religiously educated, I had neglected prayer, and had cast off the fear of God. My conversion soon followed, and my preparation for the work of the ministry. Nearly half a century has rolled away since then; but that little chamber and that praying youth are still present to my mind, and will never be forgotten even amid the splendors of heaven." . . .

Actions speak louder than words. If you wish to move others, move yourself! Cæsar never said to his troops "Ite!" He took the lead, and cried out "Venite!" Paul acknowledged the power of example when he said, "Be ye followers of me." Even the lips of our adorable Redeemer do not so move us as the study of his sublime and sinless life and the power of his self-sacrificing death. Godly living is what this poor ungodly world is dying for to-day. If the vital union of believers with their divine Head means anything, it means that Christ Jesus pours himself into the world through the lips and the lives of his representatives. "Ye are my witnesses." It is not that I live, exclaimed the hero-apostle, but it is Christ that liveth in me.— Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

The "Scattering" Ones

G. B. THOMPSON

In looking over a local conference paper recently, I noticed a report of certain work which was credited to the "scattering" Sabbath-keepers. The error in grammar suggested the thought as to whether or not this ought not really to be a fact. The Lord has committed to this people the most solemn truth ever committed to men. It is the world's final warning. When it ends, probation ends; the seven last plagues will be poured out, and the Lord will come to take from the midst of the rubbish of the earth his jewels, burnished in the furnace of trial. For nearly a half century this warning voice, bidding men to flee from the coming storm of wrath, has been sounding in the earth, and throughout the length and breadth of the world are those who have accepted the kindred truths of the message, and expect in a little while to see the King coming in all his radiant beauty.

The Nazarene

"So the Nazarene is dead,"
Caiaphas the high priest said.
"His wonder-working deeds are o'er,
He will trouble us no more.
May blasphemers such as he
Perish on the shameful tree,
And our holy temple's law
Be kept free from ev'ry flaw;
For the temple must have sway
Till heaven and earth shall pass away.
So the Nazarene is dead,"
Caiaphas the high priest said.

"So the Nazarene is dead,"
In his palace Pilate said.
"Good his words and just his life,
But the priests who stirred up strife
Said his followers would be
From imperial Rome set free.
Vain their plotting and their care —
All the yoke of Rome must bear —
Rome that will forever stand
Mighty lord of every land.
So the Nazarene is dead,"
In his palace Pilate said.

The temple now has passed away;
Ended Rome's imperial day;
But the Nazarene still lives,
Peace to myriad souls he gives,
Lives in gentle words and deeds,
In all that meets the spirit's needs,
And the cross on which he died
By his death is sanctified;
Hosts in many lands acclaim
The crucified One by his name;
In their faithful hearts are seen
The ever-living Nazarene.
Priest and Pilate both have said
That the Nazarene is dead.
False their wisdom, false their lore —
He lives now and evermore.

Genuine Conversion

MRS. E. G. WHITE

In order to be saved, we must know by experience the meaning of true conversion. It is a fearful mistake for men and women to go on day by day, professing to be Christians, yet having no right to the name. In God's sight, profession is nothing, position is nothing. He asks, Is the life in harmony with my precepts?

There are many who suppose that they are converted, but who are not able to bear the test of character presented in the Word of God. Sad will it be, in the day when every man is rewarded according to his works, for those who can not bear this test.

Conversion is a change of heart, a turning from unrighteousness to righteousness. Relying upon the merits of Christ, exercising true faith in him, the repentant sinner receives pardon for sin. As he ceases to do evil, and learns to do well, he grows in grace and in the knowledge of God. He sees that in order to follow Jesus he must separate from the world, and, after counting the cost, he looks upon all as loss if he may but win Christ. He enlists in his army, and bravely and cheerfully engages in the warfare, fighting against natural inclinations and selfish desires, and bringing the will into subjection to the will of Christ. Daily he seeks the Lord for grace, and he is strengthened and helped. Self once reigned in his heart, and worldly pleasure was his delight. Now self is dethroned, and God reigns supreme. His life reveals the fruit of righteousness. The sins he once loved he now hates. Firmly and resolutely he follows in the path of holiness. This is genuine conversion.

In the lives of many of those whose names are on the church books there has been no genuine change. The truth has been kept in the outer court. There has been no genuine conversion, no positive work of grace done in the heart. Their desire to do God's will is based upon their own inclination, not upon the deep conviction of the Holy Spirit. Their conduct is not brought into harmony with the law of God. They profess to accept Christ as their Saviour, but they do not believe that he will give them power to overcome their sins. They have not a personal acquaintance with a living Saviour, and their characters reveal many blemishes.

Many a one who looks at himself in the divine mirror, and is convinced that his life is not what it ought to be, fails to make the needed change. He goes his way, and forgets his defects. He may profess to be a follower of Christ, but what does this avail if his character has undergone no change, if the Holy Spirit has not wrought upon his heart? The work done has been superficial. Self is retained in his life. He is not a partaker of the divine nature. He may talk of God and pray to God, but his life reveals that he is working against God.

Let us not forget that in his conversion and sanctification, man must co-operate with God. "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling," the Word declares; "for it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Man can not transform himself by the exercise of his will. He possesses no power by which this change may be effected. The renewing energy must come from God. The change can be made only by the Holy Spirit. He who would be saved, high or low, rich or poor, must submit to the working of this power.

As the leaven, when mingled with the meal, works from within outward, so it is by the renewing of the heart that the grace of God works to transform the life. No mere external change is sufficient to bring us into harmony with God. There are many who try to reform by correcting this bad habit or that bad habit, and they hope in this way to become Christians, but they are beginning in the wrong place. Our first work is with the heart.

The great truth of the conversion of the heart by the Holy Spirit is presented in Christ's words to Nicodemus: "Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born from above, he can not see the kingdom of God. . . . That which is born of the flesh is flesh; and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but canst not tell whence it cometh, and whither it goeth: so is every one that is born of the Spirit."

The leaven of truth works secretly, silently, steadily, to transform the soul. The natural inclinations are softened and subdued. New thoughts, new feelings, new motives, are implanted. A new standard of character is set up,— the life of Christ. The mind is changed; the faculties are aroused to action in new lines. Man is not endowed with new faculties, but the faculties he has are sanctified. The conscience is awakened.

The Scriptures are the great agency in this transformation of character. Christ prayed, "Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth." If studied and obeyed, the word of God works in the heart, subduing every unholy attribute. The Holy Spirit comes to convict of sin, and the faith that springs up in the heart works by love to Christ, conforming us, body, soul, and spirit, to his will.

A man sees his danger. He sees that he needs a change of character, a change of heart. He is stirred; his fears are aroused. The Spirit of God is working in him, and with fear and trembling he works for himself, seeking to find out his defects of character, and to see what he can do to bring about the needed change in his life. His heart is humbled. By confession and repentance he shows the sincerity of his desire to reform. He confesses his sins to God, and if he has injured any one, he confesses the wrong to the one he has injured. While God is working, the sinner, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, works out that which God is working in mind and heart. He acts in harmony with the Spirit's working, and his conversion is genuine.

The nobility and dignity of the man increase as he takes his position against the wily foe, who for so many years has kept him in slavery. He feels a holy indignation arising within him as he thinks that for so long he has been Satan's bond-slave, allowing the enemy to lead him to refuse to acknowledge his best friend.

Let the sinner co-operate with his Redeemer to secure his liberty. Let him be assured that unseen heavenly agencies are working in his behalf. Dear souls in doubt and discouragement, pray for the courage and strength that Christ waits to give you. He has been seeking for you. He longs to have you feel your need of his help. He will reach out his hand to grasp the hand stretched out for aid. He declares, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out." Let mind and heart be enlisted in the warfare against sin. Let your heart soften as you think of how long you have chosen to serve your bitterest foe, while you turned from Him who gave his life for you, who loves you, and who will accept you as his, though you are sinners. Step out from under the rebel flag, and take your stand under the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel.

He who would build up a strong, symmetrical character, must give all and do all for Christ. The Redeemer will not accept divided service. Daily he must learn the meaning of self-surrender. He must study the Word of God, getting its meaning and obeying its precepts. Thus he may reach the highest standard of Christian excellence. There is no limit to the spiritual advancement that he may make if he is a partaker of the divine nature. Day by day God works in him, perfecting the character that is to stand in the day of final test. Each day of his life he ministers to others. The light that is in him shines forth, and stills the strife of tongues. Day by day he is working out before men and angels a vast, sublime experiment, showing what the gospel can do for fallen human beings.

Let us not spare ourselves, but carry forward in earnest the work of reform that must be done in our lives. Let us crucify self. Unholy habits will clamor for the mastery, but in the name and through the power of Jesus we may conquer. To him who daily seeks to keep his heart with all diligence, the promise is given, "Neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

"Thus saith the Lord, the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One, to him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, . . . Kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the Lord that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and he shall choose thee." God himself is "the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus." And "whom he justified, them he also glorified." Great as is the shame and degradation through sin, even greater will be the honor and exaltation through redeeming love. To human beings, striving for conformity to the divine image, there is imparted an outlay of heaven's treasure, an excellency of power that will place them higher than even the angels who have never fallen.

Gave Himself for Others

A MORAVIAN Christian heard of the sufferings of the West India slaves, and desired to be a missionary to them; but when he reached them, he found they were driven to the field so early and came home so late there was no life or strength in them to listen to his instructions; neither did they believe that any man whose face was white had a heart that was other than black, and they would not listen to him, and he found, at last, that there was no way to preach to them unless he suffered with them himself. He sold himself, and was driven afield with them, that while he suffered and toiled as they did, he might have opportunity to preach to them the unsearchable riches of Christ.

Now, I ask if there reigns a king upon his throne that is so lordly, so large a man, as that poor, sweating Moravian, who for the sake of serving and saving these poor, miserable, dying slaves in the field, sold himself into like estate to preach the riches of Christ? The largest conception of manhood is that which knows how to take itself as though of no consequence to those to whom it may make itself an offering, a power, an instruction.— Selected.

The Temple of God in Heaven

"THE temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament." Rev. 11:19. Three facts are here stated:—

1. There is a temple in heaven. To this fact there is an abundance of other testimony in the Scriptures. "The Lord is in his holy temple, the Lord's throne is in heaven." Ps. 11:4. "The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens; and his kingdom ruleth over all." Ps. 103:19. "He hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary; from heaven did the Lord behold the earth." Ps. 102:19. "A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary." Jer. 17:12. "Of the things which we have spoken this is the sum: We have such an High Priest, who is set on the right hand of the throne of the Majesty in the heavens, a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." Heb. 8:1, 2.

2. In the earthly sanctuary there were two apartments. In the second was "the golden censer, and the ark of the covenant overlaid round about with gold." Heb. 9:4. In the ark were placed the two tables of stone. They were called "tables of testimony." Ex. 31:18. The cover of the ark was the mercy-seat. Here were two cherubim, one on either end, and above the mercy-seat, between the cherubim, was the Shekinah, representing God in heaven.

3. At a particular time, under the sounding of the seventh trumpet, "the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testimony." The prophet does not say, "I saw," but "there was seen." Who saw?—Those living at this particular time. After the passing of the time in 1844, there was, by many of those who were looking for the Lord, a searching of the Scriptures as never before, to ascertain wherein lay their mistake. The more they searched, the more convinced they were that there was no mistake in the reckoning of the prophetic periods, the twenty-three hundred years that ended in 1844. Their enemies acknowledged this to be their strongest point. The date of their starting-point, 457 B. C., was established by more than twenty eclipses.

So they turned their attention to the subject of the sanctuary. They had reasoned that the sanctuary was this earth, and the cleansing of it would be by fire when the Lord came. And so with this view, they made Dan. 8:14 read, "Unto two thousand three hundred days, then the Lord will come."

Imagine their surprise when they found the term "sanctuary" occurring one hundred and forty-seven times in the Bible, and in no single instance was it applied to this earth or to the church. The church is to be the habitation of God through the Spirit, and individuals are the spiritual temple of the Lord. But the personal God of the Bible dwells in heaven, between the cherubim. Ps. 99:1. His throne consists of real angels possessing backs, wings, and hands. Ezekiel 1; Ps. 18:10. "All thy commandments are righteousness." Ps. 119:172. "Righteousness and judgment are the habitation of his throne." Ps. 97:2. Under the throne of Jehovah in the heavenly sanctuary are the ten commandments.

When those looking for Christ to come saw that there was a heavenly sanctuary, and that there was an open door in the most holy place in the heavenly sanctuary, they also saw that the law could no more be changed than could the character of God, and that the ten commandments were an outward expression of his character. That led them to look for Scriptural authority for the observance of the first day of the week as the Sabbath. In this they were as much disappointed as in their idea of the sanctuary. They read, "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week" (Matt. 28:1), and that the Sabbath "was past" when the first day came. Mark 16:1, 2. They also found that the disciples returned from the tomb, and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment (Luke 23:56), and then came, upon the first day of the week, to do the work they refrained from doing on the Sabbath day. Luke 24:1.

Upon further investigation of this subject they found that the cleansing of the sanctuary, in the Mosaic law, was by the blood of animals (Leviticus 16); also that the sanctuary in heaven was to be cleansed by better blood than that of animals, even by the precious blood of Christ. Heb. 9:22-24. The cleansing was to rid the sanctuary of the confessed sins of those who had broken God's law, for sin is the transgression of the law. 1 John 3:4. All this led them up to the observance of the Bible Sabbath.

Worshiping the Beast

The most solemn warning in the Bible is contained in the message of Rev. 14:9-12. It warns against worshiping the beast and his image. The beast-worship is substituting other commandments for the commandments of God. The last work of Christ is to make a final disposition of sin, Satan, and sinners. To say that God does not exist as a person in heaven would be to deny the atonement, and remove the foundation principle of the gospel of Jesus

The Real Life

GAL. 2:20

THE life we live is not our own,
  Self never more can please us;
We cast down self from off the throne,
  And give that throne to Jesus.
We give to him the mind and will,
  And he from bondage frees us,
And while we love and trust him still,
  The One who reigns is Jesus.

COL. 1:27

Would'st thou this wondrous secret learn,
  It means full consecration,
From every sin repentant turn,
  And ask his full salvation.
He will come in and keep from sin,
  If thou be young or hoary,
And thus a new life will begin,
  'Tis Christ "the hope of glory."

2 COR. 4:10, 11

That Christ may daily in us live
  We lay self on the altar;
To him our best affections give,
  Nor from his guidance falter.
Thus walking daily in the light,
  With him who ever sees us,
That life is pleasing in his sight;
  In mortal flesh—'tis Jesus.

The Work in Washington

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE Lord calls upon his people in every State in America to come up to his help in the establishment of his work in Washington. Those who have this work in hand are to show no lack of interest in it. And our people are to remember that for the present the work in Washington is to be our first interest. There are many kinds of work to be carried forward in different places; but our first interest just now is our work at the capital of our nation.

We are to center our minds for the present on the work that needs to be done at Washington. Daily our petitions are to ascend to heaven for the success of this work, that it may move forward rapidly. The Lord of hosts gave special direction that the publishing work done in Battle Creek should be transferred to Washington. The directions were so plain that we could see that there must be no delay. And since we have moved forward in obedience to this word, we have had evidence that the Lord has prepared the way at every step for the establishment of important interests at Washington. Thus far he has helped us in a way that leaves no room for any one to doubt or question. (3)

Let the work in Washington move forward. Let every one act his part in self-denial and self-sacrifice. Our people are not to wait for more appeals, but are (1) to lay right hold of the work, making those things which appear impossibilities, possibilities. Let each one ask himself, Has not the Lord entrusted me with means for the advancement of his cause? Has he not bidden his servants in Washington arise and build? Shall I, at this time of great importance, withhold my means, which God asks me to invest in raising up memorials for him?

Let us be honest with the Lord. All the blessings that we enjoy come from him; and if he has entrusted us with the talent of means, that we may help to do his work, shall we hold back? Shall we say, No, Lord; my children would not be pleased, and therefore I shall venture to disobey God, burying his talent in the earth?

There should be no delay. The cause of God demands your assistance. We ask you, as the Lord's stewards, to put his means into circulation, to provide facilities by which many will have the (2) opportunity of learning what is truth.

The temptation may come to you to invest your money in land. Perhaps your friends will advise you to do this. But is there not a better way of investing your means? Have you not been bought with a price? Has not your money been entrusted to you to be traded upon for him? Can you not see that he wants you to use your means in helping to build meeting-houses, in helping to establish sanitariums, where the sick shall receive physical and spiritual healing, and in helping to start schools, in which the youth shall be trained for service, that workers may be sent to all parts of the world?

God himself originates the plans for the advancement of his work, and he has provided his people with a surplus of means, that when he calls for help, they may cheerfully respond. If they will be faithful in bringing to his treasury the means lent them, his work will make rapid advancement. Many souls will be won to the truth, and the day of Christ's coming will be hastened.

God will prepare the way before his faithful people, and will greatly bless them. The righteousness of Christ will go before them, and the glory of God will be their rearward. There will be joy in the heavenly courts, and joy, pure, holy joy, will fill the hearts of the workers. To save perishing souls, they are willing to spend and be spent. Their hearts are filled with gratitude and thanksgiving. The consciousness of God's love purifies and ennobles their experience, enriching and strengthening them. The grace of heaven is revealed in the conquests achieved in winning souls to Christ.

So God's work in this world is to be carried forward. The church here below is to serve the Lord with self-denial and self-sacrifice, and the most glorious triumphs are to be won.

God's word to his workers in Washington is, "Arise and build;" and his word to his people in all the conferences is, "Strengthen the hands of the builders." The work in Washington is to advance in straight lines, without delay or hindrance. Let it not be kept back for lack of means. The workers in Washington will advance with steadfast courage just as fast as the Lord's people will furnish them with means. Let every church in every place act its part cheerfully and willingly.

I know that the people of God desire to act their part nobly in advancing his work in the world. God extends his favor to us daily, and we are to regard it as a privilege to show that we are in harmony with the work now being done at the capital of our nation. We have no time to lose. The bounty that God daily bestows upon us makes a direct and forcible appeal to us to respond to the goodness and love of God by placing all that we have and are upon the altar of sacrifice. We must be co-laborers with God. He calls upon us to engage in his work, to return to him a part of that which he has bestowed upon us. He has made us his helping hand. Our self-denying benevolence, our willing offerings, are to give evidence that the truth has been doing its work upon our hearts.

Natural Laws

G. B. THOMPSON

IT is not a new thing for the Word of God to be arraigned at the tribunal of human criticism. The shore of time is strewn with these rudderless wrecks which have gone to pieces on the impregnable rock of God's Word. But that the Bible should be betrayed in the house of its professed friends is somewhat new, and a sight which is unspeakably sad. Through what is called "higher criticism" the statements of the Holy Scripture are being subjected to a scrutiny which is illuminated only by the uncertain light of mortal wisdom; and that which can not be explained through the deductions of human philosophy, and accounted for in harmony with what they know about the so-called "natural," or "fixed," laws is rejected as not inspired. The trend of much of the theological teaching of the present time is to find out and understand God through a study of these "fixed laws," and limit his operations in harmony with the little which they understand in reference to these laws.

But the effort is vain. As well might we expect to ascend into heaven by going down into a bottomless pit, as to search out the infinite God through the mist and fog of human reason. From this has resulted all the heathenism which has darkened the earth since the fall of man. Forgetting that God is incomprehensible and omnipotent, and professing through human wisdom to find him out, man's foolish heart was darkened, and his imaginations becoming wicked and vain, he "changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and to four-footed beasts, and creeping things." And why not? for a God whom we can fully understand through a study of his works is no greater a being than ourselves; and having formed in our minds such a conception of Deity, it is but a step further to formulate our idea of him into an image, and worship it.

God can be known to man only by a revelation which is received by faith. We can never find him by reason. His ways are past finding out, and his wonderful acts can never be explained by a study of "fixed laws." The Lord is not circumscribed in his workings by any such laws. He is the author of all law, and can work independent of, and apparently contrary to, any law known to man. All that God does is incomprehensible, and consequently beyond the range of man's investigation.

(1) (2) (3)
Stewardship, p. 44; 44-45; LS 398

The God of the Bible works "contrary to nature." It is not natural for a sea to divide, and form a solid wall on either side of a path while a nation marches through its midst. But it did this once when the hosts of Israel came out of Egypt. It is according to "fixed law" for the waters of a swollen stream to flow on without a moment's pause, but this natural law was interrupted once at the Jordan when the children of Israel entered Canaan. It seems to be natural for fire to devour wood, but Moses upon a certain occasion witnessed the strange sight of a bush in the flames, yet it was not consumed. The Hebrew worthies lived in the fiery furnace unharmed, their clothing not even being burned, though the fire destroyed those who cast them in. Men erect in large cities immense structures from seemingly indestructible material, and call them "fire proof." According to "natural law" they are, but in the days of Elijah fire came down from heaven and burned up both water and stone. The sun in the days of Joshua was stayed in the heavens for the space of a whole day, but no disarrangement of the "fixed laws" which govern the planetary system has ever been discovered and reported through astronomical science as a result of this. And in the days of Hezekiah the sun not only stopped, but it went back "ten degrees" in the heavens. Isa. 38:8. But we do not find that this reversal of the workings of the "fixed laws" threw the great clock of the heavens out of time a single second. The machinery of the universe is controlled by its Architect, and he is not bound or hampered in his supernatural operations by any unchangeable law.

It is through faith that we understand, and it is much better to walk in its sunlight than to wander in the haze and gloom of human speculation.

Your Sins Forgiven

ANTHONY BEANS

"Thy sins be forgiven thee." Whose sins? — "Thy sins" (your sins). Yes, dear reader, the Lord says this to you, "Thy sins be forgiven thee." Just as surely as you have taken the Bible steps by which you become a member of heaven's family, just so surely this welcome message of peace and pardon is spoken to you, and it is your privilege to believe and accept it. This is a wonderful declaration of peace that comes from the "God of all peace," to your soul.

The steps by which we may secure the forgiveness of our sins, are briefly outlined in 1 John 1:9: "If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." "He that covereth his sins shall not prosper; but whoso confesseth and forsaketh them shall have mercy." Prov. 28:13.

When will the Lord do this? When is the Lord "faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness"? — Just as soon as we confess and forsake them, and believe that the Lord does with them what he says he will do, that moment our sins are forgiven. Praise the Lord! We are not required to serve a long sentence "at hard labor" behind dreary prison bars before we can realize the blessedness of sins forgiven.

But one says, "I do not feel that my sins are forgiven." You do not need to feel it, necessarily. Your sins are forgiven because God, who is fully able and willing, says it, and his saying so makes it so in your case and mine as soon as we believe. It matters little whether we feel it or not. The feeling that we look so much for and crave in making our voyage over life's sea is simply the harmonious sound that always follows pure belief in God's word, a part of which says, "Son, be of good cheer; thy sins be forgiven thee." Matt. 9:2.

Present Truth

"Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth." 2 Peter 1:12. Peter, an apostle of Jesus Christ, was a leading man among the twelve apostles left to guide the infant church after the Saviour ascended to heaven.

In the words above quoted he uses this term "present truth," which is nowhere else found in the Bible, to designate the system of doctrine which Christ communicated to the apostles to be preached in all the world, to every creature. It was designed to save from their sins in this world, and eternally in the kingdom of glory, all who would accept and obey it.

There is something striking about this term "present truth." It contains a beautiful, forceful thought. Why did not Peter merely use the term "truth"? Would that not have been sufficiently explicit? — It seems not, or he would not have added the word "present." That addition must have involved an additional thought. It must have made his meaning more explicit. Every word of God has its importance. There is a great depth of meaning in the divine words of inspiration.

The True Significance of "Present Truth"

All truth is valuable. There is an unmeasurable difference of value between truth and error. There are many truths that are eternal. God is the Creator of all things; Christ is his only begotten Son. His word is ever true. These and other doctrines like them always have been true, and always will be true.

There are other truths that apply only to special periods. Before the proper time when they have their application, they could not have been truly proclaimed. Noah was told by God to proclaim that a flood of waters was to come and drown all that generation. The result demonstrated the truthfulness of that prediction. Could Adam, Seth, or Enoch have preached such a message to the generation in which they lived? — Certainly not. Could it have been preached by any generation since the flood, and have been true? — O, no. But it was "present truth" to the antidiluvians.

During his whole ministry Jeremiah proclaimed the destruction of Jerusalem to the generation then living. It was a true prediction; it was present truth to that generation; but it could not have been true before or since.

For four thousand years predictions were made that the Messiah would come and open a way for the sinner to be saved from the wrath to come. God's people looked for him all through those ages; but there was no time during that long period when any one could truly say he had come till the Babe of Bethlehem was cradled in the manger.

He came, he lived, he died on Calvary, and with his expiring breath he cried with a loud voice, "It is finished." From that time on, Peter and all the believers could truly say, He has brought salvation to fallen man. The great truths of the glorious gospel of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ have been fully proclaimed to the world.

Peter, speaking to the believers who had been made fully acquainted with these grand truths, could truly say, "Ye know them, and are fully established in the present truth." The loving disciples went forth in the power of God, and in thirty years Paul could say they were "grounded and settled" in "the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature which is under heaven." Col. 1:23. It was indeed a grand and glorious "present truth."

Has God a "Present Truth" for Our Age?

Most assuredly he has. What is it? — The Lord is coming the second time, without sin unto salvation. His coming is near, even at the doors.

In all parts of the world evidences of the near approach of the "King of kings, and Lord of lords" are to be seen. Floods of evidences God's Word gives us to show that it is near, and hasteth greatly.

Surely, reasoning from analogy, if God warned the world of a flood, of the destruction of Sodom and the cities of the plain, of Christ's first coming, of the two destructions of Jerusalem, and even warned the Gentile, heathen Ninevites through Jonah, he will warn the world and his own people of the final destruction of the world by fire.

This grand announcement is the present truth for this age. That will be the greatest event that ever occurred, or

The Value of Christlike Love

MRS. E. G. WHITE

i) The Lord desires me to call the attention of his people to the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. Read this chapter every day, and from it obtain comfort and strength. Learn from it the value that God places on sanctified, heaven-born love, and let the lesson that it teaches come home to your hearts. Learn that Christlike love is of heavenly birth, and that without it all other qualifications are worthless.

"If I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, but have not love," Paul declares, "I am become sounding brass, or a clanging cymbal. And if I have the gift of prophecy, and know all mysteries and all knowledge; and if I have all faith, so as to remove mountains, but have not love, I am nothing. And if I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and if I give my body to be burned, but have not love, it profiteth me nothing."

(2) How beautiful the earth was when it came from the Creator's hand! God presented before the universe a world in which even his all-seeing eye could find no spot or stain. Each part of the creation occupied the part assigned to it, and answered the purpose for which it was created. Peace and holy joy filled the earth. There was no confusion, no clashing. There was no disease to afflict man or beast, and the vegetable kingdom was without taint or corruption. God looked upon the work of his hands, wrought out by Christ, and pronounced it "very good." He looked upon a perfect world, in which there was no sin, no imperfection.

But a change came. Satan tempted Adam, and he fell. He who in heaven had become disloyal and had been cast out, made lying reports of God to the beings he had created, and they believed his lie. Sin entered the world, and death by sin. The consequences of our first parents' disloyalty we now have to meet as we work for God, and until the close of this earth's history our labors will become more and more trying.

I entreat the members of our churches not to make the work more trying than it necessarily is by watching one another for a word or an act upon which to comment unfavorably. Let them, if a report is brought to them about some one, make it a rule to do just as Christ has said should be done in such cases. Let them follow the counsel of the Great Teacher, who gave his life for the life of the world. His directions are plain. "If thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift." "Tell him his fault between thee and him alone." Without delay make every effort to heal the wrong that exists. Do not, by speaking unwise words, give the enemy opportunity to arouse suspicion and evil-surmising in the mind of your brother. Be determined to do all in your power to make the wrong right. Do not tell to a third person the story of the difficulty. Go directly to the one who has erred, and "tell him his fault between thee and him alone." Go to him, not to condemn, but to seek for reconciliation, because Christ has told you to love one another as he has loved you.

Our gifts, our prayers, are not acceptable to God while we leave this duty undone, and let the poison of envy and evil-surmising take possession of our souls, to destroy our union and happiness. O, how much unhappiness would be saved, how many evil thoughts would be quenched, if believers would take up the work that Christ has said must be done to prevent evil speaking! We pray, "Forgive us our trespasses, as we forgive those that trespass against us." Do we do our part to remove every stumbling-block from before the feet of our brother? Too often our prayers are hindered by our pride of heart, by our refusal to confess faults and to remove wrong impressions. Let us remember that our prayers are not acceptable to God while we suffer a fellow worker to misapprehend us. If we are not to blame for the misunderstanding that exists, we can, perhaps, make an explanation that will remove the misunderstanding. If we are to blame, if we have left a wrong impression on a brother's mind, we are certainly under obligation to do all in our power to remove this impression.

Let the suspicious ones, who think and speak evil of their brethren, remember that they are doing the devil's drudgery. Let every one pass over little differences and mistakes without comment. Do not magnify the small mistakes made by some one, but think of the good that is in him. Each time mistakes are thought of and talked about, they grow larger. A mountain is made out of a molehill. Ill-feeling and a lack of confidence are the result.

To many these words are applicable: "Why beholdest thou the mote that is in thy brother's eye, but considerest not the beam that is in thine own eye? Or how wilt thou say to thy brother, Let me pull out the mote out of thine eye; and, behold, a beam is in thine own eye? Thou hypocrite, first cast out the beam out of thine own eye; and then shalt thou see clearly to cast out the mote out of thy brother's eye."

So great is the intemperance in speech that much instruction has been given on this subject by the Great Teacher. He has given special directions for the discipline of the tongue. Study and obey these directions. Check the harsh words that, if spoken, would create difference and alienation. Speak words that will cement hearts, not estrange them,— words that will heal, not wound. When difficulties arise among church-members, let them be cleared away before the Sabbath comes. This should be regarded as a Christian duty by every church-member. "Let the peace of God rule in your hearts, . . . and be ye thankful." Are you troubled and perplexed? Sweep away the rubbish that has been accumulating before the door of the heart, and open the door, inviting Jesus to come in and abide as an honored guest. Bring peace and comfort into your own heart and the hearts of others. This is most blessed missionary work.

The Lord has instructed me to say to his people, Work for perfection. Do nothing that will cause disaffection to spring up in hearts. Do not serve the enemy. Overcome your inclination to find fault and condemn. Give no place to him whose delight it is to accuse. Remember, my beloved brethren and sisters, that you are pleasing and helping Satan by every word you utter that disparages another.

I greatly desire that you shall follow the directions that Christ has laid down. As you do this, he will certainly help you to adjust the difficulties that exist. He will help you not to make dissension by magnifying little mistakes. The light that the Lord has given me is that he will greatly bless his people, if they will not think or speak evil of one another, but go directly to the one they think is in the wrong, and in a kind, compassionate manner point out his mistake. May the Lord help those who have learned to criticize, to learn to think no evil, and to speak only good words,— words of comfort and healing. Then they will rejoice; for they will have evidence that they are laborers together with God.

Christ loved the church, "and gave himself for it; that he might sanctify and cleanse it with the washing of water by the word, that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing; but that it should be holy, and without blemish."

My brethren and sisters, I beseech you to give diligent heed to these words, because the day of the Lord is right upon us. You have no time to lose. Do not neglect the word of God to you.

"We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain. (For he saith,

entary, Vol. 6 p. 1091

(2)
The Faith I Live By, p. 37

I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in the day of salvation have I succored thee.)"

Will you not, as servants of the Most High God, give heed to these words? Will you not respond to God's mercy and compassion and love toward you by loving one another as Christ has loved you?

"Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation. Giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed." Remember that when you speak words that disparage one another, the ministry is blamed. The lack of power in the church is charged to the ministry, when often it is directly chargeable to the members, because they do not mix faith with their hearing.

The ministers are to be men of faith, men who give expression to the pure love of God. And the members are to give no offense in anything, "that the ministry be not blamed." No unkind dealing or harsh words are to find a place in their experience.

"In all things approving ourselves as the ministers of God, in much patience, in afflictions, in necessities, in distresses, in stripes, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watchings, in fastings." We should be preparing for these things; for they will come. Those who share in Christ's glory must share in his sufferings.

May the Lord lead every minister and every lay member to turn to him with full purpose of heart, and make diligent work for repentance. Thus only can they obtain the sanctification of the Spirit. How true are the words of Paul: "Ye are not straightened in us, but ye are straightened in your own affections." Many complain of others because their own hearts are not in unity with the Spirit of God. When self is crucified, Christ will take possession of the soul-temple.

"Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? and what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters."

"Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God." Let every one humble his heart before God, and make a surrender of body, soul, and spirit to him, that he may give his people his rich grace abundantly. Let the heart be closed against selfishness. Let us follow the example of Christ. If we fail of doing this, we shall fail of receiving a welcome into the city of God. He who continues to be a transgressor of the law of God, even though he break but one precept, can have no place in the royal family.

I entreat those who have given so much time to talking of the faults of others, to cease this cruel work, and obey the words, "Search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life." The divine directory, God's holy Word, is in our hands. In the toil of business and the unceasing activity of daily life, this Word is to be our guide. This Word is appreciated by him who is striving to overcome. It is to him as a pillar of cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night.

Let God's people set a perfect example, honoring Christ in every place, in every difficulty following his directions. Then at last they will be received into the family of the redeemed, and there will be given unto them a crown of immortal life.

Is Our Work Disintegrating?

I. H. EVANS

How many times we have heard it said within the last eighteen months, "It looks to me as though everything was going to pieces," or "I think our future is pretty dark," or again, "I have lost my courage. I think we are disintegrating, and will soon go to pieces!"

Now remember, no one ever makes such remarks until he, himself, is in the dark, when he at once concludes that every one else must be in the same condition.

There are many souls losing their hold on God, and wrecking their faith in the final success of this work. But is this any argument that the cause of God is not onward?— None, whatever.

Long have we known that the time must come when many who once loved the truth and had even sacrificed for its advancement, would lose their zeal, and become lukewarm,—"neither cold nor hot." What means the Laodicean message, if it does not apply to such times as we are now entering? We expect that many will give up the truth, and even become our bitterest opposers, but all this signifies nothing as regards the progress of God's work. Man may often erect barriers against the truth, but truth will triumph still.

Nor is the third angel's message losing its power to affect hearts. It may not stir our own hearts as it once did, but that may signify that our hearts are hardened, and that we have lost our first love, instead of the power of the message being lessened. Never in the history of our work has there been such marked progress along all lines, as during the last ten years.

Look at ten years of growth in this work, and then ask the question, Is God's work stagnated, or has my own heart become paralyzed?

In 1893, our reported total membership was 37,404. In 1903, just ten years later, our reported membership was 77,736 — a gain in ten years, of 40,332. Or, in other words, we had gained in ten years 2,928 more Sabbath-keepers than we had gained during all our previous existence. Is that stagnation and death? — Nay, verily; it is growth, not equal to our desires, but a growth hardly equaled in per cent by any other denomination.

In 1893, our offerings for mission work had averaged for the previous five years, $70,240.72. In the five years preceding 1903, our offerings for mission work averaged $131,166.96, while in the 1903 donation, it reached a grand total of $184,026.58.

Our annual offering for 1903 exceeded the high-water mark of all other years, by more than $10,000.

In 1892, the total tithe of all our people aggregated $302,310.19, while in 1902, it reached $643,747.83.

Besides this, look at the institutions planted during the last ten years. When did the church-school work make its growth? — During the last ten years. When did our conference schools, which are now in nearly every conference, get started? — During the past decade. When did our numerous sanitariums, vegetarian restaurants, etc., spring up? — Nearly all, except the Battle Creek and St. Helena Sanitariums, have sprung up within ten years.

Look at the mission fields we have entered during this time. All of South Africa except Cape Colony, Nyassaland, the Gold Coast, German East Africa, Egypt, Palestine, Syria, India, China, Japan and nearly all the Pacific Islands, South America, West Indies from Bermuda to Guiana, Central America, Mexico, Alaska, Manitoba, and nearly all of our mission stations outside of portions of Europe, have been entered during the past ten years. Never has there been such progress in all lines of the work as we can now behold. Nearly every nation of earth is now opened to the truth, and many are pleading for help.

Has the third angel's message lost its power? Never was it so strong to win souls as now. Behold! brethren, the whole mount is aflame with the chariots of God's messengers. The battle cry is "Onward; God's message to all the world!" Shall we see such overwhelming evidences of God's leading, and still remain a prisoner in doubting castle? Are we to see with our eyes the "fine flour and the barley sold for a shekel," but not taste its sweetness ourselves?

If the next ten years sees the same marked progress, and there is an equal increase in membership, there will be living on earth then more than 144,000 Seventh-day Adventists, scattered among the nations of earth. Our tithes will then have reached over $1,280,000 a year, while our offerings will have reached nearly half a million dollars per annum.

Is it a time now to sit in ease and quietness, or shall we join the workers' ranks, and become one of the Lord's host that goes up to possess the goodly land?

"In Every Thing Give Thanks"

MARY MARTIN MORSE

FOR the bee with his song from the clover,
The bird mounting up to the sky;
For the heavens that lovingly hover
O'er such sinners as you and I;

For the rhythm we hear in the river,
And the pictures we see in the clouds,—
The day coming ever and ever
From the mantle that night enshrouds;

For the lofty dome bespangled
With its wondrous worlds of light,
That tell of a halcyon day-dawn,
"No weeping," and "no more night;"

For friendship's sacred chalice,
And the scepter of King Truth;
For the crown of loving-kindness,
That rests on age and youth;

For the fairest flowers oft hidden
In the forest's light so dim,
And rain-drops by God's own bidding
That whisper of love from him;

For the echoes that, repeating,
Life's sweetest strains prolong,
The ocean that chanteth ever,
And the brooklet's ceaseless song;

For the piles of rock ascending,
Like Babel's tower, so high,
And the river that in wending,
Enmirrors earth and sky;

For the belfry of the bluebell,
Re-echoing chimes for me;
For the blessings that outnumber
The sands of the shifting sea;

For all things,— and canst thou say it,
When the heart no longer sings,
And the Hope that rose to heaven,
Lies with battered, broken wings?

Or dost shrink from the gall and wormwood,
And recoil from thy Calvary now?
If willing to welcome the spear-thrust,
And joy in the thorn-pierced brow,

"Then thou shalt bask in the glory,
When I come to claim my own,—
Faithful in much and in little,
Thou shalt share with me my throne."

The World to Be Warned

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(1) THE most solemn truths ever entrusted to mortals have been given to us to proclaim to the world. The proclamation of these truths is our work. The world is to be warned, and God's people are to be true to the trust committed to them. They are not to engage in speculations, neither are they to enter into business enterprises with unbelievers; for this would hinder them in doing the work given them.

Christ says of his people, "Ye are the light of the world." It is not a small matter that the counsels and purposes and plans of God have been so clearly opened to us. It is a wonderful privilege to be able to understand the will of God as revealed in the sure word of prophecy. This places on us a heavy responsibility. God expects us to impart to others the knowledge he has given us. It is his purpose that divine and human instrumentalities shall unite in the proclamation of the warning message.

John writes: "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come: and worship him that made heaven, and earth, and the sea, and the fountains of waters." This message is to be proclaimed, not in a few places only, but to the whole world.

"And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication.

"And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, . . . the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb."

To John was given a view of the remnant people of God, and as he beheld their character and their work, he exclaimed, "Here is the patience of the saints: here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."

"And the dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ."

"And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven. . . . And all that dwell upon the earth shall worship him, whose names are not written in the book of life of the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world."

In the issue of the great conflict, there will be only two classes in the world,— those who keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus, and those who worship the beast and his image, and receive his mark. Although church and state will unite their power to compel "all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond," to receive the mark of the beast; yet the people of God will not receive it. The prophet of Patmos beheld them "that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass, having the harps of God," and singing the song of Moses and the Lamb.

But of those who trample on God's law, and oppress his faithful people, the terrible prediction is uttered: —

"The same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation."

On which side are we standing? Have we placed ourselves fully under the direction and protection of the Holy Spirit, and are we giving the message for this time? Does every effort we put forth tend to advance the proclamation of the message? So far as his opportunities extend, every one who has received the light of truth is under the same solemn and fearful responsibility as was the prophet of Israel, to whom came the word: "Son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand. Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivered thy soul."

Are we to wait until the fulfilment of the prophecies of the end before we say anything concerning them? Of what value will our words be then? Shall we wait until the judgments fall upon the transgressor before we tell him how to avoid them? Where is our faith in the word of God? Must we see the things foretold come to pass before we will believe what he has said? In clear, distinct rays light has come to us, showing that the great day of the Lord is at hand, "even at the door." Let us read and understand, before it is too late.

Study carefully the following scriptures: —

"Enter into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty. The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and every one that is lifted up; and he shall be brought low: and upon all the cedars of Lebanon, that are high and lifted up, . . . and upon all the hills that are lifted up, and upon every high tower, and upon every fenced wall, and upon all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant pictures."

"The loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of man shall be made low: and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. And the idols he shall utterly abolish. And they shall go into the holes of the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth."

"Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand."

"Therefore also now, saith the Lord, turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning; and rend your hearts, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil. Who knoweth if he will turn and repent, and leave a blessing behind him; even a meat offering and a drink offering unto the Lord your God?"

The Lord has declared the judgments and calamities that must fall upon those who continue to dishonor him. Warnings have been given by God, and these warnings should be kept before the people. God's appointed messengers are to give the call to flee from the wrath to come.

"Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly: gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children: . . . let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet. Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?

"Then will the Lord be jealous for his land, and pity his people. Yea, the Lord will answer and say unto his people, Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen."

"Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the Lord will do great things. Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength. Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the first month. And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil. And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you. And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, that hath dealt wondrously with you: and my people shall never be ashamed."

"And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions: and also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit. And I will show wonders in the heavens, and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be delivered: for in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem shall be deliverance, as the Lord hath said, and in the remnant whom the Lord shall call."

The Experiences of Former Days — No. 1

Looking Backward

J. O. CORLISS

THE human mind is so constituted that it requires frequent stimulation to keep it steadily trending in the same direction. This is specially true regarding things of a moral nature. For this reason the Sabbath was instituted, that men might look through it each week to the creative power of Him to whom they are called to give allegiance.

The passover was established upon the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage, that they might have a memorial of God's power to rescue his people from the grasp of a powerful nation. Ex. 12:3-14. Upon crossing the Jordan, a monument of twelve stones, taken from the bed of that river which had been miraculously made a highway for a nation's entrance to the promised land, was erected in Gilgal, as a memorial of that event. Joshua 4:20-24.

Had the seed of Abraham ever kept these and other memorials in sight, and so kept fresh in mind God's deliverances, they need not have had the charge brought against them of forgetting God so far as to turn to worship the idols of other nations. Isa. 63:9, 10; 2 Kings 17:7-17. It will be noticed that when the psalmist would set before his hearers the greatness of Jehovah, he invariably referred to the faithful leadings of God, in the preservation of Israel when in difficulty. In his own words, he "considered the days of old, the years of ancient times," as found in Psalms 76-78.

Again: in order that the early church might be "established" in the truth for those days, the apostle felt it necessary constantly to remind the brethren of certain things in the earlier experience of the work, lest these being forgotten, the church might fall a prey to doubt and ultimate defection. 2 Peter 1:12, 13.

Among the members of that early church were numerous Jews,— men who had stepped out from life-long traditions, to follow the faith of him whose kingdom their religious ceremonies foreshadowed. After the death of Christ, however, circumstances arose which suggested questions of doubt regarding the genuineness of the alleged Messiah's mission. There seemed to be but one remedy for the sad issue, and that was readily prescribed. To prevent those already disaffected from being swallowed up in the force of prevailing sentiment, the apostle exhorted them to "call to remembrance the former days," when their minds first became enlightened, and they endured great affliction, through being made obnoxious to the world by reproaches and oppression. They were also reminded of the strength of faith which had permitted them at that time to enjoy, even the spoiling of their goods. Their attention being fully called to these things, the word was then pressed home to them not to cast away their well-bestowed confidence, which, if retained, would bring its sure reward.

The history of the apostolic church has been repeated many times in the various phases of the work of God among men. Those who have not been able to see the hand of God specially leading up to their time and work, have invariably lacked enthusiasm in their profession, and have seemed indifferent to the evident calls of heaven to service. The history of every religious people since the Reformation reveals that the further removed they became from the origin of their particular work, the less they retained of those special characteristics which separated them from all other people. This is because they lost sight of the history of circumstances which gave them a distinct place and work among men.

The case of Seventh-day Adventists is no exception to the general rule. In the early days of their work, every one identified with them became the butt of ridicule, yet the most of these willingly sacrificed worldly profit for the pleasure of seeing the truth prosper. These having lived contemporary with those who were giving their lives for the spread of the message of the speedy coming of Christ, knew much of God's leading in the work they were doing. But many of those pioneers have joyfully finished the part assigned them of God, and now rest in hope of soon seeing what they so ardently believed to be the early outcome of the message they carried.

Many of those now entrusted with the responsibilities older ones have laid down, have not had a personal knowledge of the early sacrifices and struggles through which the present work was established. Without this it is only natural for them to form plans for labor from present experiences, without particular reference to the evident leadings of God in the planting of the message. To do this opens the way for results which place the work on altogether a different basis from that which was evidently intended by Providence at the beginning.

In view of this possible tendency, and in order to strengthen and confirm those in the message who have accepted it simply from its logical clearness, we have thought best to recount some of the early incidents of the work, hoping they may be a source of comfort to others as they have been to the writer.

"Remember Me"

H. F. KETRING

"BUT think on me when it shall be well with thee, and show kindness, I pray thee, unto me, and make mention of me unto Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house." Gen. 40:14.

This was Joseph's request to the chief butler, after he had interpreted his dream in the prison, and told him, "Within three days shall Pharaoh lift up thine head, and restore thee unto thy place." "Yet did not the chief butler remember Joseph, but forgat him." Verse 23.

Joseph and the chief butler had been companions in the prison. They had partaken of the same scanty fare allotted

Our Consoler

MRS. J. C. BROWER

Sometimes when clouds of sorrow hover
o'er our heads,
And bitter tears are wrung from weeping eyes;
When all the joy and gladness in our life seem fled,
Sin's yawning gulf veils from us
heaven's prize;

When oft we're worsted by the ills to which we're prone,
And all our weak and puny efforts
seem in vain,
When we in gardens of Gethsemane
alone
Must wrestle 'neath our load of grief and pain;

Then 'tis that thou, alone, O Comforter above,
Canst come in silent sympathy to soothe our woes.
Encircled by thine arms of more than father's love,
We nestle close, and find such peace!
such calm repose!

O Father, teach me! Help me ever to abide
Beneath the quiet, cooling shadow of thy wing.
Then only shall I draw lone wanderers
to thy side,
And win mute lips thy wondrous praise to sing.

God's Chosen People

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I have been bidden to call the attention of our people to the instruction given by the Lord to Israel regarding the importance of separation from the world. In the fourth chapter of Deuteronomy we read: — (1)

"Now therefore, harken, O Israel, unto the statutes and unto the judgments, which I teach you, for to do them, that ye may live, and go in and possess the land, which the Lord God of your fathers giveth you. Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you."

"Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. Keep therefore and do them; for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people. For what nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is in all things that we call upon him for? And what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day? Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and lest they depart from thine heart all the days of thy life: but teach them thy sons and thy sons' sons."

"When the Lord shall bring thee into the land whither thou goest to possess it, and hath cast out many nations from before thee, . . . and when the Lord thy God shall deliver them before thee; thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them; thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them: neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son. For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods: so will the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly.

"But thus shall ye deal with them; ye shall destroy their altars, and break down their images, and cut down their groves, and burn their graven images with fire. For thou art an holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth."

"Know therefore that the Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations; and repayeth them that hate him to their face, to destroy them: he will not be slack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face."

A Departure from Right

Under David's rule, the people of Israel gained strength and uprightness through obedience to God's law. But the kings that followed strove for self-exaltation. They took to themselves glory for the greatness of the kingdom, forgetting how utterly dependent they were upon God. They regarded themselves as wise and independent, because of the honor showed them by fallible, erring man. They became corrupt, immoral, and rebelled against the Lord, turning from him to the worship of idols.

God bore long with them, calling them often to repentance. But they refused to hear, and at last God spoke in judgment, showing them how weak they were without him. He saw that they were determined to have their own way, and he gave them into the hands of their enemies, who spoiled their land, and took the people captive.

The alliances made by the Israelites with their heathen neighbors resulted in the loss of their identity as God's peculiar people. They became leavened by the evil practises of those with whom they formed forbidden alliances. Affiliation with worldlings caused them to lose their first love, and their zeal for God's service. The advantages they sold themselves to gain, brought only disappointment, and caused the loss of many souls.

The experience of Israel will be the experience of all who go to the world for strength, turning away from the living God. Those who forsake the mighty One, the source of all strength, and affiliate with worldlings, placing on them their dependence, become weak in moral power, as are those in whom they trust.

God comes with entreaties and assurances to those who are making mistakes. (1) He seeks to show them their error, and lead them to repentance. But if they refuse to humble their hearts before him, if they strive to exalt themselves above him, he must speak to them in judgment. No semblance of nearness to God, no assertion of connection with him, will be accepted from those who persist in dishonoring him by leaning upon the arm of worldly power.

God's Word to Us To-day

To-day God's word to his people is: "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters." "Ye are a chosen generation, a royal priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people; that ye should show forth the praises of him who hath called you out of darkness into his marvelous light."

God's people are to be distinguished as a people who serve him fully, whole-heartedly, taking no honor to themselves, and remembering that by a most solemn covenant they have bound themselves to serve the Lord, and him only. (2)

The Sign Between God and His People

"The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep: for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the Sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you; every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the Sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work in the Sabbath day, he shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the Sabbath, to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed."

Do not these words point us out as God's denominated people? and do they not declare to us that so long as time shall last, we are to cherish the sacred, denominational distinction placed on us? The children of Israel were to observe the Sabbath throughout their generations "for a perpetual covenant." The Sabbath has lost none of its meaning. It is still the sign between God and his people, and it will be so forever. (2)

Now and ever we are to stand as a distinct and peculiar people, free from all worldly policy, unembarrassed by confederation with those who have not wisdom to discern the claims of God, so plainly set forth in his law.

(1) Commentary, Vol. 4 p. 1155

(2) Our High Calling, p. 345

(1) We are to show that we are seeking to work in harmony with heaven in preparing the way of the Lord. We are to bear witness to all nations, kindreds, and tongues, that we are a people who love and fear God, a people who keep holy the seventh-day Sabbath, and we are to show plainly that we have full faith that the Lord is soon to come in the clouds of heaven.

(2) God is testing his people, to see who will be loyal to the principles of his truth. Our work is to proclaim to the world the first, second, and third angels' messages. In the discharge of our duty, we are neither to despise nor fear our enemies. To bind ourselves up by contracts or in partnerships or business associations with those not of our faith is not in the order of God. We are to treat with kindness and courtesy those who refuse to be loyal to God, but we are never, never to unite with them in counsel regarding the vital interests of his work; for this is not the way of the Lord.

(2) Putting our trust in God, we are to move steadily forward, doing his work with unselfishness, in humble dependence upon him, committing ourselves and our present and future to his wise providence, holding the beginning of our confidence firm unto the end, remembering that it is not because of our worthiness that we receive the blessings of heaven, but because of the worthiness of Christ, and our acceptance, through faith in him, of God's abounding grace. (1)

I pray that my brethren may realize that the third angel's message means much to us, and that the observance of (2) the true Sabbath is to be the sign that distinguishes those who serve God from those who serve him not. Let those who have become sleepy and indifferent awake. We are called to be holy, and we should carefully avoid giving the impression that it is of little consequence whether or not we retain the peculiar features of our faith. Upon us rests the solemn obligation of taking a more decided stand for truth and righteousness than we have taken in the past. The line of demarcation between those who keep the commandments of God and those who do not is to be revealed with unmistakable clearness. We are conscientiously to honor God, diligently using every means of keeping in covenant relation with him, that we may receive his blessings — the blessings so essential for a people who are to be so severely tried. To give the impression that our faith, our religion, is not a dominating power in our lives, is greatly to dishonor God. Thus we turn from his commandments, which are our life, denying that he is our God and we his people.

"The Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments to a thousand generations; and repayeth them that hate him to their face, to destroy them; he will not be slack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face."

(2) Where shall we be before the thousand (2) generations mentioned in this scripture are ended? Our fate will have been decided for eternity. We shall either have been pronounced worthy of a home in the everlasting kingdom of God, or we shall have received sentence of eternal death. Those who have been true and faithful to their covenant with God, those who, remembering Calvary, have stood firmly on the side of truth, ever striving to honor God, will hear the commendation, "Well done, good and faithful servant." But those who have given God only half-hearted service, allowing their lives to be conformed to the ways and practises of the world, will hear the sad words, "Depart from me; I know you not."

"The city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for the glory of God did lighten it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. And the nations of them which are saved shall walk in the light of it: and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day: for there shall be no night there. And they shall bring the glory and honor of the nations into it. And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie: but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life."

"And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him: and they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads."

Who are these? — God's denominated people,— those who on this earth have witnessed to their loyalty. Who are they? — Those who have kept the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus; those who have owned the crucified One as their Saviour.

"And there shall be no night there; and they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light: and they shall reign forever and ever."

"Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city."

The Experiences of Former Days — No. 2

The Early Proclamation of the Second Advent

J. O. CORLISS

Prophetic utterances of the Bible have ever pointed to a time when signs of the Lord's coming would appear in the heavens. The last of these — the falling stars — came in its order on Nov. 13, 1833. One of the sure indications that this event was the fulfilment of divine prediction, is the fact that when the occurrence came, the prophecies relating to the second advent had been thoroughly studied, and the instrument for heralding the greatest of all events was prepared for his work.

William Miller was a farmer of Low Hampton, N. Y. Having been a pronounced infidel for years, he began a diligent search of the Bible for arguments with which to overthrow adherents to Christianity. His mind was singularly called to the prophetic portion of the Word, and being quite well informed on historical points, he was struck with the accuracy with which these historical events accorded with the Biblical predictions concerning them.

Becoming satisfied that the prophecies of the Bible could be relied upon, Mr. Miller continued his study, and became thoroughly convinced that the coming of Christ was an event to be looked for in his day. The way being open for him to state his views publicly, he did so for the first time, according to his own statement, in August, 1833, just three months before the falling of the stars in November.

Continuing to speak publicly at intervals, he prepared a series of nineteen lectures, which, according to the Advent Shield, page 57, was first delivered in what was then known as the Chardon Street Chapel, in Boston, Mass., during the winter of 1840, and afterward circulated in book form. The pastor of this church was, at that time, Joshua V. Himes, who readily accepted the message as delivered by Mr. Miller, and in the following March issued the first number of a paper entitled Signs of the Times, in which was lucidly set forth the subject of the second advent.

By means of this paper, and many tracts, the doctrine of the Lord's immediate coming was soon proclaimed over a large part of the Eastern States; and on October 14 of the same year, the first second-advent conference convened in Boston, where plans were laid for sending that message to all parts of the world. The impetus given its proclamation from that time was very marked, hundreds, in nearly every town of large size, including infidels, rumsellers, and profligates of every kind, were converted. In Portland, Maine, a Mr. Fleming reported that he went into one room over a bank, near midday, where he found between thirty and forty men engaged in earnest prayer. One of the principal booksellers told him that he had sold more Bibles in one month since Mr. Miller opened meetings there, than in any four months previous.

Two years before that time,— in 1838, — Mr. Josiah Litch, after studying the ninth chapter of the book of Revelation, announced in the public prints that the fulfilment of that prophecy would be seen on Aug. 11, 1840, in the downfall of the Ottoman empire. As the time drew near for the verification of this bold assertion, all eyes were turned toward events occurring about Constantinople, the seat of that empire. Astonishment was seen in many faces when the news was heralded abroad that the supremacy of the Ottoman empire actually came to an end on the very day foretold by Mr. Litch.

The message then went by leaps and bounds, which stirred up considerable opposition among the clergy. Notwith-

Visions of Faith

From this vain world, this weary life
So full of toil, and care, and strife,
So full of bitter grief and pain,
Of blighted hopes, and longings vain,
I look away. Faith guides my sight
Unto a realm of cloudless light —
The fair and glorious abode,
The heavenly city of our God.

Its mansions by omniscience planned,
Fashioned by an almighty hand,
And decked by him whose touch adorns
The universe with all its forms
Of varied beauty. O how fair,
How bright, how beautiful they are!

Sin's fatal and polluting breath
Has never shed the curse of death
Through this divine Elysium; no,
Nor ever shall. All pain and woe
Are banished, and from weeping eyes
God wipes the tears in paradise.

Angels, his holy ministers,
Who do his bidding mid the spheres,
Hover around the great white throne,
Chanting to thee — to thee alone.
O God of wisdom, power, and grace,
We render honor, love, and praise!

A Visit to the South — No. 1

From Berrien Springs to Nashville

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I have just returned to Washington from the South. We were away for about six weeks, during which time we visited Nashville, Graysville, and Huntsville.

On the way from Berrien Springs to Nashville, we had to wait for several hours in Chicago, and Dr. Paulson took us out to Hinsdale, where they are about to establish a sanitarium.

I was very much pleased with all that I saw during the afternoon that I spent there. Hinsdale is about fourteen miles out from Chicago, and is a favorable place for a sanitarium. The atmosphere is good, and the surroundings are beautiful. Many of the houses are large, and are evidently the homes of men of wealth, who live in the country, and carry on business in Chicago. The roads are excellent, and sick people would find health in driving about and enjoying the scenery. The sight of the trees and flowers, with the sunshine and fresh air, would bring health to mind and body. In anticipation I can see the Hinsdale Sanitarium established, and hope and faith coming into the hearts of the patients.

We were taken all over the sanitarium property. It consists of ten acres of land, with two houses and a barn. The place was once very beautiful, but it has been neglected for several years. It is a favorable site for a sanitarium, and I am so glad that it has been placed at the disposal of our brethren.

About five years ago a gentleman from Chicago went to the Battle Creek Sanitarium as a patient. He was very sick, but the treatment given him was successful, and he believes that it was the means of saving his life. After returning home, he told Dr. Paulson that he knew of a place that ought to be used for sanitarium work. A few months ago he bought this place, and has placed it at Dr. Paulson's disposal. It cost sixteen thousand dollars, and can be paid for in small monthly instalments.

Dr. Paulson looks upon the opportunity to secure this place on easy terms as a providence of God. And this is right; for the hand of the Lord is in the matter. The outdoor advantages that the sick will have will prove the greatest blessing to them, aiding in the cure of mind and body. And as the sick ones associate with those who love and serve God, they will be doubly blessed.

How I wish that all our sanitariums could be placed among such natural surroundings. Men and women in need of physical and spiritual healing need to breathe just such an atmosphere. They need to be brought in contact with those whose words and acts will draw them to Christ. They need to be brought under the influence of the great Medical Missionary, who can heal both soul and body. They need to hear the story of the love of the sin-pardoning Saviour,— of the forgiveness granted to all who come to him confessing their sins.

There are many, many in our great cities, both in the higher and in the lower classes, who need to be helped into the way of life by being brought into contact with our sanitariums.

There are no entreaties so tender, no lessons so plain, no commendations so decided, as those given in the Word of God. How earnest and loving and compassionate are the invitations to come to the fountain of living water. God's Word is indeed a light shining in a dark place. And in our sanitariums, above all other places, the religion of Christ is to be clearly exemplified. This is why I have urged that many sanitariums be established in places out of the cities, that men and women may hear and understand the word of the Lord, and may be brought under an influence direct from heaven.

God sends angels from heaven to co-operate with human instrumentalities in bringing encouragement and hope and joy and peace to the hearts of the sick and suffering. These men and women need the grace that comes from the Life-giver, the health that the great Medical Missionary alone can give. O that those who have received light from God's Word would take hold in medical missionary lines, to do all in their power to help those in need of help!

Those who plan to establish sanitariums should reason from cause to effect. They should lay their plans with a deep insight into the necessities of a medical institution. One of the first necessities is a site out of the city, in a retired place, where the institution can be surrounded by grounds that can be beautified with flowers and shrubs and trees.

Let the patients be taught that the breathing of pure air is necessary to health. Let there be facilities for the giving of rational treatment, so that there will be no necessity for the use of drugs. By wise methods the patients are to be led more and more to take outdoor exercise. Every one who is recovering from sickness needs such exercise, in order that disease may be completely overcome, and health regained. When physical health has been restored, men and women are better able to exercise that faith in Christ which secures the health of the soul, bringing peace and rest and joy from the consciousness of sins forgiven.

Our sanitariums should be out of the cities. One who is unerring in counsel has given this direction, in mercy to suffering humanity. Physicians and ministers are called upon to exert their influence in favor of establishing our sanitariums, publishing houses, and schools out of the cities. And for the sake of the youth in our schools and publishing houses, and for the sake of the patients and helpers in our sanitariums, this should be done.

We plead the necessity of our sanitariums being out of the smoky, dirty, noisy cities, with their tobacco-laden atmosphere. It is impossible to establish a sanitarium in a city without placing it in an atmosphere that will, to a greater or less extent, undo the good accomplished by the treatment given.

All things are to be considered from the standpoint of the Word of God. The teachers in our schools and sanitariums are to guard the minds of the youth in their care from becoming estranged from God. They are to have an interest in each one. They are to show a Christlike love for souls. Their minds are to be stayed upon Christ, and they are humbly and thankfully to receive, in order that they may impart. In their association with others, they are not to seek to benefit themselves, but to bless others.

And as the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom, let Christ ever be recognized as our counselor, infinite in wisdom, and always ready to help. Those who know God as revealed in his Word make him chief in all that they do. They say: "Thou, God, seest me. Thou hearest every word I speak; thou knowest the motives that prompt my words and actions."

The wisdom of heaven is to be brought into every sanitarium. All the workers are to live the truth as it is in Jesus. Godliness — the result of the grace of Christ — is to lead souls to drink of the water of life.

Support the Weak

The world is full of weak ones. The Bible has not commanded us to despise the weak, to crush the weak, to neglect the weak, but to support the weak. "We

The Refiner

'Tis sweet to know that he who tries
The silver, takes his seat
Beside the fire which purifies,
Lest too intense a heat,
Raised to consume the base alloy,
The precious metal, too, destroy.

'Tis sweet to think how well he knows
The silver's power to bear
The ordeal through which it goes;
And that with skill and care
He'll take it from the fire when fit,
With his own hand, to polish it.

'Tis blessed still to know that he
The work he has begun
Will not forsake till he can see
The work itself well done:
An image by its brightness shown,
The perfect likeness of his own!

But O! how much of earthly mold,
Dark relics of the mine
Lost from the ore, must he behold!
How long must he refine
Ere in the silver he can trace
The first faint semblance of his face?

Thou, great Refiner, sit thou by,
Thy purpose to fulfil:
Moved by thy hand, beneath thine eye,
And melted at thy will,
O may thy work forever shine,
Reflecting beauty pure as thine!

The Work in Nashville

During my stay in Nashville, I saw the necessities of the work there, and its great need of help. I visited the sanitarium conducted by Dr. Hayward and Brother Hansen. For several years Brother Hansen has had treatment rooms in Nashville. Recently the Medical Department of the Southern Union Conference purchased his business, and Dr. Hayward, from Graysville, joined Brother Hansen in the work. They have treatment rooms, a health food store, and physicians' offices in a large house in the city. They have also rented a house three miles out of the city, for the accommodation of patients and nurses. I visited both of these places, and found them full of sick people receiving help.

Brethren Hayward and Hansen, with their faithful helpers, are doing their best with the facilities they have, but the inconveniences under which they are at present conducting their work are very trying, and I longed that they might have a larger building, where they could accomplish more with less effort.

We also visited the colored sanitarium, which is in the charge of Dr. Isabel and Brother Young. This is situated very conveniently for the colored business men of Nashville, and is modestly but well equipped for giving the different kinds of baths. Those in charge have labored earnestly to do what they can with their limited means to provide the necessary facilities, but they need assistance to make the institution comfortable and attractive.

To us has been entrusted the work of proclaiming the last message of mercy to be given to our world,— the message that is to prepare a people to stand in the day of God. Do we realize our accountability? Are we acting our part in the proclamation of this message?

When I see our people spending money for needless trimmings, needless furnishings, I think of Jesus. He might have come to this world in the glory of his kingly power. But he chose to come to this world in the garb of humanity, and to live a life of self-denial and sacrifice. Those who follow in his footsteps will remember that every dollar they can spare is needed in the work that God has said shall be done in this world.

When our sisters are buying and making up their own and their children's garments, let them think of the work in the Lord's vineyard that is still waiting to be done. It is right to buy good material for our clothing, and to have it carefully made. This is economy. But rich trimmings are not needed, and to indulge in them is to spend for self-gratification money that should be put into God's cause.

Schools and sanitariums and meeting-houses are needed in the South. The people there must be warned. To my sisters who are inclined to spend much in trimming their clothes, I would say, Deny yourselves, and put the money thus saved aside to send to the help of those who need help so much. Let the self-denial boxes sent out by the Southern Missionary Society be kept in plain sight in the homes of our people.

My sisters, remember that Christ clothed his divinity with humanity, and came to this world to uplift fallen human beings, that they might stand on vantage-ground, thus escaping the corruption that is in the world through lust. He gave his all to the work that he came to this world to do, and his word to us is, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." "So shall ye be my disciples."

Remember, too, the words of the apostle: "Whose adorning let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or of putting on of apparel; but let it be the hidden man of the heart, in that which is not corruptible, even the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price."

Let us take heed to God's words of warning, lest at any time we let them slip, and our hearts become evil hearts of unbelief. Just as soon as those who know the truth put away their unbelief, and practise the self-denial enjoined in the Word of God, the message will go with power. The Lord will hear our prayers for the conversion of souls. God's people will let their light shine forth, and unbelievers, seeing their good works, will glorify our Heavenly Father.

The School Work

In connection with the work in Nashville, I wish to speak of the school work that Brethren Sutherland and Magan are planning to do. I was surprised when, in speaking of the work they wished to do in the South, they spoke of establishing a school in some place a long way from Nashville. From the light given me, I knew that this would not be the right thing to do, and I told them so. The work that these brethren can do, because of the experience gained at Berrien Springs, is to be carried on within easy access of Nashville; for Nashville has not yet been worked as it should be. And it will be a great blessing to the workers in the school to be near enough to Nashville to be able to counsel with the workers there.

In searching for a place for the school, the brethren found a farm of four hundred acres for sale, about nine miles from Nashville. The size of the farm, its situation, the distance that it is from Nashville, and the moderate sum for which it could be purchased seemed to point it out as the very place for the school work. We advised that this place be purchased. I knew that all the land would ultimately be needed. For the work of the students, and to provide homes for the teachers, such land can be used advantageously. And as our work advances, a portion of this tract may be required for a country sanitarium.

Other properties were examined, but we found nothing so well suited for our work. The price of the place, including standing crops, farm machinery, and over seventy head of cattle, was $12,723. It has been purchased, and as soon as possible, Brethren Magan and Sutherland, with a few experienced helpers, will begin school work there. We feel confident that the Lord has been guiding in this matter.

The plan upon which our brethren propose to work is to select some of the best and most substantial young men and women from Berrien Springs and other places in the North, who believe that God has called them to the work in the South, and give them a brief training as teachers. Thorough instruction will be given in Bible study, physiology, and the history of our message; and special instruction in agriculture will be given. It is hoped that many of these students will eventually connect with schools in various places in the South. In connection with these schools there will be land that will be cultivated by teachers and students, and the proceeds from this work will be used for the support of the schools.

We went once more to see the farm, after its purchase had been completed, and were very much pleased with it. I earnestly hope that the school to be established there will be a success, and will help to build up the work of the Lord in that part of his vineyard. There are men of means in various parts of the land who can assist this enterprise by loans without interest, and by liberal gifts.

Let us sustain Brethren Sutherland and Magan in their efforts to advance this important work. They gained a valuable experience in Berrien Springs, and the providence of God has led them to feel that they must labor in the Southern field. God helped them constantly in their efforts at Berrien Springs, as they steadily advanced, determined that obstacles should not stop the work. They are not leaving Berrien Springs because of dissension or strife. They are not fleeing from duty. They are leaving a place where a school has been established, to go to a new field, where the work may be much harder. They have only means enough to pay part of the price of the land. They should not be left to struggle along misunderstood and unaided, at the sacrifice of health.

As these brethren go to the South to take hold of pioneer work in a difficult field, we ask our people to make their work as effective as possible by assisting them in the establishment of the new school near Nashville.

I ask our people to help the work in the Southern field by aiding Brethren Sutherland and Magan and their faithful associates in the carrying forward of the important enterprise they have undertaken. Brethren and sisters, the poverty and the needs of the Southern field call urgently for your assistance. There is a great work to be done in that field, and we ask you to act your part.

Development of the Third Angel's Message

J. O. CORLISS

In the unfolding of the sanctuary question it was revealed that the heavenly sanctuary, and not the earthly one located in Jerusalem, which was a type of the heavenly, was the one to be cleansed at the end of the prophetic period of 2300 days of Dan. 8:14. As in the type, it was seen that the cleansing of the heavenly sanctuary was to usher in the examination of men's characters, preparatory to the coming of Christ, when those who, by the examination, were found to be worthy would be "caught up together" to meet him in the air.

The conclusion was readily drawn that when such a period was reached, the law of God would demand special recognition, because by it the cases of men were to be settled. Rom. 2:12-16; 3:19, 20. Upon examination of the claims of the law it was revealed that the fourth commandment called for the seventh day to be sanctified as a weekly rest, whereas that day was being used as a common working day, and the first day of the week was being used as a rest day instead.

But as the law of God, in its entirety, was to become the standard of a judgment work to open at the ending of the 2300 prophetic days, which came in the autumn of 1844, it was necessary, in the true order of events, for the Sabbath to be introduced and preached at the ending of the time indicated by the prophet. The history of that time justified the conclusion, and established the message of the Lord's near coming in the hearts of the disappointed ones.

In the early autumn of 1844, a lady in New York State, Mrs. Rachel D. Preston, by reading her Bible became deeply impressed with the fact that the world in general had deserted the true Sabbath of the Lord, and should be called to reform its ways in this respect. She presented the matter to her pastor, and then to some of the leading people of her church, but was scornfully repulsed each time. Upon inquiry, however, she learned of the Seventh-day Baptists, and for a time, allied herself with that people.

During the latter part of the year Mrs. Preston had occasion to visit in Washington, N. H., where she met and conversed with some who had been connected with the disappointment of a few weeks before. Being full of the subject they had sacrificed so much for, they poured into her willing ears the story of their faith. She accepted their views of the near coming of Christ, and in turn convinced them of the importance of the Sabbath in conjunction with their other tenets of faith.

Of the sixty or more in that neighborhood who had been through the disappointment, about forty received the Sabbath, which constituted the first Seventh-day Adventist church of modern days. The influence from this movement extended, and interested two men, who had preached the time message. These men, J. B. Cook, and T. M. Preble, began to agitate the subject, both by voice and pen, when shortly Joseph Bates received it. The men, Cook and Preble, finding the belief an unpopular one, soon after gave up its advocacy, and became its enemies. Not so, however, with "Father" Bates. He was so thoroughly convinced of its correctness, that he made it the entire business of his life. The first thing he did to further the message, was to write a pamphlet in its behalf.

This he began without money, but his faith in God was so fixed that he promised the printer, a Mr. Markham, that he should be paid in full before the sheets were taken away from the printing-office. Some money came into Brother Bates' hand from unexpected quarters, which was paid toward the job, but when he wanted to begin the circulation of his book, he had not the full amount to pay the indebtedness. In his anxiety he went to the printer to apologize for his apparent laxness, but was met with the statement that the bill was fully met, and that he could take away the printed sheets at his pleasure.

The printer did not know who had paid the debt, as the man who did so was a stranger to him, and, so far as is known, Brother Bates never knew who was the generous donor. Since the old gentleman's death, however, it has been learned that Brother H. S. Gurney, having just then received money unexpectedly which was due him, was impressed to go and settle the bill, which he did.

The book, as the writer now remembers it, was a very clear presentation of the Sabbath, bringing to view first the immutability of the law of which it was a part, and then showing from the prophecy of Daniel, that Rome, especially the papacy, was responsible for the transfer of rest from the seventh to the first day of the week. One clearly drawn conclusion of the book which then seemed very forcible to the writer's youthful mind was that, "the seventh day of the week has always been God's Sabbath, but the first day has been made the pope's Sunday."

Yes, above the clouds, on the mountain tops, with the fleecy billows beneath your feet, and the setting sun beyond shedding his glorious beams over the sea of clouds,— such a scene is one long to be remembered. Words fail to describe such splendor; neither can it be imagined.

Twice has the Lord in his kindness permitted me to look upon such a scene. The other evening as I was descending the mountains toward the sea, a great ocean of pure white clouds was spread out before us. Beneath, all looked dark and gloomy — a marked contrast to the glory above. The rest of the passengers paid no attention to it, but I was thinking of 2 Cor. 4:17, 18: "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory; while we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen: for the things which are seen are temporal; but the things which are not seen are eternal."

O, thought I, if I could always gaze upon such a scene! But soon the train plunged into the cloud, and then all was dark. Nevertheless the picture painted upon my memory remained, and I can still see it in all its magnificence.

Few, if any, are permitted to live above the clouds; nevertheless by faith we can see the other side, where the sun is always shining. The cloud is not always over us, but the Lord takes us up into the mountain at times to see the other side. Do trials oppress your soul? Remember that it is but for a moment, compared with the eternal weight of glory that will be yours to enjoy. "To every cloud there is yet a bright side," and the sun is still shining, even though his light is cut off from our view.

Valparaiso, Chile.

The Work in Graysville

FRIDAY morning, June 17, we left Nashville for Graysville, where we spent Sabbath and Sunday.

I found that the work at Graysville has made much progress. Graysville is a homelike place,— a pretty little village in a valley surrounded by hills. A large part of the village is made up of the homes of Seventh-day Adventists.

On Sabbath I spoke to our people. The church was crowded. The Spirit of the Lord rested upon me, and I was given a plain testimony to bear. In my weakness I had much strength; for God was with me. My heart was filled with thanksgiving and praise and rejoicing.

On Sunday we were taken to see the different lines of work that are being carried on by our people in Graysville. We went over the school building, and then we visited the twenty-five-acre farm on the hill, which is largely planted with peaches. The young trees look thrifty. After looking at this, we went to see the four-hundred-acre farm, which has recently been acquired by the conference and has been leased to the school. On this farm we saw large fields of corn, broad pasture lands, and on the hill thirty acres of strawberries.

The school is doing well. An addition is needed to the main building; for the chapel is not large enough. But we advised those in charge to wait until the sanitarium could be put in running order. Finishing and equipping this institution will require all the means that they can command at present.

From the school farm we drove to the sanitarium. I am much interested in this institution. It is built on the mountainside, in the midst of a grove of trees. There are pine, oak, chestnut, hickory, and many other varieties of beautiful trees. With proper care this grove can be made very beautiful. It is a place in which any lover of nature would take delight, and is as healthful a location for a sanitarium as I have ever seen.

The institution is well planned, and the physicians and nurses are working disinterestedly and earnestly to bring the work on the building to completion. I wish that I had had time to say to the physician, "It pleases me to see the good work you do while handling the ax, hammer, and plane. You seem to be master of the situation." His face expressed anxiety, and showed a burden of thought, and I did wish to say to him, "This is the work that Christ did in his youth. And through it all he did not speak an impatient word, not even when he was misunderstood. He always spoke pleasantly. When he was blamed for being so particular about his work, he answered by words of song from the Psalms, and those who had been scolding him often found themselves uniting with him in singing, 'O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good: because his mercy endureth forever.' 'Let them now that fear the Lord say, that his mercy endureth forever.' 'Blessed are they that keep his testimonies, and that seek him with the whole heart.'"

I should have been pleased to have spoken words of encouragement to the physician's wife and sister. I would have said to them, "Be sure, my dear friends, ever to walk with Christ. 'Learn of me,' said the divine Teacher; 'for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light.'"

On the second floor we found the nurses busy at work. I hope they all realized that their faithfulness is fully appreciated by One who knows. In looking to their Saviour, they will find peace and joy. We are to unite our influence in making the earth radiant and glorious. Entire consecration is essential, and the union of all is needed, in order that the work of God may advance. No one is to exalt self and disparage others.

I longed to say to all the workers, "Henceforth you are Christ's servants. No longer are you to live to yourselves, but for him who died for you, and rose again. Your lives are to be hid with Christ in God, that when he who is your life shall appear, you may appear with him in glory."

Some of the patients asked if I would not talk to them in the parlor, but I had not the strength to do this, and at the same time to see the various things which our brethren wished me to see in connection with the work in Graysville.

We went up to the third story of the building, and looked off over the treetops across the valley. We greatly enjoyed the view.

I was taken to the spring, which is a little farther up the mountainside. This spring gives an abundance of soft, pure water, and is a treasure of inestimable worth.

I am more than pleased with the earnestness and zeal that the brethren have shown in the erection of this sanitarium. Success has attended their unselfish efforts. Each worker has tried to help the other, and all have worked together harmoniously. This is as it should be. When workers labor thus, their efforts reveal the sweet fragrance of godliness.

On our return, the brother who was driving stopped at the homes of many of our brethren in the village. I did not get out of the carriage, but we drove up to the gate of each house, and the friends came out. Whole families, father, mother, and children came out to speak with me, and I shook hands with them all, not forgetting the children.

Our visit to Graysville was a very pleasant one. We were sorry that we could not stay longer, so that we might have more time to talk with the brethren and sisters there.

The Advent of the Printed Message

J. O. CORLISS

WE know very little of Brother Bates' success in the evangelical field for the first year after he received the Sabbath. We do know, however, that as early as 1846 he laid his views before Elder James White and his wife, and although they expressed no great enthusiasm at first, it was soon shown to her in vision that the time had come to proclaim the binding force of the fourth commandment. From that time both she and her husband became living witnesses for the Sabbath truth as a prominent feature of the third angel's message.

At this stage of the work, none of the pioneers possessed a home of his own, but all were largely dependent on the bounty of others for food and shelter, while clothing was plain and poor, and scantily furnished. Considerable of the time, garments were worn which were darned over small rents and threadbare spots, and patched where gaps were too large to be darned.

Should the question be asked why this course was pursued in the early days of the message, the answer would not be hard to find. The first ambassadors of the message had a burning zeal to see it reach the multitudes, and prepare the world for its closing scenes, which were believed to be just at hand. Every penny, except the little means needed to supply bare necessities, was therefore contributed toward the object so earnestly sought. So careful, indeed, were those pioneers to be counted faithful stewards, that some even denied themselves of things that now would be thought decided necessities. For instance, it was said that Brother White wore an overcoat through one severe New England winter, that was so much patched as to show seven kinds of cloth.

Yet amid all this poverty, and with

Comfort in Need

WHEN doubts and fears upon me press,
And care doth add her strain and stress,
And they attend me, grief and woe,
And creature comforts are laid low,
I turn me to the book of life,
Amid the heat of battle strife;
And there with joyful hope I read,
"God will supply your every need."

At once I count the promise mine,
It bids my heart to glow and shine;
'Tis written by the Almighty hand
That doth the heaven and earth command;
That keeps the planets in their course,
And gives the sun his heat and force,
And rules the raging, restless sea,
And holds it in its boundary.

Now is my soul all hushed and still,
My Promiser will sure fulfil:
He has the will, he has the power,
And he will keep me hour by hour —
Will give me strength for all the way,
Be light by night, be joy by day:
How can I faint when this I read,
"God will supply your every need"?

The Huntsville School

MRS. E. G. WHITE

MONDAY morning, July 20, I went from Graysville to Huntsville. We found the school situated in a beautiful country place. In the school farm there are more than three hundred acres of land, a large part of which is under cultivation.

Several years ago Brother S. M. Jacobs was in charge of the farm, and under his care it made great improvement. He set out a peach and plum orchard, and other fruit trees. Brother and Sister Jacobs left Huntsville about three years ago, and since then the farm has not been so well cared for. We see in the land promise of a much larger return than it now gives, were its managers given the help they need.

Brother Jacobs put forth most earnest, disinterested efforts, but he was not given the help that his strength demanded. Sister Jacobs also worked too hard, and when her health began to give way, they decided to leave Huntsville, and go to some place where the strain would not be so heavy. Had they then been furnished with efficient helpers, and with means to make the needed improvements, the advancement made would have given courage to Brother Jacobs, to the students, and to our people everywhere. But the means that ought to have gone to Huntsville did not go, and we see the result in the present showing.

Recently the question was asked me, "Would it not be well to sell the school land at Huntsville, and buy a smaller place?" Instruction was given me that this farm must not be sold; that the situation possesses many advantages for the carrying forward of a colored school. It would take years to build up in a new place the work that has been done at Huntsville. The Lord's money was invested in the Huntsville school farm, to provide a place for the education of colored students. The General Conference gave this land to the Southern work, and the Lord has shown me what this school may become, and what those may become who go there for instruction, if his plans are followed.

In order that the school may advance as it should, money is needed, and sound, intelligent generalship. Things are to be well kept up, and the school is to give evidence that Seventh-day Adventists mean to make a success of whatever they undertake.

The facilities necessary for the success of the school must be provided. At present the facilities are very meager. A small building should be put up, in which the students can be taught how to care for one another in times of sickness. There has been a nurse at the school to look after the students when they were sick, but no facilities have been provided. This has made the work very discouraging.

The students are to be given a training in those lines of work that will help them to be successful laborers for Christ. They are to be taught to be separate from the customs and practises of the world. They are to be taught how to present the truth for this time, and how to work with the hands and with the head to win their daily bread, that they may go forth to teach their own people. They are to be taught to appreciate the school as a place in which they are given opportunity to obtain a training for service.

Wise plans are to be laid for the cultivation of the land. The students are to be given a practical education in agriculture. This education will be of inestimable value to them in their future work. Thorough work is to be done in cultivating the land, and from this the students are to learn how necessary it is to do thorough work in cultivating the garden of the heart.

The man who takes charge of the Huntsville school should know how to govern himself and how to govern others. The Bible teacher should be a man who can teach the students how to present the truths of the Word of God in public, and how to do house-to-house work. The business affairs of the farm are to be wisely and carefully managed.

The teachers should constantly seek wisdom from on high, that they may be kept from making mistakes. They should give careful attention to their work, that each student may be prepared for the line of service to which he is best adapted. All are to be prepared to serve faithfully in some capacity. Teachers and students are to co-operate in doing their best. The constant effort of the teachers should be to make the students see the importance of constantly rising higher and still higher.

The leading, controlling influence in the school is to be faithfulness in that which is least. Thus the students will be prepared to be faithful in greater things. Each student is to take himself in hand, and with God's help overcome the faults that mar his character. And he is to show an earnest, unselfish interest in the welfare of the school. If he sees a loose board in a walk or a loose paling on the fence, let him at once get a hammer and nails, and make the needed repairs. Nothing in the house or about the premises is to be allowed to present a slack, dilapidated appearance. The wagons and harnesses should be properly cared for and frequently examined and repaired. When harnesses and wagons are sent out in a dilapidated condition, human life is endangered.

These little things are of much more importance than many suppose in the education of students. Business men will notice the appearance of the wagons and harnesses, and will form their opinions accordingly. And more than this, if students are allowed to go through school with slack, shiftless habits, their education will not be worth half as much as it would be if they were taught to be faithful in all they do. "He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much." Little things needing attention, yet left for days and weeks, until they become an unsightly neglect, teach the students lessons that will cling to them for a lifetime, greatly hindering them in their work. Such an example is demoralizing, and students whose education is after this order are not needed in the world.

Should not our God be served most faithfully? We are called upon as teachers to rise up with firm purpose of heart, and discipline ourselves with sternness and vigor to habits of order and thoroughness. All that our hands find to do is to be well done. We have been bought with a price, even the blood of the Son of God, and all that we do is to honor and glorify our Redeemer. We are to work in partnership with Christ, as verily as Christ works in partnership with the Father. We are to lay aside every weight, "and the sin that doth so easily beset," that we may follow our Lord with full purpose of heart.

The soul suffers a great loss when duties are not faithfully performed, when habits of negligence and carelessness are allowed to rule the life. Faithfulness and unselfishness are to control all that we do. When the soul is left uncleansed, when selfish aims are allowed to control, the enemy comes in, leading the mind to carry out unholy devices and to work for selfish advantage, regardless of results.

But he who makes Christ first and last and best in everything will not work for selfish purposes. Unselfishness will be revealed in every act. The peace of Christ can not abide in the heart of a man in whose life self is the mainspring of action. Such a one may hold the theories of truth, but unless he brings himself into harmony with the requirements of God's Word, giving up all his ambitions and desires for the will and way of Christ, he strives without purpose; for God can not bless him. He halts between two opinions, constantly vacillating between Christ and the world. It is like some one striving for the mastery, yet cumbering himself by clinging to heavy weights.

The Human Body as the Temple of God

"Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile [margin, "destroy"] the temple of God, him shall God destroy; for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are." 1 Cor. 3:16, 17.

There are three things spoken of in the Bible as temples of God: —

1. His temple in heaven. "The temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament: and there were lightnings, and voices, and thunderings, and an earthquake, and great hail." Rev. 11:19. This scene takes place in connection with the closing work of Christ just before he comes.

2. The sanctuary erected in the wilderness. The direction was, "Let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them." Ex. 25:8. A sanctuary is a sacred or holy place, a dwelling-place for the Most High, a temple of God. Indeed, the word "temple" is one of the definitions of sanctuary.

The sanctuary in the wilderness was but a movable temple, carried from one place to another in the wanderings of the children of Israel. After they were located, the children of Israel built the temple of Solomon, constructed on the same general plan as the movable sanctuary; viz., with two apartments, the holy and the most holy.

The temple of Zerubbabel was built in like manner. These structures constituted the "worldly sanctuary" here on earth, made after the pattern that the Lord showed Moses and David. Ex. 25:9; Heb. 8:5; 1 Chron. 28:12, 19.

3. As the text quoted at the beginning of this article demonstrates, the bodies of God's true people are called a "temple of God."

Webster's International Dictionary defines "temple," "Any place in which the divine presence specially resides," quoting 1 Cor. 3:16, "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?" It would, therefore, seem to be absolutely demonstrated that all men are not "temples" of the living God, but only such as the Spirit of God resides in.

As there seems to be some little confusion in the world to-day as to who are "temples of God," it seems to the writer to be worth while to make some effort to elucidate this question. It certainly should be settled beyond all doubt in every reasonable mind as to who are entitled to this most honorable appellation, "temple of the living God."

Having quite a deep interest in settling this question in harmony with Scriptural teaching, the writer took Young's large concordance, and closely followed every use of the word "temple" through the long list of instances where it occurs in our English version. They nearly all refer to the temples built by Solomon, Zerubbabel, or Herod.

The first instance where the use of the word "temple" can be found applied to the human body is in John 2:21: "But he spake of the temple of his body." This occurs in connection with the Jews' statement, "Forty and six years was this temple [Herod's] in building, and wilt thou rear it up in three days?"

It must be evident that the use of the word "temple" in Christ's previous statement, "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up," was one to which his hearers were not accustomed. It was a new way of using the term. Indeed, in the Old Testament the writer can not recall a single instance where the human body is ever called a temple. But our Saviour in this text plainly speaks of his body as a "temple."

On what grounds does he so call it? Evidently because the divine Spirit and power tabernacled in that body in a wonderful way. In the writer's best judgment, there can not be found a single instance in which the human body is spoken of as a temple in all the canon of Scripture, unless the indwelling Spirit of God resides in that human body, not one text in which an unconverted, worldly man or a wicked man is ever spoken of as a temple of God.

The Spirit of Christ is promised to the church in a special sense, as it was never before in the world's history. Beginning with John 14, and in several following chapters, Christ enlarges upon the special gift of the Holy Spirit. "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may abide with you forever; even the Spirit of truth; whom the world can not receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him: but ye know him; for he dwelleth with you, and shall be in you. I will not leave you comfortless: I will come to you. Yet a little while, and the world seeth me no more; but ye see me: because I live, ye shall live also. At that day ye shall know that I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in you. He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my Father, and I will love him, and will manifest myself to him. Judas saith unto him, not Iscariot, Lord, how is it that thou wilt manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world? Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." John 14:16-23.

Here is the special promise of Christ of the Spirit, the representative of the Father and the Son, which enables the human being who receives that Comforter to become a temple of God and the Holy Spirit. In no other way does the Bible ever promise any one to become such a temple.

1. This special gift from the Father and the Son is called the Comforter, because it gives that comfort to the believing disciple that nothing else will.

2. The Lord says distinctly and positively that the world can not receive this Spirit. It can not, till the worldling repents of his sins and believes on the Lord Jesus Christ. Then he is no longer of the world, but belongs to Christ. Therefore worldlings can not be "temples of God." They must first become true Christians.

3. This gift of the Spirit of God is to remain with his true people throughout the whole Christian dispensation. All the various manifestations of that Spirit in miracles, healings, prophecies, etc., come in consequence of the gift of this Spirit, which Christ promised.

4. It is by means of the coming of the Comforter that we become temples of the Most High. The Lord's representative comes unto us and makes his abode with us. "Abode," according to Webster's third definition, is the "place of continuance, or where one dwells; abiding-place; residence; a dwelling, a habitation." Surely where the Lord has his habitation, there is a "temple of God." And in no other way can there be a temple of God.— Geo. I. Butler, in Southern Watchman.

Contents of Early Numbers of Advent Review

J. O. CORLISS

In its earliest form, no name appears as editor of the Advent Review, but the names of Hiram Edson, David Arnold, Geo. W. Holt, Samuel W. Rhodes, and James White stand at the head of each paper as "Publishing Committee." But inasmuch as all communications to the paper were then to be addressed to James White, it is clear that he was responsible for its contents and make-up.

The first number of the paper enters into an explanation of the prophetic period which led the people of that day through their most singular experience. Among other statements of the position then occupied, the following from Joseph Marsh, in the Voice of Truth of Nov. 7, 1844, was reproduced: —

"Since the tenth day of the seventh month has passed, and we are disappointed in not seeing our Lord, it seems necessary to define our position again. This we most cheerfully do. But first please indulge us a few moments in expressing our great disappointment in not seeing our Lord at the time expected.

Christian Education

Conducted by the Department of Education of the General Conference.

L. A. HOOPES, Chairman;
FREDERICK GRIGGS, Secretary.

A Call for Teachers

WE have several times called the attention of our people who are connected with the public schools to the importance of our own school work and of their connecting with it. We are impressed to do this again, from the fact that the Department of Education has a number of calls for teachers for which it is unable to suggest suitable names. A number of industrial schools are to be opened this fall, and they call for principals and instructors. In one or two instances a man and his wife who are properly qualified may begin the work, being assisted by others as the school shall grow.

Surely the Lord does not present these favorable openings for educational work, and then have no one to fill them. But often those whom the Lord calls do not feel themselves in readiness to accept the call, and they ask to be excused. The Lord always excuses those who persist in their desire to be excused, but it is often to their eternal loss.

We shall be pleased to correspond with those who may desire to consider these matters further. The Department of Education has already had some correspondence with our teachers not engaged in our own denominational schools, but there are yet many teachers with whose work we are not only unacquainted, but whose names we do not even have. Will not these teachers place themselves in touch with the educational work of the denomination, even though they may feel unable to directly connect with it at present? We shall be pleased to receive communications from such persons at this time, as well as from those who may consider the matter of these calls for teachers for these industrial schools already spoken of. Address communications to Frederick Griggs, South Lancaster, Mass.

The Relation of Education to the Work of God

WITH the great work before us of enlightening the world, we who believe present truth should feel the necessity of thorough education in the practical branches of knowledge, and especially our need of an education in the truths of the Scriptures. Error of every kind is now exalted as truth, and it is our duty to earnestly search the sacred Word, that we may know what is truth, and be able intelligently to present it to others. We shall be called upon to make known the reasons of our faith. We shall have to stand before magistrates to answer for our allegiance to the law of God.

The Lord has called us out from the world that we may be witnesses for his truth, and all through our ranks young men and women should be trained for positions of usefulness and influence. They are privileged to become missionaries for God; but they can not be mere novices in education and in their knowledge of the Word of God, and yet do justice to the sacred work to which they are appointed.

In every land the need of education among our workers is painfully apparent. We realize that education is not only necessary to the proper fulfilment of the duties of domestic life, but necessary for success in all branches of usefulness. . . . Whatever business parents might think suitable for their children, whether they desire them to become manufacturers, agriculturists, mechanics, or to follow some professional calling, they would reap great advantages from the discipline of an education. . . . They need to be thoroughly furnished with the reasons of our faith, to understand the Scriptures for themselves. Through understanding the truths of the Bible they will be better fitted to fill positions of trust. They will be fortified against temptations that will beset them on the right hand and on the left. Efforts must be made to fit young men for the work. They must come to the front to lift burdens and responsibilities. Those who are now young must become strong men. . . . The work is now greatly retarded because men are bearing responsibilities for which they are unfitted. Shall this great want continue and increase? Shall these great responsibilities drop from the hands of experienced workers into the hands of those unable to manage them? Are we not neglecting a very important work by failing to educate and train our youth to fill positions of trust? Let the workers be educated, but at the same time let them be meek and lowly of heart. Let us elevate the work to the highest possible standard, ever remembering that if we do our part, God will not fail to do his.

The agency of the Spirit of God does not remove from us the necessity of exercising our faculties and talents, but teaches us how to use every power to the glory of God. The human faculties when under the special direction of the grace of God, are capable of being used to the best purpose on earth, and will be exercised in the future immortal life.

Ignorance will not increase the humility or spirituality of any professed followers of Christ. The truths of the divine Word can be best appreciated by an intellectual Christian. Christ can be best glorified by those who serve him intelligently. The great object of education is to enable us to use the powers which represent the religion of the Bible and promote the glory of God.

We are indebted to him who gave us existence for all the talents which have been intrusted to us; and it is a duty we owe to our Creator to cultivate and improve the talents which he has committed to our trust. Education will discipline the mind, develop its powers, and understandingly direct them, that we may be useful in advancing the glory of God. — Christian Education.

A new home has been secured for the training-school in London, England, in the immediate vicinity of the offices of the International Tract Society. In a private letter Brother H. R. Salisbury, the principal, writes of it as follows: "It is a most desirable place, quiet, and with very large gardens at the back. The owner had a partition between two large drawing-rooms taken out, making us a beautiful chapel, accommodating about seventy-five without crowding. So we shall be taking boarders for the first time; and we are making a beginning for a preparatory school for those whose ages are from fourteen to seventeen. This will also increase our attendance." For three years this school has carried forward its work in rented buildings rather than incur debt, and in the meantime funds are being raised to provide a permanent location when a providential opportunity presents itself. The school has proved itself to be of much value to the cause in Great Britain in training workers who are now in the field, and it has the hearty support of the people.

— The revolution in Paraguay has caused an "indescribable panic" at Asuncion, and foreigners in all parts of the country are leaving, under protection of the diplomatic corps.

— A tornado swept through Chautauqua County, N. Y., August 25, striking a grove in which a picnic crowd of several thousand persons were gathered. Four persons were killed, and many were seriously hurt.

— An Antwerp dispatch reports the burning of immense oil tanks at Hoboken, Belgium, containing 26,500,000 gallons of oil, August 26. A number of lives were lost. The property loss will be several million francs.

— Eighty-four arrests for violation of the Sunday law were made in Alexandria, August 14. The arrests grew out of an effort by the Retail Merchants' Association to enforce the Sunday law upon grocery and meat stores, but the men arrested were milk dealers, railway employees, druggists, newsboys, bootblacks, liverymen, and news-dealers. Not one was a grocer or a dealer in meats.

— Cæsar Booker, believed to be 125 years old, died in Washington, Ga., on August 24. He came to Georgia ninety years ago as a slave from Virginia. He did not know his exact age, but his memory of events of over a century ago was good and indubitably correct. Not a house of the present Washington was built when he was purchased by a Wilkes County farmer. Cæsar leaves six children, the oldest of whom lives near Thomson, Ga., and is ninety-six years old.

— It is reported from Reno, Nev., that recent cloudbursts and washouts in Tonapah and along the lines of the Tonapah and Carson and Colorado railroads are the most disastrous in the history of these districts. People at Tonapah and Goldfields are on the verge of starvation. They are being temporarily relieved by the rushing in of supplies via Croon Springs, Silver Peak, and Candelaria by wagon trains. But this is only temporary, and as over 5,000 persons must be fed in the different camps, extraordinary measures must be taken for their relief. Food supplies are practically exhausted.

— Striking dock laborers and marine workers have completely tied up marine traffic at Marseilles, France. On August 26 the strikers presented an ultimatum demanding the general adoption of eight hours' work without a diminution of wages. Unless it is accepted, the marine workers of all the ports of France will be ordered to strike. An appeal is also made to the government, which will consider the question at a cabinet meeting, August 29.

— It was hoped that the christening of the czarevitch, the new heir to the Russian throne, would be made the occasion of the proclamation of constitutional government in Russia, but this hope met with disappointment. Certain concessions of a minor character were proclaimed, however, for the purpose of propitiating the peasantry and the rank and file of the army, who are peasants in uniform. The edict issued to commemorate the christening of the heir to the throne abolishes the use of the knout among the rural classes, and curtails it in the army and navy. It appears, also, that a general reduction of the penalties imposed for common law offenses is proclaimed, together with a general amnesty for all past political offenses, except in cases of murder. Persons arrested for offenses, the punishment for which would not have involved the loss of civil rights, are pardoned, provided they had not been sentenced at the time of the czarevitch's birth. Absolutely nothing is done for the Jews, except to set aside the fines that have been levied upon Jewish communes whenever individual Jews have avoided military service.

— The Russian cruiser "Novik" was sunk off the island of Sakhalien, August 21, by two ships of Admiral Kamimura's squadron, after a fight which lasted some hours. The "Novik" had escaped from Port Arthur, and was trying to reach Vladivostock. The Russian ships in the harbor of Shanghai have not been dismantled. Representatives of the powers at Shanghai, under the leadership of the American consul, took joint action to protect the foreign residents there and insure the neutrality of that port, the Chinese taotai having given notice that he was unable to do this. Japan has notified the powers that if the Russian war-ships in that port are not immediately disarmed, she will take whatever steps she may deem necessary to protect her interests, which is taken to mean that Japanese ships will enter Shanghai harbor, and seize the Russian ships. General Kouropatkin's army and the Japanese forces opposed to him fought a battle, August 25, which seems to have been of an indecisive character. Port Arthur is reported to have about reached the end of its powers of resistance, and its fall is looked for at any time.

— The attorney for the Western Federation of Miners has sent a petition to President Roosevelt asking him to intervene in the labor troubles at Cripple Creek. The president is asked to consider questions of rights of citizens. His attention is called to the provisions of the Constitution guaranteeing life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness to all. Then follows a showing of the maltreatment of men at the hands of a mob,

The Presence of Christ (2)

HERE, in my workshop where I toil
 Till head and hands are well-nigh spent;
Out on the road where dust and soil
 Fall thick on garments worn and rent;
Or in the kitchen where I bake
 The bread the little children eat,
He comes, his hand of strength I take,
 And every homely task grows sweet.

I sit among the books I love,
 Or bend above life's dearest Book,
Softer than wing of whitest dove,
 Kinder than friend's most winsome look,
He broods upon the page I read;
 He tells me he is at my side,
Even here he gives what most I need,
 And stays by me, my blessed Guide.

The tempter dares an evil spell
 To weave around my wayward mood;
His baleful minions fain would dwell
 With me in desert solitude.
But, ere men's craft can drag me down,
 One strong to save defeats their end,
One once who wore hate's thorny crown,
 One evermore my deathless friend.

O Master, while the moments drift
 So fast away, till night draws near,
Be with me still that I may lift
 Unceasingly my song of cheer.
I would not have an hour apart
 From thee, sweet Lover, matchless King.
Abide with me. Take thou my heart.
 Low at thy feet myself I fling.

Training Children for God—No. 1

MRS. E. G. WHITE

“THAT our sons may be as plants grown up in their youth; that our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace.” (4) It should be the object of every parent to secure to his children a well-balanced, symmetrical character. This is a work of no small magnitude and importance. It requires earnest thought and prayer, no less than patient, persevering effort. A right foundation must be laid, a framework, strong and firm, erected, and then day by day the work of building, polishing, perfecting, must go forward.

(1) The early training of children is a subject that all should carefully study. We need to make the education of our children a business; for their salvation depends largely upon the education given them in childhood. Parents and guardians must themselves maintain purity of heart and life, if they desire their children to be pure. (5) As fathers and mothers, we should train and discipline ourselves. Then as teachers in the home, we can train our children, preparing them for the immortal inheritance.

At an early age the minds of children are very susceptible to impressions of good or of evil. Even in infancy a child is affected by a sorrowful expression on the mother's face. In a home where harsh, fretful, scolding words are spoken, a child cries much, and upon its tender sensibilities are impressed the marks of unhappiness and discord. Then, mothers, let your countenance be full of sunshine. Smile, if you can, and the infant's mind and heart will reflect the light of your countenance, as the polished plate of an artist portrays the human features. Be sure, mothers, to have an indwelling Christ, so that on your child's plastic mind may be impressed the divine likeness.

Mothers, have you neglected your God-given responsibility of multiplying agencies for the service of Christ? Children are the younger members of the Lord's family. Parents should not allow them to be hindrances. They should be led to consecrate themselves wholly to God, whose they are by creation and by redemption. With their parents, children are to share spiritual as well as temporal burdens. They should be trained to be helpful. Thus they will be taught to serve the Saviour. Opportunities of inestimable worth, interests infinitely precious, are committed to every mother. During the first three years of the life of Samuel the prophet, his mother carefully taught him to distinguish between good and (3) evil. By every familiar object surrounding him, she sought to lead his thoughts up to the Creator. In fulfilment of her vow to give her son to the Lord, with great self-denial she placed him under the care of Eli the high priest, to be trained for service in the house of God. Though Samuel's youth was passed at the tabernacle devoted to the worship of God, he was not free from evil influences or sinful example. The sons of Eli feared not God, nor honored their father; but Samuel did not seek their company nor follow their evil ways. His early training led him to choose to maintain his Christian integrity. What a reward was Hannah's! and what an encouragement to faithfulness is her example!

The father should be the faithful high priest of the home, the house-band of the family. He should not be so absorbed in business life or in the study of books that he can not take time to study the nature and the necessities of his children. He should devise ways by which they may be kept busy in useful labor agreeable to their individual dispositions. It is a great mistake to allow young men to grow up without learning some trade. To the parents of ancient Israel God gave a positive command that every child should learn a trade. (9) The carelessness of parents in neglecting to furnish employment to their children has resulted in untold evil, imperiling the lives of many youth, and sadly crippling their usefulness.

God desires both parents and teachers to train children in the practical duties of every-day life. Encourage industry. Girls — and even boys who do not have outdoor work — should learn how to help the mother. From childhood, boys and girls should be taught to bear heavier and still heavier burdens, intelligently helping in the work of the family firm. (6) Mothers, patiently show your children how to use their hands. Let them understand that their hands are to be used as skilfully as are yours in the household work. Often a fretful infant or a sick child keeps the mother awake night after night. At such times how much better it is for the children to draw upon their strength than to allow the already overtaxed mother to be burdened with work that they should do. Too often the mother succumbs to disease, sometimes lying upon her death-bed before her children realize that by sharing the home burdens, they could have lessened her cares, and spared her much suffering and affliction.

Prayerfully, unitedly, the father and the mother should bear the grave responsibility of guiding their children aright. Whatever else they neglect, they should never leave their children free to wander in paths of sin. (7) Many parents allow children to go and do as they please, amusing themselves, and choosing evil associates. In the judgment such parents will learn that their children have lost heaven because they have not been kept under home restraint. Parents should awake to their solemn responsibility, realizing that they are to teach their children to walk in the narrow way, that at last, a united family, they may enter the heavenly kingdom.

Children left in the hands of Satan are gladly taken by him and used in his service. Fathers and mothers, Satan is seeking to seize every one of your children. Come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty powers of darkness. Consecrate your household to God.

Evening and morning join with your children in God's worship, reading his Word and singing his praise. Teach them to repeat God's law. Concerning the commandments the Israelites were instructed: “Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt (8) talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up.” Accordingly, Moses directed the Israelites to set the words of the law to music. While the older children played on instruments, the younger ones marched, singing in concert the song of God's commandments. In later years they retained in their minds the words of the law which they learned during childhood.

If it was essential for Moses to embody the commandments in sacred song, so that as they marched in the wilderness, the children could learn to sing the law verse by verse, how essential it is at this time to teach our children God's Word! Let us come up to the help of the Lord, instructing our children to

Commentary, Vol. 2 (5) p. 1008; Evangelism p. (8) 499-500 keep the commandments to the letter. (1) [Let us do everything in our power to make music in our homes, that God may come in.] Banish the discord of scolding and fretting. Never exhibit passion. Christian parents will put away every objectionable trait of character, daily learning from the Great Teacher to train their children wisely, bringing them up in the fear and admonition of the Lord.

(Parents, your own home is the first field in which you are called to labor. The precious plants in the home garden demand your first care. To you it is appointed to watch for souls as they that must give an account. Carefully consider your work, its nature, its bearing, and its results. Line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little, you must instruct, warn, and counsel, ever remembering that your looks, words, and actions have a direct bearing upon the future of your dear ones. Your work is not to form beauty upon canvas, nor to chisel it from marble, but to impress upon a human soul the image of the Divine.

For Christ's sake, for the sake of your children, seek to conform your own life to the divine standard. Let nothing come between you and your God. Be earnest, patient, and persevering; be instant in season and out of season. Give your children intellectual culture and moral training. Fortify their young hearts with firm, pure principles. While you have opportunity, lay the foundation for a noble manhood and womanhood. Your labor will be rewarded a thousandfold.)

God's Providence in the Selection of Pioneer Workers

J. O. CORLISS

THE third angel's message was to be introduced to the last generation of men under peculiar circumstances. The multiplication of mechanical inventions and commercial plants was beginning fully to engage the talent of the world. Something startling must therefore be introduced by which to divert attention to the claims of God, if only for a brief period. The announcement of the immediate coming of Christ, at a definite time, was alone sufficient to do this. But even this must be more than a desultory proclamation. Men must be brought forward who could meet the conditions, and arrest attention.

Such men were found in William Miller and Joshua V. Himes, who were trained in adversity, and had the courage to sacrifice worldly prospects to enter upon a course of self-abnegation for the glory of God. But these men alone could not have done the work contemplated. Others, just as self-sacrificing and intrepid as they, became associated with them, and were thus trained to carry forward the work which the earlier great leaders were destined to let wane in their hands. For the purpose in view, it is only necessary now to mention the names of Joseph Bates and James White. The former had known the hardships of sea-faring life, having worked his way from cabin boy to master and part owner of a ship. When he embraced the message of the Lord's coming, he had never acknowledged defeat in an undertaking, and so was prepared to bestow a fortune on the cause his soul loved.

James White, a native of Maine, where in early days boys were generally trained in hardships, received his share of the common inheritance. Young, and full of enthusiasm, he received the news of the Lord's coming at a definite period, with the greatest joy, and threw his whole soul into its proclamation. A born leader of men, he was destined to fill a prominent place in God's work for the closing generation of men.

But these leaders could not have successfully met coming events without the training they had in company with such men as Miller, Himes, Marsh, and others of their kind. When the 1844 disappointment came, and the hearts of those who had before seemed strong leaders, grew faint, these men were prepared to follow the leadings of God's providence. In order to strengthen their hands, noble young men were found, who through storms of adversity stood by the work, until they fell at their appointed task.

One of the first of these was a young man who had suffered affliction from a tender age. When but a mere child, a fever-sore developed on one limb, threatening not only to destroy it, but to take his life as well. As a last resort it was decided to amputate the limb in order to save his life. So, at the age of thirteen, he submitted to the ordeal, without taking an anesthetic; and with the nerve that would have done credit to a wounded soldier, he lay and watched the process of the operation.

The relation of this incident is to point out a single lesson, and that is, that at that time of life the boy was revealing the material in him which, with the growth of his manhood, was to mark his persistence in work for the Master. During the seven succeeding years, the boy gave his attention to the attainment of an education, but in the dawn of manhood was led to receive the truth in its fulness.

This step in his life was taken in following after a cherished desire. He had long believed that if he could but secure an artificial limb, he would be able to walk without crutches. Partially to satisfy himself, he made a "stump" with which to get about. But is was awkward at best, and he said many times in the presence of his mother, "O if I had a leg with a foot on it!" His mother, knowing of a Brother Martin who had one of that kind, not in use, induced the young man to go with her to Washington, N. H., to attend a meeting at which Brother and Sister White were to be present, under the promise that she would take him round by Brother Martin's to see if the discarded leg could be secured. On trial, the coveted limb was found to be a perfect fit, and having gained possession of it as a gift, the young man and his mother proceeded to the meeting, where he received the truth in his heart, and from there went home rejoicing. In just such ways, God leads men to accept his truth, that he may use them to his glory.

In the meantime the Advent Review had been enlarged, the sub-title And Sabbath Herald being added to it; and the office of publication was removed to Rochester, N. Y. As burdens multiplied upon Brother White, persons were sought who might assist in the editorial work. The call to this work came to Brother Uriah Smith and his sister Annie, when they were both well engaged in public-school work. After mature deliberation, they accepted the call, he leaving a salary of one thousand dollars a year, to work for his board and clothes.

Annie lived but a short time after connecting with the paper, but left behind beautiful sentiments in verse, which have kept her memory fragrant with some, even to the present time. Brother Smith became editor of the paper in November, 1855, at the age of twenty-three, and remained at his post until the allotted years of threescore and ten were added to his life, when he suddenly laid down his burdens, March 6, 1903, while going from his home to the Review and Herald Office in Battle Creek, Mich.

MANY are kept from the blessedness of our text by a misunderstanding of the expression previously used, and they say, "Yes, I believe that in the end, when all things have been rounded up, it will be found that all things taken as a whole have worked, etc. But each circumstance as it comes along can not be the meaning of the text. Just think of this experience through which I am passing. I tell you, you can not appreciate what I have to endure. I know this is not for my good." Some even go so far as to say that if God really loved them as he says he does, this or that would never have been allowed to come to them.

Should we admit this "round-up" theory, we should still be held to the truth that whether this present "terrible circumstance" is or is not for your good, depends altogether upon whether or not you truly love God. If you love God, it certainly will; for, "We know." If you do not love God, it may not work for your good, or it may later be demon-

"That Blessed Hope"

O BLESSED hope! transcendant beaming
Like starry gems in stilly night; (2)
Afar thy radiant light is gleaming,
Pointing us to the dawning light.
Speaking the cheering, solemn message,—
Echoing forth one sweet refrain,—
I hear the ever-welcome story
Of Jesus coming back again.

The long, dark hours of night are waning,
Sin's awful orgies soon must cease;
The "signs" foretold by prophet's vision
Announce the coming Prince of Peace.
The shadows deep and growing deeper
Shall flee when dawns the morning light;
Take courage! weary, fainting reaper,
Thy toil ceases with the night.

Ye ransomed ones of every nation
Look up, for lo! he draweth nigh;
He comes to gather all his children
To mansions built in yonder sky.
Watch on! your dreary vigil keeping.
Be true! 'twill not be very long
Till past will be the night of weeping,
And sighing turned to gladsome song.

O blessed hope! It cheers life's pathway
And smooths the dreary, rugged road;
Speaks words of comfort 'mid the shadows,
And lightens all the weary load.
Shine on! ye rays of hope and promise.
Sing on! sing on, thou sweet refrain;
I love thy ever-welcome story
Of Jesus coming back again. (3)

Training Children for God—No. 2

MRS. E. G. WHITE (4)

(1) THE highest duty of parents is to give their children a religious training. To allow a child to follow his natural impulses is to allow him to deteriorate and to become proficient in evil. The results of wrong training begin to be revealed in childhood. In early youth a selfish temper is developed and as the youth grows to manhood he grows in sin. A continual testimony against parental neglect is borne by children who have been permitted to follow a course of their own choosing. Such a downward course can be prevented only by surrounding them with influences that will counteract evil. From infancy to youth and from youth to manhood, a child should be under influences for good.

In the home school — the first grade — the very best talent should be utilized. (2) Instruction should be given as God has directed. Patiently, carefully, diligently, mercifully, children should be trained. Upon all parents rests the obligation of giving their children physical, mental, and spiritual instruction. It is essential ever to keep before children the claims of God.

Physical training, the development of the body, is far more easily given than spiritual training. The nursery, the playground, the workshop, the sowing of seed and the ingathering of the harvest,— all these give physical training. Under ordinarily favorable circumstances a child naturally gains healthful vigor and a proper development of the bodily organs. Yet even in physical lines the child should be carefully trained.

Soul culture, which gives purity and elevation to the thoughts and fragrance to word and act, requires more painstaking effort. It takes patience to keep every evil motive weeded from the garden of the heart.

The spiritual training should in no case be neglected. Let us teach our children the beautiful lessons of God's Word, that through these they may gain a knowledge of him. Let them understand that they should do nothing which is not right. Teach them to do justice and judgment. Tell them that you can not permit them to take a wrong course. In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ present them to God at the throne of grace. Let them know that Jesus lives to make intercession for them. Encourage them to form characters fashioned after the divine similitude.

The prudent mother keeps the door of her lips, that she may not utter one hasty, fretful word. Fathers and mothers, never scold. Consecrate to God the talent of speech. Tell your children exactly what you require of them. Then let them understand that your word is law, and must be obeyed. Thus you are training them to respect the commandments of God, which plainly declare "Thou shalt," and "Thou shalt not." It is far better for your boy to obey from principle than from compulsion. If as teachers in the home the father and the mother allow children to take the lines of control into their own hands and to become wayward, they are held responsible for what their children might otherwise have been. From babyhood the child should be taught that the mother is master. Never is the mother to do anything that would give Satan opportunity to arouse or strengthen the disagreeable passions of her child. She should not use the rod, if it be possible to avoid doing so. But if milder measures prove insufficient, punishment that will bring the child to its senses should in love be administered. Frequently one such correction will be enough for a lifetime to show a child that he does not hold the lines of control.

Few parents begin early enough to teach their children to obey. The child is usually allowed to get two or three years the start of its parents, who forbear to discipline it, thinking it too young to learn to obey. But all this time self is growing strong in the little being, and every day makes harder the parent's task of gaining control. At a very early age children can comprehend what is plainly and simply told them, and by kind and judicious management can be taught to obey.

In the school, as well as in the home, the question of discipline should be understood. We should hope that in the schoolroom there would never be occasion to use the rod. But if in a school there are those who stubbornly resist all counsel and entreaty, all prayers and burden of soul in their behalf, then it (5) is necessary to make them understand that they must obey.

Some teachers do not think it best to enforce obedience. They think that their duty is merely to educate. True, they should educate. But what does the education of children amount to, if, when they disregard the principles placed before them, the teacher does not feel that he has a right to exercise authority?

I know that many parents do not co-operate with the teacher by fostering in the home the good influence exerted in the school. Instead of carrying out in the home the principles of obedience taught in the school, they allow their children to do as they please, to go hither and thither without restraint. And if the teacher exercises authority in requiring obedience, the children carry to their parents an exaggerated, distorted account of the way in which they have been "misused." The teacher may have done only that which it was his painful duty to do; but the parents sympathize with their children, even though they are in the wrong.

Those parents who themselves rule in passion are the most unreasonable when their children are restrained and disciplined in school. Parents, when the church-school teacher tries so to train and discipline your children that they may gain eternal life, do not in their presence criticize his actions, even though you may think him too severe. If you desire them to give their hearts to Jesus, co-operate with the teacher's efforts for their salvation. How much better it is for children, instead of hearing criticism, to hear from the lips of their mother sweet and tender and loving words commending the work of the teacher. Such words make lasting impressions, and influence children to respect the teacher.

The teachers in our schools need the keen perception of the Spirit of God, that they may know how to deal with the youth in their care. Those who conduct church-schools and larger schools should regard it as their privilege, not only to teach in the school, but to bring into the church with which they are connected the same talents that are used in the school. Talk to the parents along educational and medical missionary lines. Show them the privilege they have of using their God-given capabilities in training their children, thus co-operating with the teacher.

We are approaching the day of final reckoning. Christ told his disciples that prior to his second coming the world would be as it was in the days of Noah, when "they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, . . . and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away." (1) Those who believed when Noah began to build the ark, lost their faith through association with unbelievers who aroused all the old passion for amusement and display. For one hundred and twenty years the antediluvians were on probation, free to choose to obey the voice of God and find refuge in the ark, or to refuse to hear his voice, and be destroyed. They chose to disobey, and were destroyed.

In those days "the earth was filled with violence." Is not violence now in the land? How much is human life worth, if man's way is crossed, man's passion excited? If the picture of the present state of the world is not sufficiently startling to arouse parents to do their duty in bringing up their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord, what will bring them to a right understanding?

Satan is marshaling his hosts. Are you prepared for the conflict just before us? Are you preparing your children for the crisis? Are your children forming habits of decision, that they may be firm to principle? Parental duty has been sadly neglected. Will you not now repent, and take up your God-given life-work? There is no time to lose. Redeem the time, because the days are evil. Pray that your spiritual perceptions may be quickened. Strive to realize the importance of living in obedience to the Holy Spirit. When you do this, the heavenly angels will minister to you as teachers in the home, training you for the work of teaching your children.

When you stand before the great white throne, then your work will appear as it is. The books are opened, the record of every life is made known. Many in that vast company are unprepared for the revelations made. Upon the ears of some, the words will fall with startling distinctness, "Weighed in the balance, and found wanting." To many parents the Judge will say in that day, "You had my Word, plainly setting forth your duty. Why have you not obeyed its teachings? Knew you not that it was the voice of God? Did I not bid you search the Scriptures, that you might not go astray? Not only have you ruined your own souls, but by your pretensions to godliness, you have misled many others. You have no part with me. Depart, depart!"

Another class stand pale and trembling, trusting in Christ, and yet oppressed with a sense of their own unworthiness. They hear with tears of joy and gratitude the Master's commendation. The days of incessant toil, of burden-bearing, of fear and anguish, are forgotten as that voice, sweeter than the music of angel harps, pronounces the words, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter ye into the joy of your Lord." There stand the host of the redeemed, the palm branch of victory in their hand, the crown upon their head. These are the ones who by faithful, earnest labor have obtained a fitness for heaven. The life-work performed on earth is acknowledged in the heavenly courts as a work well done.

With joy unutterable parents see the crown, the robe, the harp, given to their children. The days of hope and fear are ended. The seed sown in tears and prayers may have seemed to be sown in vain, but their harvest is reaped with joy at last. Their children have been redeemed.

Fathers, mothers, shall the voices of your children swell the song of gladness in that day?

The Message of Elijah

M. E. KERN*

"BEHOLD, I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord: and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse." Mal. 4:5, 6.

There is no greater or more important problem facing this denomination to-day than that of saving our young people to the kingdom of God and to the Master's service. When we all — parents, ministers, and teachers — are aroused to the situation, we shall put forth more determined efforts for the young people, and we shall see the fulfilment of the message of Elijah. We shall see the hearts of parents and children united in love. We shall see families everywhere planning together how they can spread the message of the soon-coming Saviour. We are told that "we have an army of youth to-day who can do much if they are properly directed and encouraged."

It ought to be the greatest desire of our hearts that the boys and girls growing up in this denomination should give themselves to God to be sanctified by his truth. Not only this, but the cause of God needs these boys and girls with all their youthful ambition and energy and enthusiasm.

The Call to Action

"I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong." God is calling on our youth to organize for service, and he is calling on every worker to give thoughtful consideration to this problem of enlisting our young people in the work of the church. He is calling on the overseers of the church "to devise ways whereby young men and women may be trained to put to use their entrusted talents." He is calling on the ministers to use all their ingenuity "in devising plans whereby the younger members of the church may be led to co-operate with them in missionary work." — "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VI, page 435. These calls demand our careful thought and earnest prayers.

The power of God that is to attend the message will, first of all, be manifested in the homes that go to make up the church. It will enlist in the message the strong young men and women whose physical and mental capacity is a living witness to the principles of truth that have been committed to us. Properly directed and encouraged, the spirit of Christ will impel them, like himself, to be about their Father's business. Taking their positions in the ranks of the workers, they will push the triumph of the cross to every kindred, tongue, and people in this generation.

Young Men as Reformers

Geikie says, "The world, in all its affairs, is mainly what young men have made it. Manhood and age have taught, but it is youth that makes the disciples and spreads the doctrines." "The living force that conquers the world for God is the fresh enthusiasm of opening life. Years may counsel and stimulate and provide the means, but the hard work must fall mainly on young strength and zeal." Again he says "At sea or on shore, in the warehouse or the workshop, in war and in peace, in the church and in the world, youth bears the strain and carries the flag. Experience may counsel, but youth pulls the oar."

It is true to-day. The wheels of progress are being moved largely by young men. In the commercial world, in educational circles, in politics and in religion, young men are at the front. The young people of Seventh-day Adventists are not below the average. Our people come largely from the middle class, which is the backbone of society. Our young men and women, strengthened by the grand principles of healthful living and Christian education, should be able to take their stand by the side of the youthful workers of this generation, command their respect, and give them the message for this time. This may be true if they can be led not merely to assent to the truth, but to cordially receive it into their hearts and throw their whole lives into its proclamation. But simply to give assent to the present truth, and not to consecrate the life to service, is to stay the hand and quench the ambition of any intelligent young man or woman. And this is the condition of many of our young people.

The Problem

Here is the great problem with which we must grapple. It is often said that the strength of this cause lies in its young people. But will our young people who know the truth be sanctified by the truth? Will they turn away from the enticements of this world, from the frivolities of our age, and devote themselves to God? Will they fill their minds with the Word of God or with the trashy imaginings of modern story writers? Will they turn from things

An Onward Work

MRS. E. G. WHITE

On Sunday, July 17, I spoke in the M Street Memorial church to the company of workers who have gathered in Washington to hold a tent-meeting and to do Bible work. My heart is filled with a longing desire that all who connect with this important work shall themselves have a daily experience in the things of God, that they may fill the place assigned them in a way that will win the Lord's approval. On this point we can not be too urgent. Each worker should feel that he is on trial, and should strive to do his work in a way that will stand the test of the heavenly watchers.

I wish to express my gratitude to my Heavenly Father for the work that is being done on the school land at Takoma Park. I recently drove over the ground with my son and Brother Baird, and they explained the plans to me, and showed me the buildings going up. All who were on the ground were working diligently and earnestly.

We have an excellent company of workers here. If they will walk with God, they will gain a precious experience; for God takes a special interest in his faithful laborers. The work that they are doing is the Lord's work, and his angels are round about them. We certainly see the hand of the Lord in the establishment of the work in this place. The message received is that many years ago this work should have been done. The call for help that is being made now should have been made long ago.

"The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering: of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering. . . . And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them."

"And they came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made him willing, and they brought the Lord's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation." And the work went forward according to the word of the Lord.

We would now stir up the minds of our people in America to give willingly to the work that is being carried forward in Takoma Park. A school and a sanitarium are to be established in this place. A building in which publishing work can be done is to be erected. As soon as possible, school and sanitarium work should be set in operation.

We hope that no one will become weary in the special effort that is being made to erect memorials for God in this important place. All our churches are to show an unselfish interest in this work, doing all in their power to hasten it forward. Let church officers counsel together, and present to the church the importance of prompt action, and let the prayers of the church ascend to heaven, that all may see that it is their duty to help.

If there are those who are tempted to be extravagant in dress or in other things, let them restrain their desires, and remember that God calls upon them to show a special interest in the work in Washington. Let them be careful not to set an example that would lead others into extravagance.

The means that is sent in is to be used in the most careful, economical way. The buildings are to be put up and furnished without display, and without an unnecessary expenditure of means.

The Lord expects his people to take hold of this work with willingness, and with a ready mind. He is willing to give wisdom to those who are engaged in the erection of the buildings, and to those who shall be chosen to carry forward the work in these buildings. He now asks his people to offer willingly of their means, that the work on the buildings may be hastened forward.

God will surely bless those who will aid in carrying out the command, "Arise, and build for me a memorial in Washington." Let all his people take an active, unselfish interest in the advancement of the work that the Lord has declared should be done. Let no one yield to selfishness, or give with a grudging spirit. Let all give liberally, that the work may make rapid advancement.

Those who are working on the ground are doing their best. We pray that the Lord's blessing may rest upon them all, that everything may be done in accordance with his will. As the work advances, the workers will gain great blessings in seeing that the Lord answers the prayers ascending to him. His name is to be glorified. His truth is to find standing room here. The Lord God of Israel is in the work in this place, and we acknowledge it.

I call upon every church-member to remember that those who are working in Washington are in need of your stretching your hands toward heaven, and pleading with the Lord to put his Spirit upon every worker, imbuing him with his rich grace. Elder Daniells is bearing heavy responsibilities, and is putting to the tax every power of mind and body to advance the work. He needs each day the healing, reviving power of the Holy Spirit. It is your prayers we need, brethren and sisters, as well as your gifts. Both are essential, but your prayers are needed constantly.

Let every believer ask God to give special help to the workers in Washington, that no wrong moves may be made, that there may be no extravagance in the outlay of means. We need the meekness of the Redeemer. I pray that we may all put on Christ, wearing the robe of his righteousness.

Let us trust in the Lord, and pray earnestly that we may be kept by his power. Looking to human agents for help is very poor policy. We must put our entire trust in God, and exercise faith in him, depending upon his wisdom. Unless we do this, we shall surely err; for Satan is watching every chance to take advantage of us.

We must plan wisely. God will go before us if we will look to him as our counselor and our strength. We need to get away from our selfishness, and begin to work for the Lord in earnest. When he girds us with his strength, we shall have power to rise above the discouragement that the enemy seeks to bring upon us. We are to move guardedly, walking in wisdom's way, true to the Lord God of Israel, glorifying his name in all that we do and say.

"Shall the prey be taken from the mighty, or the lawful captive delivered? But thus saith the Lord, Even the captives of the mighty shall be taken away, and the prey of the terrible shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, . . . and all flesh shall know that I the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty One of Jacob." "Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

The Experiences of Former Days — No. 9

Early Methods of Labor

J. O. CORLISS

In the early days of the message, no local "pastors" of churches were recognized, but every preacher was an evangelist, pure and simple. Public meeting rooms, indeed, were scarce. The first company of Sabbath-keepers to possess a house of worship was the one at Buck's Bridge, in western New York. Theirs was erected in the summer of 1855. The following year a small house, eighteen feet by twenty-four feet was erected in Battle Creek, Mich. The walls of this structure were about ten feet high, and were formed of upright boards, having the openings between covered with battens.

Most of the preaching services of that time were held either in private dwellings or in country schoolhouses. When a "messenger" came into the neighborhood where a family of Sabbath-keepers resided, the largest room in the house was generally fitted up for an evening meeting, by resting the ends of planks on chairs, or blocks of wood, thus providing seating accommodation for all who might come to the meeting. Every other business was then laid aside, and a personal invitation was extended to every one for miles around, to come and hear about the Lord's coming.

Few fine-spun theories were then brought forward; for they were unknown. But in the most simple manner attention was called directly to the prophecies, tracing events from ancient times to the present. By the aid of a chart illustrating the prophetic symbols, which every preacher carried with him in those days, these things never failed to create a deep interest. If more than one meeting was held, the signs of the times were canvassed, bringing the little audience to see themselves facing a crisis which could be met only by a great moral reform. The results following those meetings were generally good. For example: One minister, whose name may properly be withheld for the present, had, on one occasion, a regular nightly attendance of eleven persons for two weeks. On Sundays thirteen were present. Yet a company numbering fifteen souls was organized soon after at that place. Glorious days! May the power then attending the message soon return to lighten the earth with glory.

There were men among those pioneers who occasionally dreamed to some purpose, in the Lord's work. Many illustrations of this might be given from the experience of Elder White and others; but for the intent of these articles one case must suffice. In the year 1852, Elder Joseph Bates was holding meetings in South Bend, Ind., and as his work there matured, he dreamed of going northeast by stage to a village the name of which was not revealed to him in the dream. He awoke, however, with the impression that he must go there immediately, as the Lord had precious souls there who would thus hear the truth. Suiting his actions to his impression, he left the next day on the stage going to the northeast. He told the stage-driver that he did not know how far he wanted to go, but would pay the amount demanded when he arrived at his destination. The driver accepted the peculiar situation, keeping his eye, however, on his eccentric passenger. At every village of prominence along the route Brother Bates was asked if that was the place where he wished to stop. He would then get out of the stage, look around, and return a negative answer. But upon coming in sight of Jackson, Mich., he said, "This is the place where I wish to stop."

Having paid his fare, he soon found the home of Brother Dan R. Palmer, a blacksmith of the village, and meetings were started in his house. At that time Brother M. E. Cornell and his wife were passing that way, with horse and buggy, to some point where he was to be the pastor of a First-day Adventist company, on a salary of three hundred dollars a year. He heard that Brother Bates was holding meetings there, and determined not to hear him. But after driving through the town, he became so troubled over the matter that he turned about, and went to the meeting. It happened that Brother Bates was just talking on the Sabbath question. After listening for a few minutes, he turned to his wife, and said: "Angie, this is the truth; I must obey it." "But," she said, "what about your engagement for the year to come?" "That will have to be canceled," he said, characteristically, and so the matter was settled.

He then started north for Tyrone, the residence town of Sister Cornell's parents. Arriving in the neighborhood, he saw John P. Kellogg (the father of Dr. J. H. Kellogg) in the field raking hay. "Hold the horse," he said to his wife, "while I go and give Brother Kellogg the light." Jumping over the fence, he ran to the place where Brother Kellogg was working, exclaiming, "I have light for you, Brother Kellogg." "Well," said Brother Kellogg, as he leaned on his rake, "what is it?" In a few moments the simple story was told, Brother Kellogg was convinced, and had resolved to obey.

Turning as abruptly as he had come, Brother Cornell rejoined his wife, telling her of the victory just gained for the truth. Before reaching home, another neighbor was met, and he also promised to obey the truth. Arriving at the parental home, nearly the first thing was to repeat the simple message to the inmates, with the result that the next Sabbath quite a company of the neighborhood met together for worship.

The School, the Young People's Work, the Homes—No. 2

M. E. KERN*

A RECENT writer says that the American people have made a success of every business except the business of training children; that in the mad rush for gold and glory the average father turns his children entirely over to the mother and the schools; and in the recent days of woman's clubs and conventions and business activities, the mothers in turn are giving over their sacred charge to the servants and the street. It is unfortunate that many Seventh-day Adventist fathers and mothers are doing practically the same thing.

The Saviour, in his tender love, has given us the warning: "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." Many parents will be asked in that day, "Where is the flock that was given thee, thy beautiful flock?" We must see more earnest study and prayer before the hearts of the fathers and children are turned to each other.

"It is the nicest work ever assumed by men and women to deal with youthful minds," yet many are ready to assume such sacred responsibilities without any preparation, while men are required by law to spend years in preparation to deal with the physical being.

The home is the unit, and our churches and institutions will be largely what our homes make them. "Happy the home when God is there." Shall we not pray for a reformation in our homes, that the message of Elijah may be received?

Our schools are inseparably connected with the young people's work. They are, or should be, centers of influence in the important mission of inspiring and training the youth for definite work. But the schools, however good, will fail to accomplish proper results with the young people, when their training as children has been deficient.

The great and dominating purpose before all our teachers, from the primary to the training-school, must be, first of all, "the restoration of the image of God in the soul." A secondary purpose will naturally follow; namely, a preparation of workers for the cause of God.

In behalf of our young people, two great objects must be kept before us in respect to education; first, to educate our people to appreciate the value of Christian education; and, second, to make the schools what they ought to be for the symmetrical development of the minds and hearts of our youth. To accomplish the great purpose for which our schools are founded, they must be taught by men and women who understand young people, whose whole hearts and lives are in this message, and who are willing to spend and be spent in this service. What, in all our work, is more important than the mold that is placed upon our workers?

In the REVIEW of Oct. 15, 1903, Sister White says, "The work of our colleges and training-schools should be strengthened year by year." And in a recent testimony this striking statement is made in reference to the most urgent need of the hour: "We first have a work to do at home. All our institutions — our sanitariums, our publishing houses, and our schools — are to reach a higher standard. Then workers sent to the foreign fields will reach a higher standard. They will be more earnest, more spiritual, and their labors will be more effective." If the students that are sent out from the institutions are to be more earnest and spiritual, I take it that the institutions themselves are to be filled with a new life and power from God. To this end we must all work and pray.

When the schools are doing what God desires them to do for those in their care, when all the workers arouse to the needs of the children and youth, and encourage our people to give all their children the benefits of a Christian educa-

The Path of Obedience

I SAID, Let me walk in the field;
He said, Nay, walk in the town.
I said, There are no flowers there;
He said, No flowers, but a crown.

I said, But the skies are black,
There is nothing but noise and din;
But he wept as he sent me back.
There is more, he said, there is sin.

I said, I shall miss the light,
And friends will miss me, they say;
He answered me, Choose to-night,
If I am to miss you, or they.

I pleaded for time to be given;
He said, Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your Guide.

I cast one look in the field,
Then set my face to the town.
He said, My child, do you yield?
Will you leave the flowers for the crown?

Then into his hand went mine,
And into my heart came he.
And I walk in a light divine
The path I had feared to see.

The New England Sanitarium

MRS. E. G. WHITE

EVER since the removal of the New England Sanitarium to Melrose, I have had a desire to see the new location, and to tell those connected with the institution of the important influence which its work may exert to benefit the people of Boston.

I have now been at the Melrose Sanitarium for a week, and I find it one of the most favorably located sanitariums that I have ever seen. The spacious lawns, the noble trees, the beauty of the scenery all around, answer to the representations given me of what our sanitariums ought to be. The quietude is delightful. The surroundings are attractive to the eye and refreshing to the mind. Here I see the very pictures that I have been shown in vision,— patients amid beautiful surroundings lying out in the sunshine in wheel-chairs and on cots. I see before me the sights that the Lord has helped me to present before our people in print.

Our sanitariums should be attractive places, and the surroundings of this sanitarium correspond more closely than anything else I have seen to the representations that have been given me by the Lord. This place, and several other places, were presented to me some time ago. This place was pointed out as a most desirable site for the sanitarium work that should be carried on near Boston. It has the attractiveness that will bring to it wealthy people from Boston. It has been reserved for us, that we may reach the people of that city. I have been instructed that it is in the providence of God that the sanitarium is here; and we should appreciate the advantages thus placed within our reach.

Since coming to the sanitarium, I have had opportunity to see a great deal of its surroundings. The buildings, with the forty acres which go with them, are in the midst of the Middesex Fells, a State reservation of three thousand five hundred acres. We have driven slowly through the park in every direction, looking with delight at the trees and the lakes, and inhaling the health-giving fragrance of the pines. It is delightful to ride through the forest. There are many beautiful drives, and much fine scenery. I enjoy looking at the many different kinds of trees, but most of all I enjoy looking at the noble pines. There are medicinal properties in the fragrance of these trees. "Life, life," my husband used to say when riding among the pines. "Breathe deep, Ellen; fill your lungs with the fragrant, life-giving atmosphere."

It is impossible for me to find words to describe the beauty of this place. Just in front of the sanitarium buildings there is a beautiful lake, called Spot Pond. This lake supplies the city of Boston with water, and it is most carefully guarded from contamination. No bathing or boating are allowed in it.

The sanitarium buildings are fairly well adapted to their present use. They were originally used as a hotel, but have been easily adapted to sanitarium purposes, though, of course, some changes had to be made. The buildings, with the forty acres of land, were purchased for thirty-nine thousand dollars. There was about six thousand dollars' worth of furniture in the buildings, and for this no charge was made.

I have been instructed that it was in the providence of God that our people obtained possession of this place. I have also been instructed that proper facilities should be provided for the increasing number of patients. Many from Boston and other places will come to this institution, to be away from the din and bustle of the city. Additional buildings will have to be put up. Rooms must be provided for the rich as well as for the poor. The money of the rich is needed; it will be a great help to the institution.

I groaned in spirit when I saw the sanitarium site in South Lancaster. I knew that the work ought to be carried on in a more favorable place, and when the opportunity came for it to be moved, I felt that the providence of God was guiding. A wealthy family living in South Lancaster offered to buy the sanitarium property, and gave our people a good price for it. Then they offered to give them the building, if they would move it off the ground. This offer was accepted, and the building was afterward taken down, and shipped to Melrose.

At the time that the sanitarium work was moved from South Lancaster to Melrose, I bore testimony to the wisdom of the change, and I now say again, The providence of God has been revealed in the transfer. The Melrose Sanitarium is a place that will be well patronized; and great good will be accomplished by the institution if it is rightly conducted.

There were those who said that the move would result in financial embarrassment. But there is no necessity for this institution to become embarrassed by debt. Should there be a pressure for means, money can be borrowed at four per cent interest. Thus the matter stands at the present time. But another building is needed. There should be accommodations for those who desire and are willing to pay for rooms with a private bath-room. People come here who say that they are willing to pay whatever is asked for rooms which are just what they want. But they see nothing that satisfies them, and they go away. Accommodations must be provided for people of this class. We are to labor in the highways as well as in the byways.

I am instructed that Boston must be worked; and I know that the possession of this sanitarium site is one of the greatest blessings that could come to our work in the Eastern States. A hundred or more might be cared for here were there suitable accommodations. Therefore we advise that the work on the new building be begun soon, so that patients of the wealthy class may be cared for. This class must hear the message. Let those in charge counsel together, and make arrangements to put up a building that will provide the necessary accommodations. The material now lying in the barn can be utilized. Remember, this material was a gift.

We rejoice that the Lord in his providence has guided us to this place. No buildings can be put up near the sanitarium. There is here nothing to offend the sense of sight or the sense of smell, and care must be taken that there shall be nothing of the kind. I am instructed that close inspection is being made by those who are not supposed to be inspectors. Everything about the building will be investigated. Note will be taken of the care given to the barns and stables; therefore there must be no laxness or looseness in the care of the premises. Let everything be such that it will bear favorable testimony to the institution.

Those who are acting a prominent part in connection with this sanitarium should be encouraged by what the Lord has done in behalf of the institution. Let all move forward unitedly. Let every one strive to become better acquainted with Christ Jesus, the great Medical Missionary. Let all strive with every power of the being to control the blind passions, which, if not purged from the life, would lead to the dishonor of God's holy name.

Self is to be subdued. Every thought, word, and act is to be brought into obedience to the will of Christ.

Let all who are connected with the sanitarium inquire at every crisis, What would Christ do were he in my place? Keeping the way of the Lord always leads men into paths of truth and righteousness. We are to make advance moves; we are not to stagnate.

If there are members of the board who can not see clearly what ought to be done to advance the work that other members of the board regard as essential, let all bow before God in prayer, asking him to cure the evil of disunion, and make the right way clear. Time is too short for any one to put his foot on the brake, so that the chariot of the Lord can not move forward. If there is one who persists in putting his foot on the brake, let others say, "We will now seek the Lord in prayer." Do not enter into controversy with the one who has set himself against the work that needs to be done. Take it all to the Lord in prayer.

Self, self, self — how it struggles for the supremacy! In all things the Word of the God of truth is to be our criterion. Study this Word. Constantly praying with meekness and reverence, constantly rendering obedience to a plain "Thus saith the Lord," you will reveal to angels and to men that you are members of the redeemed family.

Caution should be exercised not to bring an unnecessary burden of debt upon the institution. Stand in the light and freedom, without a yoke upon your necks. Come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Satanic agencies are constantly seeking to discourage and destroy those who will listen to the counsel of the enemy. Keep close to the word of God; for it is spirit and life. Then the Lord will be able to say of you, Ye "are laborers together with God: ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building."

"By Little and Little"

F. D. STARR

The promise of God to Israel concerning the extinction of the heathen nations then occupying the land of promise, was, "By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land." Ex. 23:30. The same thing is stated in Deut. 7:22.

Some things in the Lord's work are done suddenly. See Mal. 3:1; Mark 13:36. Mighty convulsions have taken place by which his power has been manifested to the great surprise of all who were connected with the events that occurred; but sometimes his work is done in a more gradual, progressive manner. While our God does great things, yet he likewise sometimes does little things.

Of the faithful martyrs who suffered during the Dark Ages, the years of pagan and papal persecution, it is said in Dan. 11:34: "Now when they shall fall, they shall be holpen with a little help."

Helped with a little help! is that the way God helps his people? — Yes, oftentimes that is his chosen way of working, just enough help to keep the head above water, so to speak; just enough to keep them from perishing. If that is our experience, let us not become discouraged and doubt God because he does not do for us what seems to us to be mighty things. A little help is just as much a sign of his working as a great help would be.

In Rev. 3:8 are found these chosen words of courage and hope: "Thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name." A little strength? Would not that be a sure condition of defeat and disaster? Can we be satisfied without the consciousness that we have great strength? If a little strength helped the believers referred to in the text, so that they kept the word of God, and did not deny his name, will not a little strength be sufficient to enable you to do the same?

By little and little is this work to be done. "Who hath despised the day of small things?"

Notice the littles in the experience of those who were rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem at the time of the restoration, as noticed in Ezra 9:8: "For a little space grace hath been showed us from the Lord our God, to . . . give us a little reviving in our bondage." A little season of grace, a little reviving in our bondage, are just as much tokens of the divine favor as the conversion of Nineveh, or the day of Pentecost, or some modern revival or religious movement of huge proportions.

How so? — Because it is God working in either case, in the great and in the small. While desiring the great, shall we not be thankful for the small? "Here a little and there a little." That is so often God's way of working, and in his working he gives us an example of how we are to work.

Notice carefully the final commendation: "Well, thou good servant: . . . thou hast been faithful in a very little." A very little, can that be so? Another scripture gives it: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things." Luke 19:17; Matt. 24:21.

But, somehow, we do not like to work that way; we prefer to see the work done up all at once. We would not mind giving quite a large donation once a year, or once every quarter perhaps, or making an extra effort once in a while, but this continuous giving, and this unremitting labor,— do we not get tired of it? and may we not be exempt from it? These feelings arise, and because of this the exhortation is given in Gal. 6:9: "And let us not be weary in well-doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

"Freely ye have received, freely give" (Matt. 10:8); and we may say, Continually we have received, continually let us give. If even daily we have occasion to give to help the cause of God or needy humanity, let us not think the continual little acts of benevolence will wear the life out of us. No, if done with the right motive, they will put new life into us, and keep us fresh, like the waters of the mountain rivulet.

"Give, said the little stream." As an example of a protracted good work, which could not be all accomplished in a month, nor in a year even, we might mention the sale of that most excellent book, "Christ's Object Lessons." That work was not finished in the short time we set for it to be done in. But shall we become disgusted with the "little by little" way in which it has been done? If all who can do anything in that work will repeat the efforts of the past, these littles will all make a large total indeed. This is a lesson with an intended moral to it.

The First Tent Meetings

J. O. CORLISS

Up to 1854 all the evangelical work done by Seventh-day Adventists was confined to private houses and district school buildings. During winter this method of labor was fairly successful, but in summer, when farmers were busy, and the evenings too sultry to meet in stuffy rooms, work was largely curtailed. This condition led to the consideration of more extended plans, by which work might be carried on throughout the year without interruption. In the spring of the year mentioned above, Elders White and Cornell were in Jackson, Mich., talking over the situation with Brother Dan R. Palmer.

During the council Elder Cornell told of tent work having been done in New York State by the First-day Adventists. The year before, two of their ministers had been using a sixty-foot circular tent, and had drawn large audiences. But the two men having disagreed, the tent was likely to remain idle, it being at that time stored in Rochester, N. Y. Elder Cornell then ventured the suggestion that the tent might be purchased for about one half of its original cost.

"But," said Elder White, "we have no money with which to purchase it, so we may as well pass that suggestion by." Brother Palmer, however, was not so settled in his convictions. He thought that they might raise money enough to procure the tent, and demonstrate the plan of holding tent-meetings in some of the populous towns in Lower Michigan. He said that his blacksmith business had been fairly remunerative, and that he had a little money laid by which he was willing to risk in the enterprise.

He then went to another part of the house, and soon returned with a sum of money which was deemed sufficient to pay a man's fare to Rochester and back, and pay for the tent. Upon seeing this, Elder Cornell, in his characteristic way,

Notes of Travel

MRS. E. G. WHITE

A Visit to Middletown, Connecticut

After two weeks' rest at the Melrose Sanitarium, we started Friday, September 2, for the Middletown camp-meeting, where we spent three days.

It had been planned that we should attend the Maine camp-meeting, and the Canadian Union Conference, which was held in Knowlton, Quebec; but I had not strength to endure so many meetings or the fatigue of so much travel.

Toward the close of our stay at Melrose, my strength revived, and I was encouraged to attempt to speak to our people assembled at the Middletown camp-meeting, which was not far away, and to stop on my way West to speak to our people in Battle Creek.

At Middletown we found about one hundred and twenty-five of our people assembled. This was the first annual meeting of the Southern New England Conference. A spot of ground near the city and easy of access had been chosen for the camp, and there was a fair attendance of the public.

During our short stay at the meeting, I spoke four times. Our brethren dared not hope for a large attendance of the public, but on Sunday the large tent was filled, and many were standing outside.

I spoke from the third chapter of First John, about God's great gift to our world. I spoke of Christ's temptation in the wilderness, and then dwelt for a short time on the subject of temperance. I spoke with great plainness, and the people seemed to be interested. The Lord strengthened me, and I felt no weariness after speaking.

Wherever I go, I shall urge the people to keep Christ uplifted. He is always the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever, always seeking to do us good, always encouraging and guiding us, leading us onward step by step. What he is to-day,— a faithful high priest, touched with the feeling of our infirmities,— he will be to-morrow, and forevermore. He is our guide, our teacher, our counselor, our friend, ever bestowing his blessings upon us in response to our faith. He invites us to abide with him. When we do this, when we make our home with him, all friction, all ill temper, all irritation, will cease.

Many years ago, when our work was just beginning, my husband and I received a letter from Brother Chamberlain, of Middletown, urging us to attend a conference in Connecticut. We decided to go if we could obtain the necessary means for the journey. My husband settled with his employer, and collected the ten dollars due him. With five of this I purchased articles of clothing that we much needed, and then patched my husband's overcoat, even piecing the patches. We had five dollars left, and with this we bought tickets to Dorchester, Mass. The little box that we used as a trunk contained almost all that we possessed on earth; but we enjoyed peace of mind and a clear conscience, and this we prized above all earthly comforts. On reaching Dorchester, we called at Brother Nichols' house, and as we were leaving, Sister Nichols handed my husband five dollars. This paid our fare to Middletown, Conn. We were strangers in the city, and had never seen one of the brethren living in the place. We had but fifty cents left, and my husband dared not use this to hire a carriage, so we walked on in search of some one of like faith. We soon found Brother Chamberlain, who took us to his house.

It was in Middletown, about 1849, that my husband began the publication of our first paper, a small sheet called, The Present Truth. We were then living in Rocky Hills, seven miles from Middletown, and my husband often walked back and forth between the two places, though he was then lame. When he brought the first number of the paper from the printing-office, we all bowed round it, and with humble hearts and many tears besought the Lord to let his blessing rest upon the feeble efforts of his servant. My husband then directed copies of the paper to all who he thought would read it, and walked seven miles to the Middletown post-office, carrying the precious papers in a carpet-bag. Again and again, before the papers were taken to the post-office, they were spread before God, and earnest prayers, mingled with tears, were offered to God that his blessing might attend the silent messengers. Very soon letters came, bringing means to help in the publication of the paper, and bringing also the good news that many souls were accepting the truth.

A Visit to Battle Creek

On Tuesday, September 6, we reached Battle Creek. Here I spent two days, speaking once to the patients in the Sanitarium parlor, once to a large congregation in the Tabernacle, and once to the Sanitarium helpers. Very short notice could be given of the meeting in the Tabernacle, and I did not expect to see many present. To my surprise, the Tabernacle was filled. It was estimated that about twenty-five hundred people were present. I spoke with freedom for more than an hour.

In the night season I received a special blessing from the Lord. I was to speak the next morning to the Sanitarium helpers, and I felt the need of wisdom and grace from on high. I laid right hold of the great Medical Missionary, and I was assured that his grace would be with me in large measure. This promise was fulfilled to me as I stood on Thursday morning before a congregation of nearly three hundred, mostly made up of sanitarium physicians, nurses, and helpers.

I know that when I ask the Lord to be my helper, he will not deny me, because it is my one desire to do his will and glorify his name. I am weak, but in depending wholly upon him, I obtain strength. In laying my burden upon the Burden-bearer, I find comfort and strength and hope. This is my desire, — to find abiding rest at his feet. While I keep firm hold of his hand, he leads me safely. The living God shall be the joy and rejoicing of my soul.

The Omaha Camp-Meeting

From Battle Creek we went to Omaha, where there was a large camp-meeting in progress. In a conversation with Elder A. T. Robinson, I learned that there were more than one thousand camped on the ground. There is a decided interest in the truth in Omaha, and the people of the city seem to be glad of the opportunity of attending the meetings.

I spoke on Sabbath afternoon and Sunday afternoon in the large tent. At each of these meetings the large tent was full. At the Sunday evening meeting, there were more than fifteen hundred present.

Monday morning I addressed the workers. During my talk I read the following from my diary: —

Many scenes have passed before me during the night, and many questions in reference to the work that we are to do for our Master, the Lord Jesus Christ, have been made plain and clear. Words were spoken by One of authority. The heavenly messenger said, "The ministry is becoming greatly enfeebled because men are assuming the responsibility of preaching without gaining the needed preparation for this work."

Those who give themselves to the ministry of the Word enter a most important work. Some have made a mistake in receiving ministerial credentials. They ought to take up work for which they are better adapted. Their efforts are feeble, and they should not continue to receive pay from the tithe. In many ways the ministry is losing its sacred character.

Our churches are becoming enfeebled by receiving for doctrines the commandments of men. Many are received into the church who are not converted. Men, women, and children are allowed to take part in the solemn rite of baptism without being fully instructed in regard to the meaning of this ordinance. Participation in this ordinance means much, and our ministers should be careful to give each candidate for baptism plain instruction regarding its meaning and its solemnity.

The gospel ministry is a high and sacred calling. Properly done, the work of the gospel minister will bring many souls into the fold. "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth," Christ said. "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." This commission is given to every ordained minister. The minister who is merely a speaker, who does not labor as Christ labored, putting his whole soul intelligently into the work, needs true conversion.

Those who preach the gospel without putting the whole being, heart, mind, soul, and strength, into the work, are consumers and not producers. God calls for men who realize that they must put forth earnest effort, men who bring thought, zeal, prudence, capability, and the attributes of Christ's character into their work. The saving of souls is a vast work, which calls for the employment of every talent, every gift of grace. Those engaged in this work should constantly increase in efficiency. They should be filled with an earnest desire to have their power for service strengthened, realizing that they will be weak without a constantly increasing supply of grace. They should seek to attain larger and still larger results in their work. When this is the experience of our workers, fruit will be seen. Many souls will be brought into the truth.

My brethren, labor earnestly and seriously. This does not mean that you are not to be cheerful, but that you are to put your whole soul into the work of preparing the way for Christ's coming. The Lord calls for whole-hearted, unselfish men to sound the note of warning. Workers who perform faithfully the duties given them of God will receive more and more grace. From their lives will shine forth more and more clearly the light of present truth. They will be given power to glorify God. They will be enabled to help and bless others by setting a Christlike example. Their path will grow brighter and brighter unto the perfect day. Their conversion will become more and more decided, and they will be vessels unto honor. God's purpose for his workers is that they shall grow up into the full stature of men and women in Christ.

FAITH is the soul's anchor. But the anchor must have something solid on which to hold. Christ is the rock for this anchor. Faith can not of itself save us. The anchor can not hold the ship unless it is flung out. So faith must venture on Christ. We must be fixed in his strength.—Christian Commonwealth.

The Move to Washington

The Trumpet Call

G. B. STARR

"AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Make thee two trumpets of silver; of a whole piece shalt thou make them: that thou mayest use them for the calling of the assembly, and for the journeying of the camps. And when they shall blow with them, all the assembly shall assemble themselves to thee at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation." Num. 10:1-3.

At the dedication of the temple one hundred and twenty priests sounded with trumpets, and it is written: "It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord; and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the Lord, saying, For he is good; for his mercy endureth forever: that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord." 2 Chron. 5:13.

This is as it should be in all the movements and journeyings of modern Israel to-day. When the Lord commands the trumpet to sound for the camp to move into new territory, every watchman should repeat the call, and all should be "as one, to make one sound to be heard," that all the people may be united in heart and soul in praising God, that not one soul should be confused by a discordant note.

The work of God must advance steadily into new territory. It must also increase in power and glory, and achieve greater conquests and victories along the way. The latest camping place must witness its greatest triumphs, not by way of disparagement or unfavorable contrast upon any past work or place of encampment, but by way of growth, healthy growth, and certain advancement to the point of final victory.

Those who advance with the work will and do rejoice in its progress. Those who fall behind and question the leading hand of God will, by this very act, bring about unpleasantness and unnecessary comparisons. By endeavoring to hold old camping grounds, and refusing to throw the weight of their influence along with the new moves, individuals will make issues that God never designed should exist; and these issues they will attribute to those who are moving in the order of God. With every soul who professes faith in the present truth it ought to be as with Ezekiel's cherubs: "Whithersoever the Spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go." It was no hardship for them to go; for their spirit was in harmony with the move.

We are one people throughout the world, baptized into one body by one Spirit. We move and act in concert, and this oneness is the very best credential that we could present to the world of the divinity of our commission from Jesus Christ to carry to the world the latest invitation to his marriage feast. This union does exist, and we have no fears of its ever being broken or in any way seriously shaken. Individuals may be shaken entirely out of it, and they may imagine that the union of the entire body is as weak and as shaky as they; but instead of this being the truth, the fact is that God is simply shaking out everything that can be shaken, to immediately replace it all with better timber, solid timber. Let no one be deceived, the body is not being seriously shaken because you feel so. Everything is being steadily shaken more compactly and strongly together, so that every joint will be knit so firmly that the very gates of hell shall not be able to secure an entrance at any point. If the place you hold is weak, because you are weak, then you must become strong, or be removed, to give place to some one who will be strong under trial and pressure, and who under no circumstances would prove untrue, or permit the enemy to take his place of trust.

God lives. Christ, the triumphant Conqueror, lives. The Holy Spirit lives and will carry to perfection the work committed to him. And the third angel, chosen of God and entrusted with the last message of mercy to men, will not fail nor disappoint Heaven, but will accomplish the work of gathering out a people who will triumph over the beast, the image, and the mark. In the sight of an apostate world the third angel will bring out a people who will "keep the commandments of God, and hold the testimony of Jesus." Neither of these will they be persuaded to relinquish; for they are the distinctive accompaniments, and powerful and effective agencies of the third angel with which he brings to a successful issue his herculean task under the adverse surroundings of the last generation of men.

Some of us in distant fields, on the outskirts, as it were, of the world's work, wish it known that everything is steady at the outposts. We feel no uneasiness. God is here, and our spirits rejoice in the movements from center to circumference, to push the work on and on into the "regions beyond." Now is certainly the opportune time to work the cities, the strongholds of Satan, and to gain conquests for the kingdom of Christ, trophies of his grace. The battle must be pressed to the very gates; for souls are perishing there, souls that might be rescued. We ought to move and act as men inspired by a great and mighty commission. We ought to let the world know by unmistakable evidences that we firmly believe that we hold a royal commission to warn them, and thus save them from the certain destruction that awaits the finally impenitent. If our words and message are full of energy, the people will be stirred.

Definiteness is what trembling souls are waiting for. We live in an age of compromise and indefiniteness and vacillation. Let all the trumpets give a certain sound, and all give the same sound,

The Closing Work

MRS. E. G. WHITE

We see before us a special work to be done. We are now to pray as never before for the Holy Spirit's guidance. Let us seek the Lord with the whole heart, that we may find him. We have received the light of the three angels' messages; and we need now to come decidedly to the front, and take our position on the side of truth.

(1) [The fourteenth chapter of Revelation is a chapter of the deepest interest. This scripture will soon be understood in all its bearings, and the messages given to John the revelator will be repeated with distinct utterance.]

(2) [The prophecies in the eighteenth of Revelation will soon be fulfilled. During the proclamation of the third angel's message, "another angel" is to "come down from heaven, having great power," and the earth is to be "lighted with his glory." The Spirit of the Lord will so graciously bless consecrated human instrumentalities that men, women, and children will open their lips in praise and thanksgiving, filling the earth with the knowledge of God, and with his unsurpassed glory, as the waters cover the sea.

Those who have held the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end will be wide-awake during the time that the third angel's message is proclaimed with great power.] (3) [During the loud cry, the church, aided by the providential interpositions of her exalted Lord, will diffuse the knowledge of salvation so abundantly that light will be communicated to every city and town. The earth will be filled with the knowledge of salvation. So abundantly will the renewing Spirit of God have crowned with success the intensely active agencies, that the light of present truth will be seen flashing everywhere.]

The saving knowledge of God will accomplish its purifying work on the mind and heart of every believer. The Word declares: "Then will I sprinkle clean water upon you, and ye shall be clean: from all your filthiness, and from all your idols, will I cleanse you. A new heart also will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you: and I will take away the stony heart out of your flesh, and I will give you an heart of flesh. And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes." This is the descent of the Holy Spirit, sent from God to do its office work. The house of Israel is to be imbued with the Holy Spirit, and baptized with the grace of salvation.

(2) [Amid the confusing cries, "Lo, here is Christ! Lo, there is Christ!" will be borne a special testimony, a special message of truth appropriate for this time, which message is to be received, believed, and acted upon. It is the truth, not fanciful ideas, that is efficacious. The eternal truth of the Word will stand forth free from all seductive errors and spiritualistic interpretations, free from all fancifully drawn, alluring pictures. Falsehoods will be urged upon the attention of God's people, but the truth is to stand clothed in its beautiful, pure garments. The Word, precious in its holy, uplifting influence, is not to be degraded to a level with common, ordinary matters. It is always to remain uncontaminated by the fallacies by which Satan seeks to deceive, if possible, the very elect.]

The proclamation of the gospel is the only means in which God can employ human beings as his instrumentalities for the salvation of souls. As men, women, and children proclaim the gospel, the Lord will open the eyes of the blind to see his statutes, and will write upon the hearts of the truly penitent his law. The animating Spirit of God, working through human agencies, leads the believers to be of one mind, one soul, unitedly loving God and keeping his commandments,— preparing here below for translation.]

There have been conflicts, and there will be until in heaven the voice of the Lord is heard, saying, "It is done." And after the redeemed are taken to heaven, God the Father will be glorified in crowning the Lord Jesus, who gave his life a ransom for the world.

Let the work of proclaiming the gospel of Christ be made efficient by the agency of the Holy Spirit. Let not one believer, in the day of trial and proving that has already begun, listen to the devising of the enemy. The living Word is the sword of the Spirit. Mercies and judgments will be sent from heaven. The working of providence will be revealed both in mercies and in judgments.

If we watch and pray and trust God's living Word, we shall gain victories "Watch and pray," Christ said, "that ye enter not into temptation." The day dawns. We must enter each battle with full faith that through Christ we shall be more than conquerors. As faithful watchmen we must diligently guard against the dangers threatening God's people. Other chapters will open before us, and in order to discern their meaning, we shall need keen perception. We are not to be depressed or discouraged, but filled with holy boldness. We are not to be disheartened by the prevalence of sin, or by the difficulties that arise on the right hand and on the left. We must put on the whole armor of God, and stand firm for the right. In the future, Satan's deceptions will assume new forms. False theories, clothed with garments of light, will be presented to God's people. Thus Satan will try to deceive, if possible, the very elect. Our watchword is to be, "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them."

(4) God's Messengers

Moses was chosen by God as the messenger of his covenant. The Lord called him up into the mountain, to receive his instruction for Israel. To-day God chooses men as he chose Moses, to be his messengers. These men are first to receive instruction from God; then they are to impart that which they have received, line upon line, precept upon precept, here a little and there a little. Every word they speak must be spoken in truth.

It is fearfully dangerous now to be unable to discern the truth. Those who would proclaim the word of God must be men who know his will. They must be careful least they make mistakes. They must be men of knowledge, able to instruct others. How can they speak clearly and intelligently of the things of God if they do not commune with him. They must obtain wisdom from on high. They are to be instant in season and out of season, always prepared for whatever they may be called to do.

"The priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth; for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts." The people should counsel with him, for he is God's appointed messenger. They should not only hear, but they should ask questions, that they may have a clear knowledge of truth. He is not to withhold his knowledge from them, but is to regard it as a sacred trust, to be imparted to others. His mind is to be a treasure-house of good things, from which, whenever occasion demands, he can draw a "Thus saith the Lord."

—THE— MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN

Convention Program

THE readings for the missionary convention, Sabbath, October 29, are printed herewith. Where no outline program is suggested in local conference plans, leaders in the churches will readily shape the services according to circumstances, to make the occasion most profitable. Various readers might be appointed to read, rather than have one person present all the matter. Certainly the readings should be followed by a very practical consecration service. Where the time can be given to the convention, it might be profitable to give a few minutes after each reading to open discussion or testimonies on the subject of the reading. Let us make the service bright, spiritual, and very practical.

We shall be glad to have the brethren and sisters send in short, pointed notes of missionary experience or helpful suggestions, for use in these columns during the winter campaign. Such reports will encourage the workers, and suggest ways of service.

A Call to Service

MRS. E. G. WHITE

WE are living in the very last days of this earth's history. All the signs that our Saviour predicted would herald his second advent are being fulfilled. We must earnestly continue laboring until the work given us to do is finished. As we see and sense the perils of the last days, and as the powers of darkness press more heavily than ever upon us, should not we, as Bible believers, do our very best work?

We see before us a special work to be done in the time when the whole earth shall be filled with the light and the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea. The prophecies in the eighteenth of Revelation will soon be fulfilled. During the proclamation of the third angel's message, "another angel" is to "come down from heaven, having great power;" and the earth is to be "lightened with the glory." The Spirit of the Lord will so graciously and universally bless consecrated human instrumentalities, that men, women, and children will open their lips in praise and testimony, filling the earth with the knowledge of God, and with his unsurpassed glory, as the waters cover the sea.

The proclamation of the gospel is the only means by which God can employ human beings as his instrumentalities for the salvation of souls. As men, women, and children proclaim the gospel, the Lord will open the eyes of the blind to see his statutes, and will write his law upon the hearts of the truly penitent.

To my brethren and sisters I am bidden to say: Let the work of proclaiming the gospel of Jesus Christ be directed and made efficient by the agency of the Holy Spirit. Let not one believer, in the day of trial and proving that has already begun, listen to the devising of the enemy. The animating Spirit of God, working through human agencies, leads the believers to be of one mind, one soul, unitedly loving God and keeping his commandments,— preparing here below for translation.

If the families around you are opposed to the truth, strive to lead them to yield to the claims of Christ. Work patiently, wisely, considerately, winning your way by tender ministry of love. Present the truth in such a way that it will be seen in all its beauty, exerting an influence that can not be resisted. Thus the walls of prejudice will be broken down.

If this work were faithfully done, if fathers and mothers would work for the members of their own families, and then for those around them, uplifting Christ by a godly life, thousands of souls would be saved. When God's people are truly converted, when they realize the obligation resting on them to labor for those within their reach, when they leave no means untried to rescue sinners from the power of the enemy, the reproach will be removed from our churches.

Do we realize how large a number in the world are watching our movements? From quarters where we least expect it, will come voices urging us forward in the work of giving to the world the last message of mercy. Ministers and people, wake up! Be quick to recognize and seize every opportunity and advantage offered in the turning of the wheel of providence. God and Christ and the heavenly angels are working with intense activity to hold in check the fierceness of Satan's wrath, that God's plans may not be thwarted. God lives and reigns. He is conducting the affairs of the universe. Let his soldiers move forward to victory. Let there be perfect unity in their ranks. Let them press the battle to the gates. As a mighty Conqueror, the Lord will work for them.

Let the gospel message ring through our churches, summoning them to universal action. Let the members of the church have increased faith, gaining zeal from their unseen, heavenly allies, from a knowledge of their exhaustless resources, from the greatness of the enterprise in which they are engaged, and from the power of their Leader. Those who place themselves under God's control, to be led and guided by him, will catch the steady tread of the events ordained by him to take place. Inspired with the Spirit of him who gave his life for the life of the world, they will no longer stand still in impotency, pointing to what they can not do. Putting on the armor of heaven, they will go forth to the warfare, willing to do and dare for God, knowing that his omnipotence will supply their need.

WE shall not need to go far to find the opportunity to work for God.

The Winter Missionary Campaign for 1904

A. G. DANIELLS

OUR brethren and sisters who are reading our papers are aware that for weeks preparations have been in progress for a long, vigorous, successful missionary campaign during the coming winter.

A winter missionary campaign by Seventh-day Adventists is a happy idea. It is consistent with our profession. It is an economical, efficient plan for doing a great and good work for our fellow men. It is practicable, and easy to be carried out.

The winter missionary campaign is designed to give every believer in the third angel's message an opportunity to do something to give that message to some one else. Its fullest aim is to place the light of this message in every home in the United States.

This is to be done chiefly by the distribution of our literature. Every preparation possible has been made by earnest, practical men to aid our people to sell, loan, and give our papers, tracts, and books to all the people of this country this winter.

This literature sets forth the truth of the gospel as it has been made known to us in the third angel's message. Every phase of gospel truth is brought out in various papers, tracts, pamphlets, and books. Without the slightest difficulty a selection can be made to meet any error we may want to correct.

The work is so simplified by the variety, character, and expense of the publications that every one can do something. During the month of November a general effort will be made with our papers. Special numbers of The Signs of the Times, The Southern Watchman, and Life and Health will be issued for the work during that month. Every one can exercise his personal choice as to which of these papers he will use, or whether he will work with all of them.

Our work with these papers need not, and should not, close with the month of November; but it is planned that strong, earnest, universal efforts shall be made during the whole month with these papers.

Following November, tract work and book selling should be taken up. Tracts telling about the coming of the Lord, the meaning of what is taking place around us, the evils of religious legislation, etc., should be scattered over this land like the falling leaves of the forests. Thousands of our people should spend December selling "Christ's Object Lessons" and "Story of Joseph" in behalf of our schools and the colored work. Thousands more should devote the whole winter to the sale of our trade and subscription books.

This, dear brethren and sisters, is, in brief, the aim and the practical meaning of the winter missionary campaign. Its full meaning can not be summed up. The judgment alone will reveal the full results. But we can here and now see enough in this to thrill our hearts and

*An Appeal for the Colored Race

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The proclamation that freed the slaves in the Southern States opened doors through which Christian workers should have entered to tell the story of the love of God. In this field there were precious jewels that the Lord's workers should have searched for as for hidden treasure. But though the colored people have been freed from political slavery, many of them are still in the slavery of ignorance and sin. Many of them are terribly degraded. Is no message of warning to reach them? Had those to whom God has given great light and many opportunities done the work that he desires them to do, there would to-day be memorials all through the Southern field,—churches, sanitariums, and schools. Men and women of all classes would have been called to the gospel feast.

The present condition of the Southern field is dishonoring to the Redeemer. But shall it lead us to believe that the commission which Christ gave to his disciples when he told them to preach the gospel to all nations, can not be fulfilled?—No, no! Christ has power for the fulfilment of his commission. He is fully able to do the work laid upon him. In the wilderness, armed with the weapon, "It is written," he met and overcame the strongest temptations that the enemy could bring against him. He proved the power of the Word. It is God's people who have failed. That his Word has not the power on hearts that it ought to have is shown by the present condition of the world. But it is because men have chosen to disobey, not because the Word has less power.

Some time ago I seemed to be, during the night season, in a meeting in which the work in the Southern field was being discussed. The questions were asked by a company of intelligent colored people: "Has God no message for the colored people of the South? Have they no souls to save? Does not the new covenant include them? If the Lord is soon to come, is it not time that something was done for the Southern field?"

"We do not," it was said, "question the need of missions in foreign lands. But we do question the right of those who claim to have present truth to pass by millions of human beings in their own country, many of whom are as ignorant as the heathen. Why is it that so little is done for the colored people of the South, many of whom are ignorant and destitute, and need to be taught that Christ is their Creator and Redeemer? How can they believe in him of whom they have not heard? How can they hear without a preacher? And how can one preach except he be sent?

"We lay this matter before those who profess to believe the truth for this time. What are you doing for the unenlightened colored race? Why have you not a deeper sense of the necessities of the Southern field? Does there not rest upon ministers of the gospel the responsibility of setting in operation plans whereby this people can be educated? Does not the commission of the Saviour teach this? Is it right for professed Christians to hold themselves aloof from this work, allowing a few to carry the burden? In all your plans for medical missionary work and foreign missionary work, has God given you no message for us?"

Then He who has authority arose, and called upon all to give heed to the instruction that the Lord has given in regard to the work in the South. He said: "Much more evangelistic work should be done in the South. There should be a hundred workers where now there is but one.

"Let the people of God awake. Think you that the Lord will bless those who have felt no burden for this work, and who permit the way of its advancement to be hedged up?"

As these words were spoken, deep feeling was manifested. Some offered themselves as missionaries, while others sat in silence, apparently taking no interest in the subject.

Then the words were spoken: "The South is a most unpromising field; but how changed would it be from what it is now, if, after the colored people had been released from slavery, men and women had worked for them as Christians ought to work, teaching them how to care for themselves!"

The condition of the colored people in the South is no more disheartening than was the condition of the world when Christ left heaven to come to its aid. He saw humanity sunken in wretchedness and sinfulness. He knew that men and women were depraved and degraded, and that they cherished the most loathsome vices. Angels marveled that Christ should undertake what seemed to them a hopeless task. They marveled that God could tolerate a race so sinful. They could see no room for love. But "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3:16.

Christ came to this earth with a message of mercy and forgiveness. He laid the foundation for a religion by which Jew and Gentile, black and white, free and bond, are linked together in one common brotherhood, recognized as equal in the sight of God. The Saviour has a boundless love for every human being. In each one he sees capacity for improvement. With divine energy and hope he greets those for whom he has given his life. In his strength they can live a life rich in good works, filled with the power of the Spirit. 7T 222-225

*The Sanctuary

It has been suggested that during this conference the truths which made us a separate and distinct people should be presented, as the present generation of Seventh-day Adventists know but little of the way in which the truth that makes us a peculiar people was first developed. The truth has come to us as a system. Many of us have embraced it because our fathers believed it, others because it appeared so clear when it was first presented to us. But few realize how the truth of the third angel's message was brought out link by link from the Bible.

When the time passed in 1844, there were none who believed the truth as we now hold it. All believed the prophecies that brought us to that time. Then began a greater searching of the Bible than had ever been, probably, at any time since the days of the apostles. They went over and over the old arguments concerning the prophecies that pointed to 1844, and after most thorough examination they could see no other conclusion than that the prophetic periods terminated at that time. As they studied, they began to see one link of truth after another; and as these truths unfolded to the pioneers,—I have reference to such men as Elders James White, J. N. Andrews, Uriah Smith, and J. H. Waggoner,—they did not dare present that truth to the people until they had made it a special subject of prayer and the spirit of prophecy set its seal to it. That was the way the foundation was laid, step by step, until they found they had a system of truth, and understood the third angel's message as it has been brought to us. At the present time there is but little realizing sense of this, and, in fact, it seems to me that we have been drifting away from the old landmarks, and are in such a condition that, when the test comes, as it surely will, many will be shaken out.

I will call your attention to the eighth and ninth chapters of Daniel. The application of the prophecy contained in these two chapters at one time stirred the world. They were the basis of the preaching of Joseph Wolf in Asia and Europe and in the islands of the sea, of Edward Irving in England, of William Miller in America, and of others who led out in different parts of the world. Unknown to one another, these men preached the central truth that made a separate and distinct people. The truths which they presented from the prophecies of the eighth and ninth chapters of Daniel, have been lost sight of to a certain extent. I have been told by some that they had been taught that we no longer need these prophecies; we need simply faith in Christ.

Now, my friends, let us see if we do not need these prophecies. When Moses brought Israel out from the land of Egypt, his last work was to recount the dealings of God with his people.

All for Christ

JOHN M. HOPKINS

COME, Holy Spirit, fill my heart,
And all my ransomed powers control,
Until, renewed in every part,
Christ rules supreme within my soul.

Yes, every fiber of my frame,
Lord, I would consecrate to thee,
To magnify thy holy name,
Since thou didst give thy life for me.

My heart to be thy dwelling-place,
My feet to walk thy peaceful ways,
My lips to tell thy wondrous grace,
And sound thy name in sweetest lays.

Till every word that I shall speak,
Shall be just what my Lord would say,
Were he to stand, holy and meek,
In just my place in every way.

Till everything that I shall do,
Shall witness to thy guiding power;
In deeds of service kind and true,
I follow Jesus every hour.

Preach the Word

MRS. E. G. WHITE

SATAN came to Adam and Eve with the temptation, "Ye shall be as gods." This same temptation comes to all the members of the human family. Naturally, man is not willing to be what God desires him to be. He is not willing to act his part in meekness and lowliness, as did the great Exemplar. Christ laid aside his royal robe and kingly crown, and clothed his divinity with humanity, that he might stand at the head of the human race.

In man's behalf Christ volunteered to pass over the ground where Adam fell, and, by living a life of perfect obedience, place the race on vantage-ground. Power was vested in him for the redemption of mankind. Yet he did not exalt himself. He humbled himself, becoming obedient to death, even the death of the cross. "Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

Only through faith in Christ's name can the sinner be saved. He is the head of the new creation. He is the Way, the Truth, and the Life. He is the prophet, priest, and king of all regenerate humanity. He is Immanuel, God with us. The eternal Word became flesh, and dwelt among us, and of his fulness have all we received. He is the author and finisher of our faith. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

Faith in Christ is not the work of nature, but the work of God on human minds, wrought in the very soul by the Holy Spirit, who reveals Christ, as Christ revealed the Father. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. With its justifying, sanctifying power, it is above what men call science. It is the science of eternal realities. Human science is often deceptive and misleading, but this heavenly science never misleads. It is so simple that a child may understand it, and yet the most learned men can not explain it. It is inexplainable and immeasurable, beyond all human expression.

All who search the Scriptures with humility of heart will be taught of God. "Hear ye this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah, which swear by the name of the Lord, and make mention of the God of Israel, but not in truth, nor in righteousness. For they call themselves the holy city, and stay themselves upon the God of Israel; the Lord of hosts is his name. I have declared the former things from the beginning; and they went forth out of my mouth, and I showed them; I did them suddenly, and they came to pass."

Read the whole of this chapter,— the forty-eighth of Isaiah. It has been pointed out to me as a representation of the true condition of those, who, though they have had the truth, line upon line, precept upon precept, have refused to hear and receive the testimonies of warning that God has given. They have hindered the work and cause of God with misrepresentation, falsehood, and heresy, and when the Spirit of God has spoken, they have said, "It is naught, it is naught."

"Because I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass; I have even from the beginning declared it to thee; . . . lest thou shouldest say, Mine idol hath done them, and my graven image, and my molten image, hath commanded them. Thou hast heard, see all this; and will ye not declare it? I have showed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them. . . . Yea, thou heardest not; yea, thou knewest not; yea, from that time that thine ear was not opened; for I knew that thou wouldest deal very treacherously."

"For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off. . . . For mine own sake, even for mine own sake, will I do it: for how should my name be polluted? and I will not give my glory unto another. Harken unto me, O Jacob and Israel, my called; I am he; I am the first, I also am the last."

The Lord continues to carry forward his work of redemption in the hearts of his people, not because of the goodness and devotion and purity that he sees in those in high places; not because they have feared the Lord; but for the glory of his name, lest the enemies of the truth should triumph.

The Lord has borne long with the waywardness of his people, with their persistency in carrying out their own way,— a way of self-exaltation suggested by the tempter. If they repent, and turn decidedly from their evil ways, they will become monuments of his almighty power and his abounding grace. They will become witnesses for the truth, establishing that which once they tore down. If they will repent, and make straight paths for their feet, that the lame be no longer turned out of the way, God will have mercy upon them.

The Lord desires those who have the light of truth to be wholly worked by the Holy Spirit. The truth is to be taught as Christ taught it. If he had desired us to cherish new views of God and heavenly things, he would have plainly given them to us by revelation. Let not God's servants allow their eyes to be blinded by the sophistries of the enemy. Let them not allow themselves to be led to accept theories that are contrary to the Word of God.

The word of the Lord is yea and amen. Teach the truth in the way that it is taught in the Bible. Teach it with clearness and in the fervency of the Spirit, because you have first talked with God, and have had the burden of the message laid upon your soul by the ministration of the Spirit. Then the truth will be proclaimed in its purity. There will be no tares mingled with the seed sown. The truth will commend itself to men and women of good judgment.

Thousands who have never heard the truth are starving for the bread of life. They want light from heaven. Were the truth presented to them in love, the Holy Spirit would move upon their hearts, leading them to accept it. But while these are waiting for the truth, there are backsliders in our churches, men and women who are acting as sinners. These, if not soundly converted will soon be punished as sinners.

Let no one present beautiful, scientific sophistries to lull the people of God to sleep. Clothe not the solemn, sacred truth for this time in any fantastic dress of man's wisdom. Let those who have been doing this stop and cry unto God to save their souls from deceiving fables.

It is the living energy of the Holy Spirit that will move hearts, not pleasing, deceptive theories. Fanciful representations are not the bread of life: they can not save the soul from sin.

Christ was sent from heaven to redeem humanity. He taught the doctrines that God gave him to teach. The truths that he proclaimed, as found in the Old Testament and the New, we today are to proclaim as the word of the living God.

Let those who want the bread of life go to the Scriptures, not to the teaching of finite, erring men. Give the people the bread of life that Christ came from heaven to bring to us. Do not mix with your teaching human suppositions and conjectures. I would that all knew how much they need to eat the flesh and drink the blood of the Son of God,— to make his words a part of their very lives! "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man," Christ declares, "and drink his blood, ye have no life in you. Whoso eateth my flesh and drinketh my blood, hath eternal life; and I will raise him up at the last day. . . . As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father: so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me. . . . It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing: the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life."

We need spiritual strength. If we eat the Word of God, if we practise the teachings of Christ, we shall have life in ourselves. We shall be strong in the strength of God.

*The Sanctuary

(Concluded)

DID anything happen in 1844 that marked the ending of the twenty-three hundred days? How many are there in the room who believed in the coming of the Lord in 1844? [Several hands were raised.] Was there anything in that message that gave you an experience different from what you had had before? — Yes. I remember that in the city of Worcester there was once a very profane man with whom I was acquainted. One day he said, "I want you to tell me why you keep the Sabbath." We sat down together, and I went over just what I have gone over with you now in a few words, about the coming of the Lord as preached in 1844, and then about our seeing the sanctuary question and the Sabbath. When I looked up, tears were running down his face, and the thought occurred to me that he once believed it. I said, "Did you believe that the Lord would come in 1844?" "Yes," he said, "and I would to God that I had the same experience now." There was something in the experience of the people of God then that they could not forget. It continued with them; and wherever you find them to-day, there is still a responsive chord in their hearts. It brought a peace to their souls that they could not forget. When God does something, he leaves an impression that will last as long as the Spirit strives with men.

"Well," says one, "the Lord did not come." That is very true, and I suppose that the time argument was studied over by the disappointed ones more than ten thousand times to see where the mistake was, and it came out 1844 every time. Why did they think the Lord would come in 1844? They reasoned that the sanctuary was the earth, and the cleansing of the sanctuary, the cleansing of the earth; that the earth would be cleansed by fire, and the cleansing would take place at the coming of the Lord. They made the text read, Unto two thousand and three hundred days, or years, then shall the Lord come; and they believed it.

Did you ever hear people laugh about it, and say that men back there sold their farms? I have heard them say so, and that they would not be such fools as that. The only question is whether if they really believed it, they would act as if they did. The believers did sell their farms, and left their crops unharvested in the fields. One man in New Hampshire, Leonard Hastings, said, "I thought the Lord would come in the autumn of 1844, and I did not dig my potatoes. The neighbors talked about putting a guardian over me, but they finally concluded that as I was comparatively an old man and good citizen, it would be a disgrace, so they did not do it. That year the potatoes rotted in the cellars, and my neighbors who dug their potatoes lost them. But I waited until the time passed, and the potatoes in the ground were all sound, and I had potatoes to sell to the very ones who were going to put a guardian over me." Wonderful experiences could be told with reference to that time.

God did not leave our enemies to find out our mistake. That is a wonderful thing; because the word "sanctuary" occurs in the Bible one hundred and forty-seven times, and it is not once called the earth; but we did not know it, and the Lord did not let the devil tell any one of it either. When our mistake was talked about, Professor Bush, of New York, said, "Those who attack William Miller on the time question attack him on his strongest point." Why did he not see the sanctuary question? Because they had not found it out.

Finally a man by the name of O. R. L. Crosier, wrote in the Day Star an argument that the sanctuary was in heaven, as straight as it has ever been published since, and that Christ entered the most holy place of the sanctuary to cleanse the sanctuary from the sins of God's people in 1844, and that the day of investigative judgment began at that time.

But did we catch it up, and herald it to begin with? — No. When I first began to keep the Sabbath, I gathered letters that were written at this time by Elder James White and his wife, and I have them in a book. I was looking them over the other day, and I saw in a letter something like this: That they had made it a subject of prayer before they dared to advocate that the sanctuary was in heaven. Finally the testimony came through the Spirit of God that the view taken in regard to the sanctuary was correct. Then they began to preach it. How different from the course followed by those who think they have new light at the present day. They were careful not to introduce anything that had not a solid foundation in the Bible. They were laying the foundation for the structure of a faith that would gather souls from every part of the earth. God gave them a spirit of carefulness that they might not weave into the structure any error. We have never had to renounce one position thus taken.

I could relate circumstances of like nature by the hour. The book "Early Writings" was largely a compilation of testimonies to prove positions taken after much fasting and prayer. To my certain knowledge, nearly every point made in "Early Writings" was made after some new point of truth had first been searched out, and had been made a subject of prayer. Then the Spirit of God set his seal to it that it was truth.

"But," says one, "is there no new light?" Of course there is new light, and I expect we shall get new light throughout eternity. Just as long as life lasts, there will be an unfolding of the truths of the Bible. But new light will never upset the past truth. It makes it more clear. I see these faces before me, and as I see them, I can not help thinking how you would rejoice if you could only see what God is unfolding, but do not get switched off from the old truths by some new-fangled notion. Let me quote you a text in the third chapter of Genesis and the fifteenth verse, when man was first driven from the garden of Eden: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." How much of the gospel is in that? Is it not all there? Well, if you get all the gospel there, why do you need anything more? The whole Bible is an unfolding of that scripture, and every prophet has been unfolding that precious truth. Has it denied that truth? — No, indeed. But it has made that truth clearer and clearer, and it will continue to do so until Satan's head is bruised, and he and all who sympathize with him go into the lake of fire.

It has been thus in every reform that has ever been. How much of the gospel of the first advent of Christ may be rejected in these last days? — Not a word of it. How much has changed? — None at all. When the great apostle saw this, he exclaimed: "O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! how unsearchable are his judgments, and his ways past finding out!" And so the third angel's message is the same old story, it is "the everlasting gospel." It is a resetting of eternal truths. It is a taking up of the old gospel truths and placing them in the framework of truth. You can never mix the third angel's message with error. You never can mix the work of God with the world.

Let me illustrate it. We believe in baptism, and we have the same formula as the Baptists. Both baptize in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Suppose I go into a Baptist church and preach baptism. When I preach baptism, I would have to preach what sin is, and then I would have to preach the law. How long would they let me stay there and preach the law? You can not return to the truths that are held by different denominations, and be saved by them. You can not take the truth out of the frame-

In Fidem

WILLIAM YARNELL

Dedicated to the afflicted.

Not here alone
We toil and plan, speak cheering words,
Breathe scent of buds, hear twit of birds;
We build, adorn, endear a home;
Enraptured, call the work our own,
Not here alone.

Not only here
We kiss the lips and clasp the hands,
Love the embrace that love demands;
Our loved ones but an instant stay,
Then leave us naught but blight, dismay;
'Tis lonely here.

Not here, ah, no!
The starving soul, the heart's desire,
Must slake its thirst in regions higher;
No perfect pleasures here delight;
For thorns and thistles, rust and blight,
Are here below.

Not here alone,
The pansy and chrysanthemum
And flowers all in beauty come;
A thousand worlds invite us home,
There's wealth untold and joys unknown,
Not here alone.

Not here and now
Is life complete. We know that soon
This earth, transformed, will bud and bloom
Edenic. All who love the truth
Will then enjoy eternal youth
In glory here.

The Power of the Word of God

MRS. E. G. WHITE

In the Word of God, studied and obeyed as our guide-book, we possess a spiritual guide and instructor by which the worst forms of evil in ourselves may be brought under the discipline of God's law. If the teachings of this Word were made the controlling influence in our lives, if mind and heart were brought under its restraining power, the evils that now exist in churches and families would find no place. Upon converted households the purest blessings would descend, and from these households an influence would go forth that would make them a power on the side of truth and righteousness.

The work of reformation that is needed must begin in the home. There rests upon parents the most solemn obligation to train their children in the fear and love of God. In the home the purest morals are to be preserved. Strict obedience to Bible requirements is to be taught. The teachings of the Word of God are to control mind and heart, that the home life may demonstrate the power of the grace of God. Each member of the family is to be "polished after the similitude of a palace" by the divine principles and precepts.

Parents need to awake from their deathlike slumber, and no longer neglect the Lord's instructions. As members of the church, and for the benefit of those with whom they may be associated, their characters are to be cast in a Christlike mold. Their course of action is to be a constant declaration that, instead of wearing the stamp and mold of the world, they have put on the image of the heavenly.

In the Bible the will of God is revealed. Through all time this book is to stand as a revelation of Jehovah. To human beings the divine oracles have been committed to be the power of God. The truths of the Word of God are not mere sentiment, but the utterances of the Most High. He who makes these truths a part of his life becomes in every sense a new creature. He is not given new mental powers, but the darkness that through ignorance and sin have clouded the understanding, is removed.

The words, "A new heart will I give you," mean, A new mind will I give you. This change of heart is always attended by a clear conception of Christian duty, an understanding of truth. The clearness of our views of truth will be proportionate to our understanding of the Word of God. He who gives the Scriptures close, prayerful attention will gain clear comprehension and sound judgment, as if in turning to God he had reached a higher grade of intelligence.

The Word of God, studied and obeyed as it should be, will give light and knowledge. Its perusal will strengthen the understanding. By contact with the purest, most lofty truths, the mind will be enlarged, the taste refined.

We are dependent on the Bible for a knowledge of the early history of our world, of the creation of man, and of his fall. Remove the Word of God, and what can we expect but to be left to fables and conjectures, and to that enfeebling of the intellect which is the sure result of entertaining error. We need the authentic history of the origin of the earth, of the fall of Lucifer, and of the introduction of sin into the world. Without the Bible, we should be bewildered by false theories. The mind would be subjected to the tyranny of superstition and falsehood. But, having in our possession an authentic history of the beginning of the world, we need not hamper ourselves with human conjectures and unreliable theories.

Wherever Christians are, they may hold communion with God. And they may enjoy the intelligence of sanctified science. Their minds may be strengthened, even as Daniel's was. God gave him "knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom." Among all the youth examined by Nebuchadnezzar, there was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah; therefore stood they before the king. And in all matters of wisdom and understanding that the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers that were in all his realm.

The habits and understanding of the youth who were not instructed by God were in accord with the knowledge that comes from idolatrous practises, and leaves God out of the reckoning. Daniel and his companions, from the first of their experience in the king's court, were gaining a clearer comprehension and sounder, more accurate judgment, than all the wise men in the kingdom of Babylon. They placed themselves where God could bless them. They ate only that food which would not becloud their minds. They followed rules of life which would help to give them strength of intellect, that they might gain the greatest possible benefit from their study of God's Word.

It was to Daniel that Nebuchadnezzar, unable to get help from his wise men, turned for an account of his forgotten dream, and for an interpretation of it. Daniel and his companions sought the Lord in prayer, and he revealed to them the dream and its interpretation. And when they related to the king what God had shown them, Nebuchadnezzar said, "Of a truth it is that your God is a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldst reveal this secret."

The mind of which error has once taken possession can never expand freely to after-investigation. The old theories will claim recognition. The understanding of things that are true and elevated and sanctifying will be confused. Superstitious ideas will enter the mind, to mingle with the true, and these ideas are always debasing in their influence. Christian knowledge bears its own stamp of unmeasured superiority in all that concerns the preparation for the future, immortal life. It distinguishes the Bible reader and believer, who has been receiving the precious treasures of truth, from the skeptic and the believer in pagan philosophy.

Cleave to the word, "It is written." Cast out of the mind the dangerous, obtrusive theories which, if entertained, will hold the mind in bondage, so that man shall not become a new creature in Christ. The mind must be constantly restrained and guarded. It must be given as food only that which will strengthen the religious experience.

The Bible teaches every soul to turn to the lands where the cross of Calvary has not been uplifted, and the name of Jesus exalted above every other name. The nation that gives free room for the circulation of the Scriptures opens the way for the minds of the people to work with greater vigor. The reading of the Scriptures causes light to shine into the darkness. As the Word of God is searched, life-giving truths are found.

In the cities and nations of our world, there will be found among unbelievers a remnant who will appreciate the blessed Word, and who will receive the Saviour. Christ will give men and women power to become the sons and daughters of God.

Between the great things that we can not do and the small things we will not do, the danger is that we shall do nothing.— Adolph Monod.

It is no time now to fold our hands, and to say we can do nothing. Surely we can do nothing of ourselves, but if we begin to put forth an effort to learn the truth as it is in Jesus, God will strengthen our memories, and his angel will stand by our side and also by the side of the one we are trying to instruct. And this effort to learn will take the mind from worldly things, and in a short time we shall wonder at what we have gained in the knowledge of the Scriptures, and the ability to impart to others. He that had one talent and buried it in the earth lost what he had. May God help all to improve their talent.

There are at work in Africa to-day 104 different missionary organizations using the Word of God, which is translated into 117 different dialects. Educationally, Africa is supplied with 8 colleges, 59 theological training-schools, 83 boarding and high schools, 63 industrial institutions, and 2 medical schools for training nurses, several kindergartens, and some thousands of primary and village schools. With all these rapid strides toward civilization and God, there are about 200 different dialects, of which about half have been given a written language and the Bible, and a very small proportion of each tribe is able to read, so that it is safe to say that not more than a quarter of Africa's dense population knows anything of Jesus. Let us continue to wait earnestly upon the Lord of the harvest for laborers who will take, first, the kingdom of God to these benighted people, and then all these things shall be added.— Exchange.

Writing from Landour, North India, Mr. W. H. Greet says: "The native state of Teeree Garhwai is a country unreached with the gospel. Preaching tours throughout the State are possible if preachers have power to climb as well as to preach. Tours have been made in times past in some parts of the State by workers of the nearest missions, but the State as a whole lies untouched. Four years ago in London we picked out its map, and, following after the will of God, we are working here. In the nearest villages they say that 'shikar' (hunting) sahibs come for bears and leopards; in the farther ones they know of 'compassi' men (compass men — surveyors) sent by government to spy from the heights that divide their wide valleys, on the sides of which their hundreds of villages lie; but a preacher of the gospel they do not know. 'Do no preachers come?' I asked in one of many places. 'O, yes,' answered the man I spoke to, 'pandits and Brahmans visit us.' He only knew of preachers of Hinduism. For some time we have been supported while pioneering, but of late we have been made to feel our inability to work alone. We are asking the Lord and his people, 'Where are the calls for Teeree's help?' and 'Where are the answers!'"— Exchange.

The Song of My Life

Tune: "Lead Kindly Light"

F. A. LORENZ

O Jesus, Lord, thou precious Lamb of God
Who died for me;
Who through his love set Satan's power at naught,
And made me free,
Thine am I now; thou art henceforth my choice.
I love to follow thy sweet Spirit's voice.

When I was in the servitude of sin,
Estranged from thee,
My lot was anguish, fear, and doubt within;
I could not see.
Thy ransom, Lord, has granted me release:
My soul is filled with gladness, joy, and peace.

My tongue shall sound thy praises to the world,
Without dismay,
For all thy mercies, Lord, to me unfurled
From day to day.
If mankind could but comprehend thy grace,
They would repent, kneel down, and see thy face!

Exalted Prince, how could thy child forbear
To sense thy worth?
Or to admire thy universal care
In heaven and earth?
Why should I not re-echo, shout, and sing
When vast creation's host adore their King?

Simplicity in Dress

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Fashion rules the world. She is a tyrannical mistress, often compelling her devotees to the greatest inconvenience and discomfort. Fashion taxes without reason and collects without mercy. She has a fascinating power, and stands ready to criticize and ridicule the poor, if they do not follow in her wake at any cost, even at the sacrifice of life itself. Satan triumphs that his devices succeed so well, and Death laughs at the health-destroying folly and blind zeal of the worshipers at Fashion's shrine.

Not a few of our people are backsliding. They are imitating the fashions of the world. Their spirituality is dying. Step by step they are approaching world-loving. Selfishness and pride are taking possession of them, and the love of God finds little room in their hearts. Some who were once zealous reformers are now indifferent. Sisters who were once plain in dress are now conforming to fashion. God expects his commandment-keeping people to be distinct from worldlings, but in many instances the line of demarcation is hardly discernible.

As I have seen those of our faith becoming worldly, my heart has been saddened. Some of those who profess to believe that they have the last message of mercy to give to the world, follow the fashions as far as they think their profession of faith will allow them to do. And their influence leads others astray. Their lack of Christlikeness is apparent to all. The Lord is dishonored by their conformity to the fashions of this degenerate age. Outward display is contradictory to our profession of faith. I entreat my sisters to guard against the tendency to dress in accordance with the demands of fashion.

[Many of the mother's burdens are the result of her effort to keep pace with the fashions of the day. Terrible is the effect of these fashions on the physical, mental, and moral health. Lacking the courage to stand firm for the right, women allow the current of popular feeling to draw them on in its wake.] (1) Much precious time is devoted to needless stitching and ruffling, to add to the outward adorning. Children are robbed of the time that should be devoted to gaining for them the beauty of holiness, — the inward adorning, which, in the sight of God, is of great price.

In order to follow fashion, many of our youth incur expenses that are out of proportion to their condition in life. Children of poor parents endeavor to dress as do those who are wealthy. Parents tax their purses and their God-given time and strength in making and remodeling clothing to satisfy their children's vanity. If our sisters who have an abundance of means would regulate their expenditures by their responsibility to God, as wise stewards of the means entrusted to them; their example would do much to stay this evil now existing among us. Souls whom they might have helped by letting their light shine in good works, are strengthened in unbelief by their inconsistent course.

Mothers can not be slaves to fashion and at the same time exert a sanctifying influence in the home. [Too often professedly Christian mothers sacrifice principle to their desire to follow the multitude who make fashion their god. Conscience protests, but they are not brave enough to take a decided stand against the wrong.] (1)

Many of our sisters willingly bear the unnecessary burden of conformity to worldly dress. Attempting to follow the fashions, their burdens are greatly increased, yet they willingly bear the yoke, because they worship the goddess of fashion.

It is not only the privilege, but the duty of every one to increase daily in the knowledge of God and the truth. Satan's object is gained if he can invent something that will so attract the mind that God will be forgotten, and he uses fashion with great success to do this. He knows that women who constantly have a feverish desire to follow the fashions, have benumbed their moral sensibilities, and do not realize their real spiritual condition. Worldly minded, they are without God, without hope. They take no time to pray, or to search the Scriptures in order that they may understand the truth, and teach it to their children.

When I have seen Christian women leading out in temperance campaigns, presenting to liquor inebriates a pledge to abstain from all intoxicating drinks, I have thought that it would also be well for them to present to every Christian woman a pledge to abstain from all needless display and extravagance in dress. By dressing simply, thus saving time and means, Christian women can do much to help the temperance cause. The means thus saved will clothe the destitute, feed the hungry, and will help to close the door against liquor drinking. Those who are simple in dress have time to visit the afflicted, and to pray with and for them. On all Christians rests a solemn duty to economize, that they may be better able to help those in need.

(1) We do not discourage neatness in dress. Correct taste is not to be despised nor condemned. Our faith, if carried out, will lead us to be so plain in dress, and zealous of good works, that we shall be marked as peculiar. But when we lose taste for order and neatness in dress, we virtually leave the truth; for the truth never degrades, but elevates. When believers are neglectful of their dress, and are coarse and rough in their manners, their influence hurts the truth. "We are," said the inspired apostle, "made a spectacle unto the world, and to angels, and to men." All heaven is marking the daily influence that the professed followers of Christ exert upon the world. (2) My sisters, your dress is telling either in favor of Christ and the sacred truth or in favor of the world. Which is it? Remember that we must all answer to God for the influence we exert.

(3) Simplicity of dress will make a sensible woman appear to the best advantage. (4) We judge of a person's character by the style of dress worn. A modest, godly woman will dress modestly. A refined taste, a cultivated mind, will be revealed in the choice of a simple, appropriate attire. The young women who break away from the slavery of fashion will be ornaments to society. The one who is simple and unpretending in her dress and in her manners shows that she understands that a true woman is characterized by moral worth. How charming, how interesting, is simplicity in dress, which in comeliness can be compared with the flowers of the field.

Never trifle with one sin. It is like a little cloud which, as a poet has said, may hold a hurricane in its grasp. The next sin you commit may have a mighty effect in the blighting of your life. You do not know the streams that may flow from that fountain; for sin is a fountain — not a mere act, but a fountain of evil. — Andrew A. Bonar.

The Week of Prayer

R. C. PORTER

For a number of years this people have set apart one week in the early part of the winter for the purpose of prayer, meditation, and study with reference to the times in which we live, the nearness of the coming of Christ, and a personal preparation for that event. This year the date for this period is December 10-17.

Taking a brief review of the experience of these periods appointed for this purpose, I am reminded of many very precious experiences, and I recall a number of persons who were reclaimed from a backslidden condition, and many who, having sought and found the Saviour, date their Christian experience from one of these occasions.

One special feature of the readings during the week of prayer has ever been a review of the evidences of the nearness of the coming of Christ, as shown in the fulfilment of prophecy. Another prominent feature of the readings has been a review of our work in foreign fields, to see how we are progressing in the proclamation of the third angel's message. The advancement that has been seen from year to year in sending out missionaries, and establishing the work in new fields in distant lands has been most cheering. Many a time we have been led to say, "This is the Lord's doing; it is marvelous in our eyes."

This extension of the work has necessarily made greater demands upon our conferences in the home fields. I have noticed, however, that a call for means to extend the work in distant lands is always received joyfully by our brethren and sisters in the older conferences. Many a time I have seen the tears of joy stream from their eyes as these calls have come, and I have heard them say, from full hearts, "This begins to look as if we are nearing home."

The increasing calls for workers and means to hasten the message in all the world on its closing mission, is the strongest evidence that this people is fulfilling the prophecy of Revelation 14.

Elder James White was reviewing the signs of the second coming of Christ in one of the last meetings in which I met him before his death. After reviewing the prophecies of the second, seventh, eighth, and ninth chapters of Daniel, the twenty-fourth chapter of Matthew, and the twelfth of Revelation, he paused as if in deep reflection, and said, in substance: "But after all, my signs of the times are, How are they getting along with the movement to enforce Sunday laws? and how are we getting along with the work of carrying the message of warning against that movement to the world? and what advancement are we making in raising the standard of the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus before the people?" These questions left an indelible impression upon my mind. These are the very issues that in all the world are to come to a crisis the very hour that Christ is seen coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory.

The report of Elder Conradi in the Review of September 1, of the persecutions in the Middle Russian Mission, together with the report of the mob in Virginia that took down the tent in which a course of lectures setting forth the teachings of the Word of God was being given, are the clearest evidences of the progress of the work and the spirit of the movement against the commandments of God.

The Sunday Rest Congress held in connection with the World's Fair at St. Louis was an additional evidence of the progress of that movement in the fulfilment of prophecy. No one who knew the meaning of Revelation 13 could attend that congress without being greatly stirred with the importance of the definite and speedy giving of the warning message in every nation in the world.

In view of these facts is it a time for men of means among us to be effecting long-time loans of their money, or otherwise tying it up for a long period? We can all see that such a course would be a practical denial of the faith. No; the time has come to sell the surplus, unused property, and let it be doing its work in the advancement of the message. A spirit of sacrifice to spread the truth is the only consistent course for any loyal Seventh-day Adventist at this time.

Every Seventh-day Adventist should determine that the eighty thousand dollars, so much needed to meet the immediate demand of the work in foreign fields, shall not fall short of that amount. It can be raised if each church-member will do his best. Let us respond that it shall be raised.

"The Lord is coming! let this be
The herald note of jubilee;
And when we meet, and when we part,
The salutation from the heart."

A Most Important Season

H. G. THURSTON

Another most important season is just before us; and as the week of prayer draws near, let each inquire what this season means to him, to this people, and to the world.

Special church and conference meetings are very important, but does any gathering compare with the yearly season when all the people, from the least to the greatest, devote days to heart searching, repentance, and giving up to God in a special sense, all that they have and are and expect to have and be? Who can estimate the interest of the heavenly host in such a season, and with what joy God counts as his those who, though sinful, still hope in his mercy?

Is this a year of victories? Has God's loving-kindness been revealed in abundant blessings of health — physical and spiritual — and a harvest of good things? Or have you been led through the valley, brought low through affliction or defeat?

READINGS FOR THE WEEK OF PRAYER

To be Read in all the Churches in the United States, Dec. 10-17, 1904

Suggestions to Church Officers

As in past years, the elder should make early announcement of the week-of-prayer services, and specially urge full attendance. It is a week for special effort for the unconverted and backslidden.

Let the one who is to read the reading for the day be appointed sufficiently long beforehand so that he may be prepared to present it with the Spirit and with the understanding. Let some one in the congregation read the Scripture portions that the writers may ask to have read.

Where possible, let each day's program be planned for in advance, securing co-operation in the matter of appropriate hymns or Scripture readings. After the reading there will be time for prayer, social meeting, or missionary meeting, and the planning of personal practical work. Urge all to take some part in adding to the interest of the meetings, so that all may share in the revival and blessing that we all so much need.

The envelopes for the annual offering should be distributed the first Sabbath — December 10 — and gathered the last Sabbath, following the reading, December 17. This annual offering is a most important one. Can not every church lay plans to double last year's offering? Money for missions is not "mere money." It is a life-line thrown out to the perishing who are calling to us. Emphasize the call of the hour. The cash offering should be sent at once to your conference treasury, as the money is needed. Later gifts may be forwarded at the end of the month, with your regular remittances to your treasury.

Everywhere there is progress, and courage and confidence fill the hearts of believers. God is leading this work on to victory. Let us watch for souls, and press the work forward in this important time.

GENERAL CONFERENCE COMMITTEE.

A Preparation for the Coming of the Lord

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Reading for Sabbath, December 10)

(1) SIN is a hateful thing. It marred the moral beauty of a large number of the angels. It entered our world, and well-nigh obliterated the moral image of God in man. But in his great love God provided a way whereby man might regain the position from which he fell in yielding to the tempter. Christ came to stand at the head of humanity, to work out in our behalf a perfect character. Those who receive him are born again. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God."

Christ saw humanity, through the working of the mighty growth of sin, demoniacally possessed by the prince of the power of the air, and putting forth gigantic strength in exploits of evil. But he saw also that a mightier power was to meet and conquer Satan. "Now is the judgment of this world," he said; "Now shall the prince of this world be cast out." He saw that if human beings believed in him, they would be given power against the host of fallen angels, whose name is legion. Christ strengthened his own soul by the thought that by the wonderful sacrifice which he was about to make, the prince of this world was to be cast out, and men and women placed where, through the grace of God, they would regain what they had lost.

(1) What does the Lord require of his blood-bought heritage? — The sanctification of the whole being,— purity like the purity of Christ, perfect conformity to the will of God. My brethren and sisters, God requires this of us. Into the holy city there can enter nothing that defileth, or maketh a lie. God's word to us is, "I am the Almighty God; walk before me, and be thou perfect." "Ye shall be holy unto me: for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine." "Ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." "In him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power." He "gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

(1) We can, we can, reveal the likeness of our divine Lord. We can know the science of spiritual life. We can honor our Maker. But do we do it? O, what an illustrious example we have in the life that Christ lived on this earth! He has shown us what we can accomplish through co-operation with divinity. We are to seek for the union of which he speaks when he says, "Abide in me, and I in you." This union is deeper, stronger, truer, than any other union, and is productive of all good. Those who are thus united to the Saviour are controlled by his will, and are moved by his love to suffer with those who suffer, to rejoice with those who rejoice, to feel a deep sympathy for every one in weakness, sorrow, or distress.

(1) Higher than the highest human thought can reach is God's ideal for his children. He wants our minds to be clear, our tempers sweet, our love abounding. Then the peace that passeth knowledge will flow from us to bless all with whom we come in contact. The atmosphere surrounding our souls will be refreshing.

But how few there are who are making determined efforts to reach this ideal. Satan is trying to keep the people of God dwarfed, feeble, un-Christlike. And too often he is successful. In our churches there are many who have not the spirit of the Master, many who act as if they were in the world merely to please themselves. They forget that the enemy is assailing all who profess to be children of God, trying to overcome them, so that they will disappoint and dishonor the Saviour. They forget that the purity and unselfishness that characterized the life of Christ must characterize their lives, else in the day of God they will be found wanting, and will hear from his lips the irrevocable sentence, "Cast ye the unprofitable servant into outer darkness; there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

I have been especially instructed in regard to the danger of drawing apart, and of evil speaking and contention. We need to bow before God in repentance because of our lack of love for one another, and for him who died for us. The gold of love and faith is not abundant among us. (1) Many are holding on to the truth with but the tips of their fingers. The precious time that should be spent in speaking of the Saviour's power to save, is being spent by many in carrying evil reports. Unless they make a decided change, they will be found wanting. Unless they have an entire transformation of character, they will never enter heaven. A deep, thorough work needs to be done in the hearts of those who profess to be children of God. Until they reveal the faith that works by love and purifies the soul, very little genuine work for God will be done in the world.

Let our people take up their appointed work,— the work of soul-saving. Let them not think that upon them has been laid the burden of watching and criticizing the work of others. Those who put their whole souls into the work that God gives them will have no time to criticize the efforts of their fellow workers, no time to weaken the hands of those who are straining every nerve and muscle to advance the work.

Let not any man or woman feel that he or she has been appointed to carry evil reports from church to church, and from conference to conference. I have been grieved beyond measure to see how easy it is for persons to spend precious time in this cruel work. The proclamation of the first, second, and third angels' messages is now to be our burden. Those who spend their time in thinking and speaking evil are bringing to the foundation, material represented by hay, wood, and stubble, which will be consumed by the fires of the last days. They will one day see that their time has been spent in weakening churches, institutions, and conferences.

God hates all such work. He will call to account all who engage in it. Let those who fear God and believe his word put a guard on their lips. Let them be determined not to speak words that will injure the cause of God, or give a wrong representation of the work being done in any of his institutions. Let them be careful not to speak words that will be a temptation to some one else to withhold the confidence and the words of courage that ought to be given to those who are severely tried, and who, perhaps, work early and late to fulfil the many calls of duty, until it seems as if mind and body would give way under the strain.

Words of suspicion and distrust, like the thistle-down carried by the wind, are scattered far and wide, and can never be recalled. Un-Christlike speech lies at the foundation of nine tenths of all the difficulties that exist in the church. Satan's agents are industriously trying to get professed Christians to speak unadvisedly. When they succeed, Satan exults, because God's followers have hurt their influence. We have no time, in these solemn moments, to contend with one another. Those who give way to evil-thinking and evil-speaking do not realize how much time they cause others to lose. God's servants have been called upon to settle difficulties between brother and brother, and time has been spent in this way that belonged to souls ready to perish,— time that ought to have been devoted to the fulfilling of the gospel commission.

My brother, my sister, be afraid to find fault, afraid to talk against your fellow workers. You have enlisted to fight against Satan's forces, and you have no time to fight against your fellow soldiers. (1) [The truly converted man has no inclination to think or talk of the faults of others. His lips are sanctified, and as God's witness he testifies that the grace of Christ has transformed his heart.] He realizes that he can not afford to talk discouragement or unbelief. He can not afford to be harsh or faultfinding. He has not received orders to punish the erring and sinful by heaping abuse upon them. (2)

Speak words of kindness, words of uplifting; for this is the fruit borne upon the Christian tree. Overcome all harshness. Eternity alone will reveal the harm that harsh words do to those who utter them, and to those who hear. Hold firmly to the One who has all power in (2) heaven and earth, and although you often fail to reveal patience and calmness under provocation, by no means give up the struggle. Resolve again, this time more firmly, that you will be an example of (1) Christian patience. Remember that [those only will enter heaven who have overcome the temptation to think and speak evil.] (2)

"The work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever." Christ will be to his people all that these words express if they will heed the invitation to come to him. He will be to them life and power, strength and efficiency, wisdom and holiness. God calls upon us to live the Christ-life, to reveal this life to the world. When we do this, prejudice will vanish, and difficulties will adjust themselves. We shall gather about the great Missionary, our hearts filled with gratitude and love.

My brethren and sisters, instead of spending your time looking for and talking of the shortcomings of others, give yourselves to the work that Christ did when in this world. How untiringly he labored! In the temple and the synagogues, in the streets of the cities, in the market-place and the workshop, by the seaside and among the hills, he preached the gospel and healed the sick. His life was one of unselfish service, and it is to be our lesson book. The work that he began we are to carry forward.

Brethren and sisters, how much work have you done for God during the past year? Do you think that it is those men only who have been ordained as gospel ministers that are to work for the uplifting of humanity?— No, no! Every one who names the name of Christ is expected by God to engage in this work. The hands of ordination may not have been laid upon you, but you are none the less God's messengers. If you have tasted that the Lord is gracious, if you know his saving power, you can no more keep from telling this to some one else than you can keep the wind from blowing. You will have a word in season for him that is weary. You will guide the feet of the straying back to the fold. Your efforts to help others will be untiring, because God's Spirit is working in you.

Have you told those with whom you have come in contact what banner you are serving under? Have they been able to see, by the Christlikeness of your words and acts, that you are a true follower of Jesus. [O that our hearts may be deeply impressed with the importance of living holy lives, that the world may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus, and have learned of him. Christian worth does not depend upon brilliant talents, lofty birth, wonderful powers, but on a clean heart,— a heart which, purified and refined, reflects the image of divinity. It is the presence of him who gave his life for us that makes the soul beautiful.] It is not eloquent speakers that are needed so much as humble, earnest workers,— men and women who have a childlike trust in God. [It is the men of prayer that are men of power.] They will be enabled to lead sinners to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

My brethren and sisters, [do not allow trifling things to absorb your time and attention. Keep your mind on the glorious themes of the Word of God. A study of these themes will give you a strength that will carry you through the trials and difficulties of the last days, and bring you to where you will walk with Christ in white, because you are worthy. In the Word of God, studied and obeyed, we possess a spiritual guide and instructor by which the worst forms of evil in ourselves may be brought under the discipline of his law. If the teachings of this Word were made the controlling influence in our lives, if mind and heart were brought under its restraining power, the evils that now exist in churches and in families would find no place. Upon converted households the purest blessings would descend, and from these households an influence would go forth that would make God's people a power on the side of truth.] (2)

But there are many in our churches who know little of the meaning of the truth for this time. They have not searched for the truth with humble, contrite hearts. I appeal to the members of our churches not to disregard the fulfilling of the signs of the times, which say so plainly that the end is near. O, how many who have not cared for the salvation of their souls will soon make the bitter lamentation, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved!"

O, that we would remember that it is court week with us, and that our cases are pending! [Now is the time to watch and pray, to put away all self-indulgence, all pride, all selfishness. The precious moments that are now by many worse than wasted should be spent in meditation and prayer.] (2) Many of those who profess to be keeping the commandments of God are following inclination instead of duty. As they are now, they are unworthy of eternal life. To these careless, indifferent ones, I would say, Your vain thoughts, your unkind words, your selfish acts, are recorded in the book of heaven. The angels that were present at Belshazzar's idolatrous revelry stand beside you as you dishonor your Redeemer. Sadly they turn away, grieved that you should thus crucify him afresh, and put him to open shame.

"Who among us shall dwell with the devouring fire? who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? He that walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly; he that despiseth the gain of oppressions, that shaketh his hand from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil; he shall dwell on high: his place of defense shall be the munitions of rocks. . . . Thine eyes shall see the King in his beauty: they shall behold the land that is very far off."

[On Christ's coronation day he will not acknowledge as his any who bear spot or wrinkle or any such thing. But to his faithful ones he will give crowns of immortal glory.] (2) Those who would not that he should reign over them will see him surrounded by the army of the redeemed, each of whom bears the sign, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS. They will see the head once crowned with thorns crowned with a diadem of glory.

[In that day the redeemed will shine forth in the glory of the Father and his Son. The angels of heaven, touching their golden harps, will welcome the King, and those who are the trophies of his victory,— those who have been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. A song of triumph will peal forth, filling all heaven. Christ has (3)

What This Denomination Exists For

E. W. FARNSWORTH

(Reading for Sunday, December 11)

SEVENTH-DAY ADVENTISTS are ordained of God to do a specific work. That work is to enlighten the world concerning the coming of Christ in this generation. That which will advance this work is proper and right for a Seventh-day Adventist to engage in; and that which will not advance it, is not proper for him to engage in.

A prophetic description of this work is found in these scriptures: * —

Rev. 14:6-15.
Rev. 18:1-5.
Rev. 10:1-3.
Rev. 7:2.

Notice a few points in these texts: —

These angels flew. Wings symbolize swiftness, celerity.

The eagle's wings on the back of the lion in the seventh chapter of Daniel are interpreted as meaning, "Their horses also are swifter than the leopards, and . . . they shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat." Hab. 1:6-8.

So also the four wings on the leopard indicated the great celerity of movement in the Grecian army.

So, likewise, the angels who bring from heaven the last message this world will ever hear, have wings with which they fly to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

The King's business requires haste. We are to speedily carry what he has to say to all parts of the world.

Another feature of the message is made prominent by its own language. The angel declares what he has to say "with a loud voice." Verse 7.

"And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice." Verse 9.

"And after these things I saw another angel come down from heaven, having great power; and the earth was lightened with his glory. And he cried mightily with a strong voice." Rev. 18:1, 2.

"And I saw another mighty angel come down from heaven. . . . His face was as it were the sun . . . and he . . . cried with a loud voice, as when a lion roareth." Rev. 10:1-3.

What do these repeated and intensified expressions mean? — They are descriptive of the power and definiteness with which this latter-day message is to go to all the world. They describe the unqualified positiveness and certainty with which the warning message is to be given. There is no mental reservation on the part of those who truly give it. There can be no saying in their hearts, "My Lord delayeth his coming." With all the assurance and conviction that can be begotten by the testimony of the Scriptures and the anointing of the Holy Spirit, they go forth to proclaim their message.

This is the work God has given Seventh-day Adventists to do. He has given it to no one else, and he has given them nothing else to do. They have one mission while they live, and only one, and that is to give the message of the third angel. Anything that does not pertain to this work is not legitimate for them to do.

Another prophet describes their mission as follows: "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." Joel 2:1. Something startling and tremendous is about to occur. "The day of the Lord cometh." An alarm must be given. The world must be aroused and warned.

And yet another prophet bears this testimony: "Cry aloud, spare not, lift up thy voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." Isa. 58:1. Such a message as this, the Scriptures declare, must be given, "and the Scripture can not be broken." Therefore God has ordained that the people whom he has called out from the world should go to every nation and country, and declare the truth that he has made known to them.

This people stands related to their work, to the world, and to God as did John the Baptist. Seven hundred years before his birth the prophet heard "the voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God." Isa. 40:3. Centuries passed by, till, at last, a man began to preach in the wilderness just as the prophet had foretold. When asked who he was, he replied, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, Make straight the way of the Lord, as said the prophet Esaias." John 1:23.

John was simply a "voice;" so Seventh-day Adventists are to be the "voice" of the angel referred to in the scriptures previously quoted.

The voice of John was heard only in the wilderness of Judea; but the voice that the prophet heard giving the last message was sounding in ringing tones to "every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people."

John went only to his own people in the wilderness; but Seventh-day Adventists must go to every nation, every kindred, every tongue, and every people.

The work of John was to prepare a people to meet Christ at his first advent, when he came in lowliness as a sin-bearer, a sin-cleanser; but the work of Seventh-day Adventists is to prepare a people to meet Christ at his second advent, when he comes as "King of kings, and Lord of lords." His mission then is not to cleanse men from sin, but to translate those who are cleansed and prepared to behold his glory.

If it was necessary that a message be given to prepare a people to meet Christ at his first advent, how much more is it necessary that one should be given to prepare men to meet him when he comes in glory!

The Saviour, when speaking of this message, and its close, said, "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Matt. 24:14. This is the climax of the gospel.

To emphasize this fact, the Saviour taught that this generation would not pass till all these things are fulfilled. And then, as if to extinguish the last doubt, he lifts his hand to heaven, and exclaims, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away."

This makes more emphatic our mission and work. Every one to whom the light comes should be a light-bearer. The one all-absorbing thought should be the proclamation of the message. Every plan and purpose should be, will be, colored by the faith we have in this message. That which will form the object of our constant contemplation will be this gospel work. Every plan for labor, the arrangement and furnishings of our dwellings, the buying and selling of property, the education of our children, the disposition we make of our money — and in truth every act and plan of life — will be made with direct reference to the light that God has given us — the third and last angel's message.

Every faculty of our mind and body must be given to this work. Our money should be devoted to the same purpose. Our thoughts in the day, and our dreams in the night, must be of this work. "But this I say, brethren, the time is short: it remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none; and they that weep, as though they wept not; and they that rejoice, as though they rejoiced not; and they that buy, as though they possessed not; and they that use this world, as not abusing it: for the fashion of this world passeth away." 1 Cor. 7:29-31.

Spirit and Power of the Message in the Early Days

S. N. HASKELL

(Reading for Monday, December 12)

THE last work of Moses was to write the book of Deuteronomy. The Hebrew title to this book means "repetition." Lest Israel should forget their early experience, God rewrote the laws and reviewed their history. He would have us also remember all the way that the Lord has led us.

Six years before the destruction of Jerusalem, the book of Hebrews was written. In this book the apostle exhorts the brethren in these words: —

> Call to remembrance the former days, in which, after ye were illuminated, ye endured a great fight of afflictions; partly, whilst ye were made a gazing stock both by reproaches and afflictions;

we might give much is like a man with a store of life-preservers coolly throwing one now and then among a struggling mass of drowning people reaching out their hands for help. The work is now to be finished. Christ is at the door. Now we must keep our sins forgiven. We must get ready to live in heaven with the Lord and the holy angels, as members of that white-robed throng made up from every nation and tribe and tongue and people. What a privilege to throw into this work every power of our being, and every resource that we can command. The way to a finished work lies through the regions beyond, and over the barren fields showers of the latter rain are now falling. Thank God that we live in such a time as this.

An Impressive Scene

(1) NOT long ago a very impressive scene passed before me. I saw an immense ball of fire falling among some beautiful mansions, causing their instant destruction. I heard some one say, "We knew that the judgments of God were coming upon the earth, but we did not know that they would come so soon." Others said, "You knew? Why then did you not tell us. We did not know." On every side I heard such words spoken.

In great distress I awoke. I went to sleep again, and seemed to be in a large gathering. One of authority was addressing the company, before whom was spread out a map of the world. He said that this map pictured God's vineyard, (1) which must be cultivated. As light from heaven shone upon any one, that one was to reflect the light to others. Lights were to be kindled in many places, and from these lights still other lights were to be kindled. The words were repeated,—

> Ye are the salt of the earth: but if the salt have lost his savor, wherewith shall it be salted? it is henceforth good for nothing, but to be cast out, and trodden under foot of men. Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill can not be hid. Neither do men light a candle, and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick; and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven.

I saw jets of light shining from cities and villages, and from the high places and the low places of the earth. God's Word was obeyed, and, as a result, there were memorials for him in every city and village. His truth was proclaimed throughout the world.

Then this map was removed, and another put in its place. On it, light was shining forth from a few places only. The rest of the world was in darkness, with only a glimmer of light here and there. Our Instructor said, "This darkness is the result of men's following their own course. They have cherished hereditary and cultivated tendencies to evil. They have made questioning and faultfinding and accusing the chief business of their lives. Their hearts are not right with God. They have hidden their light under a bushel."

If every soldier of Christ had done his duty, if every watchman on the walls of Zion had given the trumpet a certain sound, the world might, ere this, have heard the message of warning. But the work is years behind. While men have slept, Satan has stolen a march upon us. (1)

No Time to Lose

Soon grevious troubles will arise among the nations,— trouble that will not cease until Jesus comes. As never before, we need to press together, serving him who has prepared his throne in the heavens, and whose kingdom ruleth over all. God has not forsaken his people, and our strength lies in not forsaking him.

The judgments of God are in the land. The wars and rumors of wars, the destruction by fire and flood, say clearly that the time of trouble, which is to increase until the end, is very near at hand. We have no time to lose. The world is stirred with the spirit of war. The prophecies of the eleventh of Daniel have almost reached their final fulfilment.

Our Field – The World

From all the countries of the world the Macedonian cry is sounding, "Come over and help us." God has opened fields before us, and if human agencies would but co-operate with divine agencies, many souls would be won to the truth. But the Lord's professed people have been sleeping over their alloted work, and in many places it remains comparatively untouched. God has sent message after message to arouse our people to do something, and to do it now. But to the call, "Whom shall I send?" there have been few to respond, "Here am I; send me."

When the reproach of indolence and slothfulness shall have been wiped away from the church, the Spirit of the Lord will be graciously manifested. Divine power will be revealed. The church will see the providential working of the Lord of hosts. The light of truth will shine forth in clear, strong rays, and, as in the time of the apostles, many souls will turn from error to truth. The earth will be lightened with the glory of the Lord.

Heavenly angels have long been waiting for human agents — the members of the church — to co-operate with them in the great work to be done. They are waiting for you. So vast is the field, so comprehensive the design, that every sanctified heart will be pressed into service as an instrument of divine power.

At the same time there will be a power working from beneath. While God's agents of mercy work through consecrated humon beings, Satan sets his agencies in operation, laying under tribute all who will submit to his control. There will be lords many and gods many. The cry will be heard, "Lo, here is Christ," and, "Lo, there is Christ." The deep plotting of Satan will reveal itself everywhere, for the purpose of diverting the attention of men and women from present duty. There will be signs and wonders. But the eye of faith will discern in all these manifestations, harbingers of the grand and awful future, and of the triumphs that will surely come to the people of God.

Work, O work! keeping eternity in view. Bear in mind that every power must be sanctified. A great work is to be done. Let the prayer go forth from unfeigned lips, "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations."

Those who realize, even in a limited degree, what redemption means to them and to their fellow men will walk by faith, and will comprehend in some measure the vast needs of humanity. Their hearts are moved to compassion as they see the widespread destitution in our world,— the destitution of the multitudes who are suffering for food and clothing, and the moral destitution of thousands who are under the shadow of a terrible doom, in comparison to which physical suffering fades into nothingness.

Make Christ the Refuge

Let church-members bear in mind that the fact that their names are registered on the church books will not save them. They must show themselves approved of God, workmen that need not to be ashamed. Day by day they are to build their characters in accordance with Christ's directions. They are to abide in him, constantly exercising faith in him. Thus they will grow up to the full stature of men and women in Christ, — wholesome, cheerful, grateful Christians, led by God, step by step, into clearer and still clearer light.

Those who do not gain this experience will be among the ones whose voices will one day be raised in the bitter lamentation, "The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and my soul is not saved. Why did I not flee to the stronghold for refuge? Why have I trifled with my soul's salvation, and done despite to the Spirit of grace?"

Among those to whom fearful disappointment will come at the day of final reckoning will be those who have been outwardly religious, who have apparently lived Christian lives, but who have woven self into all that they do. They have prided themselves on their morality, their influence, their ability to stand in a higher position than others, their knowledge of the truth. They think that these will win for them the commendation of Christ. "Lord," they say, "we have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets." "Have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works?"

But the Saviour says, "I never knew you: depart from me." "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

There is no discussion; the time for that is past. The irrevocable sentence has been pronounced. They are shut out from heaven by their own unfitness for its companionship.

Those who have bowed to the idols of the world will gain no comfort from them in that great day when every one will be rewarded or punished according to his works. But Omnipotence will deal justly. Those who have made Christ their refuge will find that he lives, and that he is conqueror. He will be their defense.

Encouraging Words—the End Near

"The great day of the Lord is near; it is near, and hasteth greatly." Every hour, every minute, is precious. We have no time to spend in faultfinding and contention. All around us there are souls perishing in sin. Every day there is something to do for the Master. Every day we are to point souls to the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world.

Be always ready; "in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." Go to your rest at night with every sin confessed. Thus we did in 1844, when we expected to meet our Lord. And now this great event is nearer than when we first believed. Be always ready, in the evening, in the morning, and at noon, that when the cry is heard, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh: go ye out to meet him!" you may, even though awakened out of sleep, go forth to meet him with your lamps trimmed and burning.

"Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." Look up, look up, and let your faith continually increase. Let this faith guide you along the narrow path that leads through the gates of the city of God into the great beyond, the wide, unbounded future that awaits the overcomer. Heed the encouragement in the words, "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and the latter rain. Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Let us be found "rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, continuing instant in prayer." The Lord has made every provision that we shall have strong hope. If we are true to our covenant with God, the blessing is certain,— as certain as God's promise can make it. And so great is the blessing that it will be a full and sufficient reward for all the self-denial and self-sacrifice that for Christ's sake we have shown here below.

The Outlook

A. G. DANIELLS

The outlook of the work being carried on by Seventh-day Adventists never appeared brighter and more assuring and cheering than it does to-day. And yet Seventh-day Adventists never faced a graver situation than they do at this present time.

We shall be better prepared to recognize and appreciate the evidences relating to the outlook, or the future, of our cause by a brief review of its beginning and history. The more clearly and fully we understand the providences of God which have shaped it in the past, the more readily shall we understand the providences that are directing it now.

The cause of which we speak, and of which we are a part, is the great religious movement set on foot and carried forward by the proclamation of the threefold message recorded in the fourteenth chapter of Revelation. "The advent cause," wrote James White in 1852, "owes its very existence to the first and second angels' messages of Revelation 14."

This cause is not of human origin. It was not conceived by any human mind. It was not begun by the will or choice of man. It has not been carried forward by the mere plans and power of men. This movement is the fulfilment of prophecy. It is here by divine arrangement. The time is fulfilled; the kingdom of God is at hand; the threefold message of Revelation 14 must be proclaimed to the world. This movement is that proclamation. It came at the appointed time, just as a planet sweeps into view at the right time. It has moved forward with an irresistible force like that which moves the worlds.

This cause is seventy-three years old. It began in August, 1831, when William Miller, of Low Hampton, N. Y., sounded the first trumpet blast of the first angel's message. Its history, as represented by the people who have embraced it, and the work they have done to make it known to the world, is of thrilling interest. It presents an unbroken chain of divine providences for seventy-three years. It furnishes abundant evidence that the days of apostolic victories reach down to the twentieth century.

William Miller was the man chosen, instructed, and disciplined for the great task of inaugurating this world-wide advent movement. He became a devoted Christian in 1816. From that time he spent fifteen years in preparing for the work. His first sermon proclaiming this message was preached at Dresden, N. Y., in August, 1831. His first written statement explaining the message was printed in the Vermont Telegraph, a Baptist paper published at Brandon, Vt., May 15, 1832. His first pamphlet giving an exposition of the message was printed at the office of the Vermont Telegraph, in March, 1833.

For years the cause made slow but steady progress. In 1838 Josiah Litch, a talented minister of Lowell, Mass., embraced the message, and began to proclaim it by voice and pen. Near the close of 1839 Joshua V. Himes united with the movement, and devoted his talents and energies to its advancement.

This marked a new era in a work begun in great weakness nine years before. From this time, the message went to the world with mighty power. Thousands accepted it, and joined in its proclamation. Papers were started in different parts of the country, tracts and pamphlets were printed and distributed by the millions of pages, and lectures were given in tents, halls, and schoolhouses everywhere. William Miller estimated that he, alone, during the year and a half from Oct. 1, 1839, to April 15, 1841, had "traveled 4,560 miles, and preached 627 sermons, averaging one and a half hours each, resulting in about five thousand hopeful conversions." "The work spread with a power unparalled in the history of religious movements."

The climax of this special work of the first angel's message was reached in 1844, when the twenty-three hundred years closed, and the judgment opened. In America alone fifty thousand people had embraced the message, and three hundred ministers and lecturers had publicly proclaimed it. The whole country was stirred. "No cause of moral or religious character, probably ever made so rapid advance as the cause of Adventism. . . . Never have a set of men labored more faithfully and zealously in the cause of God, or with purer motives."

Those who understood and believed the message, fully expected that the Lord

"My Times Are in Thy Hand"

My times are in thy hand!
I know not what a day,
Or e'en an hour, may bring to me;
But I am safe while trusting thee,
Though all things fade away.
All weakness, I
On him rely
Who fixed the earth and spread the starry sky.

My times are in thy hand!
Pale poverty or wealth,
Corroding care or calm repose,
Spring's balmy breath or winter's snows,
Sickness or buoyant health —
Whate'er betide,
If God provide,
'Tis for the best; I wish no lot beside.

My times are in thy hand!
Should friendship pure illume
And strew my path with fairest flowers,
Or should I spend life's dreary hours
In solitude's dark gloom,
Thou art a friend
Till time shall end,
Unchangeably the same; in thee all beauties blend.

My times are in thy hand!
Many or few my days,
I leave with thee — this only pray,
That by thy grace I, every day
Devoting to thy praise,
May ready be
To welcome thee
Whene'er thou com'st in clouds to summon me.

My times are in thy hand!
To thee I can entrust
My slumbering clay, till thy command
Bids all the dead before thee stand,
Awaking from the dust.
Beholding thee,
What bliss 'twill be
With all thy saints to spend eternity!

To spend eternity
In heaven's unclouded light!
From sorrow, sin, and frailty free,
Beholding and resembling thee —
O too transporting sight!
Prospect too fair
For flesh to bear!
Haste, haste, my Lord, and soon transport me there!

The Training of Workers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The true worker in the cause of God will banish from the mind, as impious, every thought of inherent merit. Even the heavenly angels take to themselves no praise. Throughout the heavenly courts, in one grand chorus, resounds their acknowledgment to the Creator: "All things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee." Those who live on this earth should unite with the heavenly host in ascribing all praise and glory to the Creator. No man has the least cause for boasting or self-exaltation, even when he does his very best. Man often fails of doing his duty, leaving undone a vast amount that a close connection with God would have enabled him to do.

Constantly God is laboring to make up man's deficiencies. Even repentance is brought about through the application of grace. The natural heart feels no need of repentance. The tears that fall from the eyes of man because of sorrow for his sinfulness and because of sympathy for other sinners, start unbidden. They are as dew from eyes that belong to God. Man's sighs are but indications of the deep feeling in a heart that is God's. The good resolutions we make are but the expression of desires that are his. The reformed life is but the better employment of a life that has been ransomed by the sacrifice of his Son Jesus. No credit should we take to ourselves for anything that we may do. "All things come of thee," we shall eventually be led to acknowledge to our Creator, "and of thine own have we given thee."

Faith, too, is the gift of God. Faith is the assent of man's understanding to God's words, that binds the heart to God's service. And whose is man's understanding, if it be not God's? Whose the heart, if it be not God's? To have faith, is to render to God the intellect, the energy, that we have received from him; therefore those who exercise faith do not themselves deserve any credit. Those who believe so firmly in a Heavenly Father that they can trust him with unlimited confidence; those who by faith can reach beyond the grave to the eternal realities beyond, must pour forth to their Maker the confession, "All things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee."

No man has a right to call himself his own. And no man possesses any good thing that he can call his own. Every man, every thing, is the property of the Lord. All that man receives from the bounty of heaven is still the Lord's. Whatever knowledge he has that in any way helps him to be an intelligent workman in God's cause, is from the Lord, and should be imparted by him to his fellow men, in order that they, too, may become valuable workmen. He to whom God has entrusted unusual gifts should return to the Lord's storehouse that which he has received, by freely giving to others the benefit of his blessings. Thus God will be honored and glorified.

In all the departments of the Lord's work, every laborer is to help his fellow laborers. The workers who have had many advantages are to take no credit to themselves, nor are they to think that they deserve praise for using in the service of Christ the talents that he has entrusted to them. They should realize that the non-employment of their capabilities would place upon them a burden of guilt, making them deserving of God's just displeasure and severest judgments.

Heavenly bestowed capabilities should not be made to serve selfish ends. Every energy, every endowment, is a talent that should contribute to God's glory by being used in his service. His gifts are to be put out to the exchangers, that he may receive his own, with usury. The talents that fit a man for service are entrusted to him not only that he may be an acceptable worker himself, but that he may also be enabled to teach others who in some respects are deficient.

If in their ministry those whom we teach develop an energy and an intelligence even superior to that which we possess, we should be led to rejoice over the privilege of having a part in the work of training them. But there is danger that some in positions of responsibility as teachers and leaders, will act as if talent and ability have been given to them only, and that they must do all the work in order to make sure that it is done aright. They are liable to find fault with everything not originated by themselves. A great amount of talent is lost to the cause of God because many laborers, desiring to be first, are willing to lead, but never to follow. Although they closely scrutinize and criticize all that any one else does, they are in danger of regarding that which goes forth from their hands as perfect.

To those upon whom God has bestowed many talents, I am instructed to say: Help the inexperienced; discourage them not. Take them into your confidence; give them fatherly counsel, teaching them as you would teach students in a school. Watch not for their mistakes, but recognize their undeveloped talents, and train them to make a right use of these powers. Instruct them with all patience, encouraging them to go forward and to do an important work. Instead of keeping them engaged in doing things of minor importance, give them an opportunity to obtain an experience by which they may develop into trustworthy workers. Much will thus be gained to the cause of God.

Those placed in positions of responsibility should patiently seek to make others familiar with all parts of the work. This will reveal that they do not desire to be first, but that they are glad to have others become acquainted with details, and to become as efficient as they are. Those who faithfully fulfil their duty in this respect, will, in time, have standing by their side a large number of intelligent workers whom they have trained. Should they shape matters in accordance with narrow, selfish conceptions, they would stand almost alone.

Some workers are incapable of filling positions that others can fill. Many who might have been able to fill positions of trust, have not disciplined themselves, nor have they done that which they could have done from day to day to meet the increasing demands of the present time. Others are able to bear responsibilities, and would do so, if they were encouraged, and if there were some one who, with patience, kindness, and forbearance, would teach them how to work. Ministers should show a real earnestness in helping such persons succeed, and should put forth persevering effort to develop talent. The inexperienced are in need of wise generals who by prayer and personal effort will encourage and help them to become perfect in Christ Jesus, wanting in nothing. This is the work which every gospel minister should endeavor to do, but which some are liable to fail of doing.

Men of varied talents and superior ability will unite with us in the work of giving the last message of mercy to a perishing world. My brethren, learn to see and to recognize ability and talent in others besides yourselves. Be examples to the flock. Give to others the benefit of all the knowledge that the Lord has given to you. He has entrusted you with this knowledge, that you may impart it. With the same liberality and freedom that the Master teaches you, teach others, binding them to your heart by love and tenderness.

Let no one seek to exalt himself by talking of his deeds, extolling his abilities, displaying his knowledge, and cultivating self-conceit. Let no one strive to tear down the work of others who do not labor according to his standard. The heavenly Teacher extends to us the invitation: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Christ was never self-confident or conceited. He declared, "The Son can do nothing of himself, but what he seeth the Father do: for what things soever he doeth, these also doeth the Son likewise."

A great work is to be done in America and in other lands. As yet, many fields are still unentered. The most important duty before those who have been sent out into the fields at home and abroad as missionaries, is to combine the forces and strength of all whom they can possibly enlist as helpers. Thus they can make mighty strokes for their Master. God will do a great work in every part of the field, if with willing hearts his servants put self out of sight, and labor only for his glory.

For What Shall We Pray?

R. A. UNDERWOOD

A SPECIAL season of seeking God in prayer has been appointed for December 10-17. Shall this be a formal occasion that shall mean but little to us? or shall we enter upon it with a realization of its importance? If this is done, and the purpose of God in this week of prayer is fully met we shall experience a greater blessing in spiritual things than Seventh-day Adventists have ever known.

We are admonished that "men ought always to pray," to "pray without ceasing," and "in everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you." While we should always be in the spirit of prayer, and have stated times each day to present our requests to God with thanksgiving, yet there are times that demand special seasons of united prayer for definite objects. Such occasions require special preparation, and, when entered upon in the order of God, mark great victories for the church of Christ.

Just before the day of Pentecost the disciples were brought to such a time. The Saviour had commissioned his disciples to go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. Believers were few compared with the masses. The great of the earth, from the world's standpoint, were not numbered among the believers. From the human standpoint it was impossible to carry out the commission of Christ. Christ had seen all the obstacles in the way of his "little flock" in accomplishing the work committed to them. Therefore he made provisions whereby they could meet every hindrance with a glorious victory. For this purpose he commanded the disciples: "Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high;" and with this he gives the promise: "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

In harmony with this instruction the disciples assembled in Jerusalem. They prayed, they confessed their sins, they put away all strife and selfishness. They were united in love and purpose. It is written of them, "They were all with one accord in one place." The Spirit took control, and all spoke "as the Spirit gave them utterance."

A short time before, they were seeking the first place of honor; but now, each esteems his brethren better than himself. If honor is to be given to any one, he prefers to see it bestowed upon his companions in labor. Selfishness can not live in the heart controlled by the Spirit of God. Means and men were laid upon the altar of service. Signs and wonders followed the proclamation of the gospel. In a short time the world had heard the sound of the glad tidings of salvation.

We are living when a great crisis is impending. We have received commission to preach this gospel of the kingdom to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people in this generation before the end shall come. We are as powerless to do this without the baptism of the Holy Ghost as were the disciples of old. Therefore Christ commands, "Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain." We are living in the time when this prayer is to be made by God's people, and to be realized in its fulfilment. The rain promised is a symbol of the outpouring of the Spirit of God upon his people. The Spirit has been sent into the world. He is waiting to put his power upon his people. Our prayer should be, "Lord, make me a willing subject for the Spirit to use."

Our life, time, children, property, yea all we are and have, must be placed upon the altar of service. We sometimes pray for the Spirit, that we might use his power. This is a dangerous prayer to offer. Heaven wants men and women who will be worked by the Spirit, those who speak as the Spirit gives them utterance, those who go at the Spirit's call. This does not mean fanaticism, it does not mean confusion or lack of order in the work of God. It does mean a second Pentecost. It means the loud cry of the third angel's message. It means the finishing of the gospel. It means that many now occupied in money making will devote their talents to soul saving. It means that the cause of Christ has the first place in all our plans for time and eternity. It means a mighty conflict between the powers of heaven and fallen beings. It means that signs and wonders shall attend the preaching of the testing message. It means the healing of soul and body to many. It means a revival of the faith, courage, and power of apostolic times. It means a short conflict and the ushering in of the kingdom of peace and life eternal. To this end let us pray, surrender all, believe, and receive the Holy Spirit.

The Missionary Spirit

A. O. BURRILL

THIS was what was found in the church in the apostles' days. When Christ selected twelve men, he called them his twelve apostles, or missionaries. "And when he had called unto him his twelve disciples [missionaries]," he sent them forth. Matt. 10:1, 5. And he said, "Go rather to the lost sheep," "and as ye go." By this we see that these men were selected with the express purpose of going forth. They were not to remain at home, but to go into all the world. And as they went, these missionaries had a message, which was, "The kingdom of heaven is at hand." This missionary spirit was to take them from city to city, from town to town, and from house to house. By the reading of the prophets and the sermons of Christ they were so imbued with the missionary spirit that they could leave father, mother, brother, sister, houses, and lands to carry the glad tidings into the regions beyond.

The world to them at that time meant largely the basin around the great Mediterranean Sea. Here, under the Roman government, they found all nationalities. The division walls had been broken down. The different nationalities had come into close relation with one another, all over this great territory. The wars of Rome, and their captives, had carried the inhabitants of many cities into the various parts of the then known world. The victorious armies of Rome had gone out from the imperial city in every direction. Among the captives were all classes of individuals, the educated and the uneducated. Many of these were sold into slavery, with but little prospect of their ever obtaining their freedom; so that when the gospel was carried by these missionaries to these individuals, they saw in this blessed gospel of the kingdom a promise of freedom from sin, and and I trust it may be a week of consecration to the Lord. It should be a consecration of our families, our property, our all. It took more than forty thousand dollars to take the truth to foreign fields last year, and now how we rejoice to know that new missions have been opened, and that new lands and new tongues are calling for this truth.

Those who are nearest in touch with the work in the world-wide field tell us that we must double our annual offerings this year, and in place of forty thousand dollars they call for eighty thousand. This is evidence that the world is being warned, and we rejoice in that thought. We can raise the eighty thousand dollars if we are of one heart and of one mind. Then shall we not all arise as one man, declare the message, and go home to glory?

*The Privilege of Prayer

MRS E. G. WHITE

Through nature and revelation, through his providence, and by the influence of his Spirit, God speaks to us. But these are not enough; we need also to pour out our hearts to him. In order to have spiritual life and energy, we must have actual intercourse with our Heavenly Father. Our minds may be drawn out toward him; we may meditate upon his works, his mercies, his blessings; but this is not, in the fullest sense, communing with him. In order to commune with God, we must have something to say to him concerning our actual life.

Prayer is the opening of the heart to God as to a friend. Not that it is necessary in order to make known to God what we are, but in order to enable us to receive him. Prayer does not bring God down to us, but brings us up to him.

When Jesus was upon the earth, he taught his disciples how to pray. He directed them to present their daily needs before God, and to cast all their care upon him. And the assurance he gave them that their petitions should be heard, is assurance also to us.

Jesus himself, while he dwelt among men, was often in prayer. Our Saviour identified himself with our needs and weaknesses, in that he became a suppliant, a petitioner, seeking from his Father fresh supplies of strength, that he might come forth braced for duty and trial. He is our example in all things. He is a brother in our infirmities, "in all points tempted like as we are;" but as the sinless One his nature recoiled from evil; he endured struggles and torture of soul in a world of sin. His humanity made prayer a necessity and a privilege. He found comfort and joy in communion with his Father. And if the Saviour of men, the Son of God, felt the need of prayer, how much more should feeble, sinful mortals feel the necessity of fervent, constant prayer!

Our Heavenly Father waits to bestow upon us the fulness of his blessing. It is our privilege to drink largely at the fountain of boundless love. What a wonder it is that we pray so little! God is ready and willing to hear the sincere prayer of the humblest of his children, and yet there is much manifest reluctance on our part to make known our wants to God. What can the angels of heaven think of poor helpless human beings, who are subject to temptation, when God's heart of infinite love yearns toward them, ready to give them more than they can ask or think, and yet they pray so little, and have so little faith? The angels love to bow before God; they love to be near him. They regard communion with God as their highest joy; and yet the children of earth, who need so much the help that God only can give, seem satisfied to walk without the light of his Spirit, the companionship of his presence.

The darkness of the evil one encloses those who neglect to pray. The whispered temptations of the enemy entice them to sin; and it is all because they do not make use of the privileges that God has given them in the divine appointment of prayer. Why should the sons and daughters of God be reluctant to pray, when prayer is the key in the hand of faith to unlock heaven's storehouse, where are treasured the boundless resources of Omnipotence? Without unceasing prayer and diligent watching, we are in danger of growing careless, and of deviating from the right path. The adversary seeks continually to obstruct the way to the mercy-seat, that we may not by earnest supplication and faith obtain grace and power to resist temptation.

If we take counsel with our doubts and fears, or try to solve everything that we can not see clearly, before we have faith, perplexities will only increase and deepen. But if we come to God, feeling helpless and dependent, as we really are, and in humble, trusting faith make known our wants to him whose knowledge is infinite, who sees everything in creation, and who governs everything by his will and word, he can and will attend to our cry, and will let light shine into our hearts. Through sincere prayer we are brought into connection with the mind of the Infinite. We may have no remarkable evidence at the time that the face of our Redeemer is bending over us in compassion and love; but this is even so. We may not feel his visible touch, but his hand is upon us in love and pitying tenderness.

When we come to ask mercy and blessing from God, we should have a spirit of love and forgiveness in our own hearts. How can we pray, "Forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors," and yet indulge an unforgiving spirit? If we expect our own prayers to be heard, we must forgive others in the same manner, and to the same extent, as we hope to be forgiven.

There is necessity for diligence in prayer; let nothing hinder you. Make every effort to keep open the communion between Jesus and your own soul. Seek every opportunity to go where prayer is wont to be made. Those who are really seeking for communion with God will be seen in the prayer-meeting, faithful to do their duty, and earnest and anxious to reap all the benefits they can gain. They will improve every opportunity of placing themselves where they can receive the rays of light from heaven.

Keep your wants, your joys, your sorrows, your cares, and your fears before God. You can not burden him; you can not weary him. He who numbers the hairs of your head is not indifferent to the wants of his children. "The Lord is very pitiful, and of tender mercy." His heart of love is touched by our sorrows, and even by our utterance of them. Take to him everything that perplexes the mind. Nothing is too great for him to bear; for he holds up worlds, he rules over all the affairs of the universe. Nothing that in any way concerns our peace is too small for him to notice. There is no chapter in our experience too dark for him to read; no perplexity is too difficult for him to unravel. No calamity can befall the least of his children, no anxiety harass the soul, no joy cheer, no sincere prayer escape the lips, of which our Heavenly Father is unobservant, or in which he takes no immediate interest. "He healeth the broken in heart, and bindeth up their wounds." The relations between God and each soul are as distinct and full as though there were not another soul upon the earth to share his watch-care, not another soul for whom he gave his beloved Son.

Opening of the China Field

J. O. CORLISS

Some time prior to 1880, a bachelor considerably past middle life was living in Honolulu, who, while attending a gospel meeting, was stirred to consecrate his life to the Lord. Shortly afterward he drifted to California, and there received the third angel's message. It took so strong a hold upon him that he meditated almost constantly how he might fit himself to carry to others the message he so dearly loved.

His whole soul was bound up in the thought of the Lord's coming, and he made no provision for anything else but a readiness for that event. This man was Brother A. LaRue. In 1881, while herding sheep in Anderson Valley, in northern California, he pleaded, in his isolation, that a way might be provided for him to carry the truth to his fellow

He Touched My Hands

My hands were filled with many things,
Which I did precious hold,
As any treasure of a king's
Silver, or gems, or gold,
The Master came, and touched my hands;
The scars were in his own.
And at his feet my treasures sweet
Fell shattered one by one;
"I must have empty hands," said he,
"Wherewith to work my works through thee."

My hands were stained with marks of toil,
Defiled with dust of earth,
And I my work did ofttimes soil,
And render little worth.
The Master came, and touched my hands,
And crimson were his own.
And when, amazed, on mine I gazed,
Lo, every stain was gone.
"I must have cleansed hands," said he,
"Wherewith to work my works through thee."

My hands were growing feverish,
And cumbered with much care,
Trembling with haste and eagerness,
Nor folded oft in prayer.
The Master came, and touched my hands,
With healing in his own,
And calm and still to do his will,
They grew, the fever gone.
"I must have quiet hands," said he,
"Wherewith to work my work through thee."

My hands were strong in fancied strength,
But not in power divine,
And bold to take up tasks at length,
That were not his, but mine.
The Master came, and touched my hands,
And might was in his own;
But mine, since then, have powerless been,
Save his were laid thereon.
"And it is only thus," said he,
"That I can work my works through thee."

A Call to Repentance

MRS. E. G. WHITE

WE are living in the time of the end. Thrones and churches have united to oppose God's purposes. The association of man with man, which God designed should be a means of strengthening goodness and happiness, is used as a means of strengthening evil and of developing tendencies to rebellion. Men have assumed despotic power, and human laws have been put in the place of the law of God.

It is the reign of Antichrist. God's law is set aside. The Scriptures are exchanged for the traditions of men. Satan has become the ruler of the world; and in his hands temptation has become a science. He rules over a vast, well-organized empire. Sin has stimulated his followers into fearful activity. Men have combined to perpetuate evil. The sale of intoxicating liquor, destructive alike to soul and body, is legalized by Christian governments.

Influences are to be set in motion that will proclaim to the world the first, second, and third angels' messages. The world is to be warned, and I beseech those who know the truth to do all in their power to sound the message, "Prepare to meet thy God."

"It is time for thee, Lord, to work," David said; "for they have made void thy law." David lived many hundreds of years ago, and he thought then that the time had come for God to interfere to vindicate his honor and repress the swelling unrighteousness. To-day men have almost filled the cup of their iniquity. But the Lord does not execute the death penalty on the transgressors of his law until they have heard the warning, and have been given an opportunity to see the result of rebellion against him. How wonderful is his forbearance and patience! He is putting a constraint on his own attributes. Omnipotence is exerted over Omnipotence.

"The Lord is slow to anger, and great in power," "plenteous in mercy" and forgiveness; but he "will not at all acquit the wicked." Soon there is to be an awakening of his displeasure, and who then can stay his wrath?

There is a work to be done in our cities,— work to be done in every place. God will take men from the plow, from the sheepfold, from the vineyard, and will put them in the place of those who think that they must have the highest wages. Those who grasp for high wages will find in the money they get all the reward they will ever receive. Such ones can not be expected to feel a burden for the salvation of perishing souls. The Lord can not use such ones in his work. Until they banish selfishness from their hearts, their efforts are worthless.

God says to his people to-day, "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent." Will they heed the reproof? Will they dare to trifle with so direct and decided a statement, and keep their commended excellencies blasted as with a mildew because they allow Satan to steal in among them. "Thou hast left thy first love," and therefore there is no steadfastness of purpose. Without this love, all knowledge, all capabilities, all outward zeal and service, are worthless. You do not receive from Christ grace to impart to others. And while you do not reveal the love that Christ has commanded you to reveal, your light is not shining forth to the world.

Leaving the first love is represented as a spiritual fall. Many have fallen thus. In every church in our land, there is needed confession, repentance, and reconversion. The disappointment of Christ is beyond description. Unless those who have sinned speedily repent, the deceptions of the last days will overtake them. Some, though they do not realize it, are preparing to be overtaken. God calls for repentance without delay. So long have many trifled with salvation that their spiritual eyesight is dimmed, and they can not discern between light and darkness. Christ is humiliated in his people. The first love is gone, the faith is weak, there is need of a thorough transformation.

My brethren and sisters, humble your hearts before the Lord. Seek him earnestly. I have an intense desire to see you walking in the light as Christ is in the light. I pray most earnestly for you. But I can not fail to see that the light which God has given me is not favorable to our ministers or our churches. You have left your first love. Self-righteousness is not the wedding-garment. A failure to follow the clear light of truth is our fearful danger. [The message to the Laodicean church reveals our condition as a people] (1)

Satan is seeking with all his subtlety to corrupt mind and heart. And O how successful he is in leading men and women to depart from the simplicity of the gospel of Christ! Under his influence hereditary and cultivated tendencies to wrong are roused into activity. Ministers and church-members are in danger of allowing self to take the throne.

Human wisdom, human ability, is nothingness in God's sight. He who supposes that he is superior to his fellow men in wisdom will sooner or later reveal traits of character that are a dishonor to God. In the church to-day there are many of this stamp,— men and women in whom the loveliness of Christ is hidden by traits of character that unfit the possessor for membership in the Lord's family in the heavenly courts.

There are many who are not Bible Christians. They follow a standard of their own devising. If they would see their defective, distorted characters as they are accurately reflected in the mirror of God's Word, they would be so alarmed that they would fall upon their faces before God in contrition of soul, and tear away the rags of their self-righteousness.

My brethren in the ministry, you ought to be reaching higher and still higher in Christian experience,— higher, not by self-assertion, self-assumption, and self-confidence, but by growth in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Press forward toward the mark of the prize of your high calling in Christ. How much we need to be faithful watchmen over self, to make sure that we have not the spirit that leads us to hurt and destroy in the place of using our God-given talents to awaken the inhabitants of our world to a realization of their lost and undone condition. Let us not be content to be as those who have left their first love.

Shall We Give or Relinquish?

G. B. THOMPSON

We hear frequently of persons who at death leave all or a portion of their property to some philanthropic enterprise or charitable institution, and everywhere their generosity is favorably commented upon. They have left behind, it is true, that which can be used for a good purpose, but did they really give anything? They held on to all they had in life, enjoying all the comforts and pleasures which it afforded, until their grasp upon their hoarded treasures was rendered nerveless by the relentless stroke of death. But this can hardly be called giving. We give while we live of that which we might retain. We relinquish, or leave behind, at death what we are powerless to longer hold on to, and utterly unable to take with us beyond the portals of the tomb. Having refused to give while they lived, and could use it themselves, they unwillingly relinquish, or leave behind them at death, all they have. They never once enjoyed the sweet blessing which comes to the soul by giving to the Lord.

In reading in the "Spirit of Prophecy" recently, I was impressed with the statement that some among us are in danger of making a similar mistake. Standing as we are on the borders of the heavenly Canaan, with numberless calls coming for means to advance the work in the home and foreign fields, some are holding on to surplus treasures, expecting to give, not relinquish, to the cause of God at death what they can no longer use, or hold on to. Notice the following: —

"Many people selfishly retain their means, and soothe their conscience with a plan for doing some great thing for the cause of God after their death. They make a will donating a large sum to the church and its various interests, and then settle down with a feeling that they have done all that is required of them. Wherein have they denied self by this act? They have, on the contrary, exhibited the true essence of selfishness. When they have no longer any use for their money, they propose to give it to God. But they will retain it as long as they can, till they are compelled to relinquish it by a messenger that can not be turned aside."—"Testimonies for the Church," Vol. IV, page 81.

"Those who neglect known duty by not answering to God's claims upon them in this life, and who soothe their conscience by calculating on making their bequests at death, will receive no words of commendation from the Master, nor will they receive a reward. They practised no self-denial, but selfishly retained their means as long as they could, yielding it up only when death claimed them That which many propose to defer until they are about to die, if they were Christians indeed they would do while they have a strong hold on life. They would devote themselves and their property to God, and, while acting as his stewards, they would have the satisfaction of doing their duty."

"The Lord designs that the death of his servants shall be regarded as a loss, because of the influence for good which they exerted, and the many willing offerings which they bestowed to replenish the treasury of God. Dying legacies are a miserable substitute for living benevolence."—Id., pages 480, 481.

The cause of God is still calling for help. For this we are glad. It would be a sad hour for many of us if there were no more calls, and the last gift that could be used in the message was in the treasury. Such a time is speedily coming, but as yet the Macedonian cry is still heard. We still have the blessed opportunity of renewing our consecration to God, and making some sacrifice to extend the healing rays of the message into the dark corners of the earth. The privilege of giving instead of relinquishing is before us.

"God Lives and Reigns"

A. E. PLACE

The statement, "God lives and reigns," is taken from the article, "A Call to Service," by Mrs. E. G. White, in the Review of October 20. The entire article has impressed me deeply, not only because of its intrinsic value at any time, but especially at the time and for the purpose for which it was written — the opening keynote of our great missionary campaign. The text also, if taken alone, is a soul-inspiring truth; but as I have viewed it, in the setting given to it by the author, it has been especially appreciated, and it has thrilled my soul with courage, hope, and joy. I quote briefly the immediate connection as follows: —

"God and Christ and the heavenly angels are working with intense activity to hold in check the fierceness of Satan's wrath, that God's plans may not be thwarted. God lives and reigns. He is conducting the affairs of the universe. Let his soldiers move forward to victory. . . . As a mighty Conqueror, the Lord will work for them. Let the gospel message ring through our churches, summoning them to universal action."

This is a most wonderful array of truth for this very time. We behold the many signs of the awful day of God rapidly fulfilling before our eyes. Truly, "the nations are angry." Men's hearts are hard and selfish and scheming. Greed and selfish indulgence seem to be in the very atmosphere of this last generation. Battle and war is the talk and action of to-day. The land is being "filled with violence" and bloodshed. Murder and suicide are coming to be the popular crimes. A trivial word or act, and the next moment a mortal combat. Soldiers of opposing armies, wounded on the battle-field, and unable to use gun or sword, clinch in the awful death struggle, and when cold and stiff in death, they are found like bull-dogs, the one with his teeth closed upon the throat of his antagonist, and the other with a finger or thumb in the socket from which the eye had been gouged with his last remnant of physical power and dying animosity.

The whole world is organizing. Capital is against labor, and labor against capital. Trade is pitted against trade, and man against man,— all professedly in the interests of self-protection, but in truth against even their own selfish desires and the hope of the nation.

In our own land, mob is coming to be the lawmaker, and lynching the capital punishment. The great statesmen of the earth are alarmed at what is happening, and at what is liable to happen. Six hundred thousand are to-day on the battle-field in mortal combat. Over seventy thousand already fill soldiers' graves, or lie unburied where they fell in the recent battles of the far East. The earth fairly trembles beneath the measured tread of armed men, while the sea foams with the mad rush of great naval monsters. All England has within the past few weeks been aroused to the fighting point, and hastily donned her war paint to meet the Russian battleships, to avenge the English fishermen in the North Sea. Why the sudden check on the very precipice of war? Some say, "The Hague." We say, The four angels to whom it was given to hold the winds till God's servants are sealed. It is because "God lives and reigns." It is because "he is conducting the affairs of the universe."

I say that at this time, with the earth filled with satanic agencies, moving forward in their death-dealing and soul-destroying work, these words come to our anxious hearts like the encircling arm of a mighty father, with comfort and encouragement for his trembling child. Above the roar of cannon and the cry of selfish and angry men, in the face of the most trying and discouraging climax of earth's history, those grand words, "God lives and reigns," banish fear and discouragement, check the course of the backslider, and thrill the heart of every true child of God with confidence and joy. "He is conducting the affairs of the universe." Praise his holy name. The angels of his own choosing are holding the winds of strife, and in all nations precious souls are leaving the selfishness of this world to stand with that company which erelong shall be translated into a kingdom of absolute glory and peace.

What more fitting words can be used in closing than those which immediately follow the quotations given above? "Let his soldiers move forward to victory. . . . As a mighty Conqueror, the Lord will work for them." Brethren, lift up your heads and rejoice; for "God lives and reigns."

"The Lord is our King."

The Three

MARY of Nazareth, loving and kind,
The mission of Him she bore divined
Vaguely and dim, with a wondering mind.

Mary of Bethany, gentle and fair, (1)
Gave him what cheer her home could spare,
And smiled with the peace of quiet prayer.

Soiled with the dust of the gazing street,
Stealing in where he sat at meat,
Mary of Magdalene kissed his feet.

Mary the virgin marveled with fear,
Mary the listener lent him her ear,
But Mary the prodigal faltered near.

Though wonder and loathing filled the place,
And Simon counted her touch disgrace,
She bent o'er the Master her tear-stained face;

And her wealth of warm, dark hair, unbound,
About his feet she wound and wound;
Her sobbing was the only sound.

Mary the hostess made him her guest,
He had lain on Mary the mother's breast,
But the Magdalene's gift was costliest:

She brought her past, its bliss and shame,
Strange sins, wild memories fierce as flame —
And in her tears was washed from blame!

One sat with patient joy at his side,
One stood by the Roman cross where he died,
One gave herself and her broken pride.

Words to Ministers

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"HE hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me; and said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified. . . . Is it a light thing that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel; I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the ends of the earth."

This is the word of the Lord to those who are engaged in the ministry of his word. They are in his special service, and they are not to esteem this as a light thing. Proportionate to their position of trust should be their sense of responsibility and devotion. Cheap, common talk, and light, trifling behavior should not be tolerated. Their highest desire should be to offer Christ perfect service. (2)

The object of preaching is not alone to convey information, not merely to convince the intellect. The preaching of the word should appeal to the intellect, and should impart knowledge, but it should do more than this. The words of the minister should reach the hearts of the hearers.

[Neither is it the object of preaching to amuse. Some ministers have adopted a style of preaching that has not the best influence. It has become a habit with them to weave anecdotes into their discourses. The impression thus made upon the hearers is not a savor of life unto life. Ministers should not bring amusing stories into their preaching. The people need pure provender, thoroughly winnowed from the chaff. "Preach the word," was the charge that Paul gave to Timothy, and this is our commission also.

The minister who mixes story-telling with his discourses is using strange fire. God is offended, and the cause of truth is dishonored, when his representatives descend to the use of cheap, trifling words.]

My brethren, you are required by our Saviour to take heed how you witness for him. You need to go deeper and still deeper in the study of the Word. You have all classes of minds to meet, and as you teach the truths of the Sacred Word, you are to manifest earnestness, respect, and reverence. Weed out story-telling from your discourses, and preach the word. You will then have more sheaves to bring to the Master. Remember that in your audience there are those who are constantly harassed by temptation. Some are wrestling with doubt, almost in despair, almost hopeless. Ask God to help you to speak words that will strengthen them for the conflict.

Read and study the fourth chapter of Zechariah. The two olive trees empty the golden oil out of themselves through the golden pipes into the golden bowl, from which the lamps of the sanctuary are fed. The golden oil represents the Holy Spirit. With this oil God's ministers are to be constantly supplied, that they, in turn, may impart it to the church. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts." God's servants can obtain victories only by inward purity, by cleanness of heart, by holiness.

It is of the utmost importance that ministers set a right example. If they follow lax, loose principles, their example is quoted by those who are doing wrong, as a vindication of their course. The whole synagogue of Satan is watching for defects in the lives of God's representatives, and the most is made of every defect.

[Take heed lest by your example you place other souls in peril. It is a terrible thing to lose our own soul, but to pursue a course that will cause the loss of other souls is still more terrible. That our influence should be a savor of death unto death is a terrible thought, and yet it is possible. With what earnestness, then, we should guard our thoughts, our words, our habits, our dispositions. God calls for personal holiness. Only by revealing the character of Christ can we co-operate with him in saving souls.] (2)

God's ministers can not be too careful that their actions do not contradict their words. A consistent life alone will command respect. If our practise harmonizes with our teaching, our words will have effect; but a piety that is not based upon practise is as salt without savor. It is of no use for us to strive to inculcate principles which we do not conscientiously practise.

Do not try to work in your own strength; for then the angels of God stand back, leaving you to carry on the warfare alone. Our preparation to meet opponents or to minister to the people must be obtained from the throne of grace. Here we see and acknowledge our own incompetence, and receive the divine efficiency. The Holy Spirit takes the things of God, and shows them to us, leading us into all truth, and giving us the faith that works by love and purifies the soul.

[My brethren, in his great mercy and love God has given you great light, and Christ says to you, "Freely ye have received, freely give." Let the light bestowed on you shine forth to those in darkness. Let us rejoice and be glad that Christ has not only given us his Word, but has given us also the spirit of wisdom and revelation in the knowledge of God, and that in his strength we may be more than conquerors. (3)

Christ is saying, "Come unto me. To me belong right counsel and sound judgment. I have understanding and strength for you." By faith we must rest in Christ, remembering the words of one who was inspired of God to write, "Thy gentleness hath made me great." Ask God to give you much of the oil of his grace. Carefully consider every word, whether it be written or spoken.]

"Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine. For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables. But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry."

Light That Is Not Light

G. B. THOMPSON

IN Matt. 6:23 we read, "If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!" But how can light be darkness? The terms are opposites, and appear contradictory. However, the statement is in the Bible, and there are no contradictions in the Scriptures of truth. Inasmuch as this is an

Words to Ministers (2)

MRS. E. G. WHITE

If the one who feels that he is called of God to be a minister will humble himself and learn of Christ, he will become a true gospel teacher. There should be among our ministers less sermonizing and more tact to educate the people in practical Christianity. The people must be impressed with the fact that Christ is salvation to all who believe. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." There are grand themes on which the gospel minister may dwell. Christ has said, "He that believeth on me, hath everlasting life." (3)

If the minister's lips are touched with a coal from the altar, he will lift up Jesus as the sinner's only hope. When the heart of the speaker is sanctified through the truth, his words will be living realities to himself and others. Those who hear him will know that he has been with God, and has drawn near to him in fervent, effectual prayer. The Holy Spirit has fallen upon him, his soul has felt the vital, heavenly fire, and he will be able to compare spiritual things with spiritual. Power will be given him to break down the strongholds of Satan. Hearts will be melted and subdued by his presentation of the love of God, and many will inquire, "What must I do to be saved?"

My brethren, seek God in earnest prayer, that when you stand before the people, you may realize the solemnity of the message that you are about to bear. Talk simply and to the point. Let your discourses be short. Handle only a few points, saving your strength for house-to-house work. Ministers too often give lengthy discourses. The minds of the people are wearied by such discourses, and the truth loses its effect upon them. Let the teacher of the Word first talk with God. Then he can stand before the people with the Holy Spirit working upon his mind.

The Lord desires that the truth shall come close to the people, and this can be accomplished only by personal labor. Much is comprehended in the command, "Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." There is a work to be done in this line that has not yet been done. Let God's workers teach the truth in families, drawing close to those for whom they labor. If they thus co-operate with God, he will clothe them with spiritual power. Christ will guide them in their work, entering the houses of the people with them, and giving them words to speak that will sink deep into the hearts of the listeners. The Holy Spirit will open hearts and minds to receive the rays coming from the source of all light.

There are families who will never be reached by the truth of God's Word unless his servants enter their homes, and by earnest ministry, sanctified by the indorsement of the Holy Spirit, break down the barriers. As the people see that these workers are messengers of mercy, the ministers of grace, they are ready to listen to the words spoken by them. But the hearts of those who do this work must throb in unison with the heart of Christ. They must be wholly consecrated to the service of God, ready to do his bidding, ready to go wherever his providence sends them, ready to speak the words he gives them. And if they are what God desires them to be, if they are imbued with his Spirit, they co-operate with heavenly agencies, and are indeed "laborers together with God."

When such a worker offers prayer to God in the family where he is visiting, the hearts of the members are touched as they would not be by prayer offered in a public assembly. Angels of God enter the family circle with him; and the minds of the hearers are prepared to receive the word of God; for if the messenger is humble and contrite, if he has a living connection with God, the Holy Spirit takes the word, and (3) shows it to those for whom he is laboring.

Light, light from the Word of God, — this is what the people need. If the teachers of the word are willing, the Lord will lead them into close relation with the people. He will guide them to the homes of those who need and desire the truth; and as the servants of God (4) engage in the work of seeking for the lost sheep, their spiritual faculties are awakened and energized. Knowing that they are in harmony with God, they feel joyous and happy. Under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, they obtain an experience that is invaluable to them. Their intellectual and moral powers attain their highest development; for grace is given in answer to the demand.

I was shown two Bible workers seated in a family. With the open Bible before them, they presented the Lord Jesus as the sin-pardoning Saviour. Their words were spoken with freshness and power. Earnest prayer was offered to God, and hearts were subdued by the softening influence of the Holy Spirit. As the Word of God was explained, I saw that a soft, radiant light illumined the Scriptures, and I said softly, "Go ye out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled."

These workers were not boastful, but humble and contrite, realizing always that the Holy Spirit is the efficiency of every worker. Under the influence of the Spirit, indifference vanished, and an earnest interest was manifested. The precious light was communicated from neighbor to neighbor. Family altars that had been broken down were again erected, and many souls were won to the truth.

Teaching the Scriptures, praying in families,— this is the work of the evangelist, and this work is to be mingled with preaching. If it is omitted, preaching will, to a great extent, be a failure. Come close to the people by personal efforts. Teach them that the love of God must come into the sanctuary of the home life.

Take no glory whatever to yourself. Do not work with a divided mind, trying to serve God and self at the same time. Keep self out of sight. Let your words lead the weary and heavy laden to carry their burdens to Jesus. Work as seeing Him who is at your right hand, ready to give you his efficiency and omnipotent power in every emergency. The Lord is your counselor, your guide, the captain of your salvation. He goes before your face, conquering and to conquer.

Pleasing Service

CHRIST never asks of us such busy labor
As leaves no time for resting at his feet;
The waiting attitude of expectation
He ofttimes counts a service most complete.

He sometimes wants our ear — our rapt attention —
That he some sweetest secret may impart;
'Tis always in the time of deepest silence
That heart finds deepest fellowship with heart.

And yet he does love service when 'tis given
By grateful love that clothes itself in deed;
But work that's done beneath the scourge of duty —
Be sure to such he gives but little heed.

Then seek to please him, whatsoe'er he bids thee —
Whether to do, to suffer, to lie still;
'Twill matter little by what path he leads thee
If in it all thou seek'st to do his will.

Called to Service

MRS. E. G. WHITE

MINISTRY means service, and to this ministry we are all called. It is a dishonor to God for any one to choose a life of self-pleasing. My brethren and sisters, do you realize that every year thousands and thousands of souls are perishing, dying in their sins because the light of truth has not been flashed upon their pathway? Do you realize that the end is near, that already the judgments of God are doing their work in this world? The lack of interest manifested in the work of God by our churches alarms me. I ask all who have means to remember that God has entrusted this means to them to be used in advancing the work which Christ came to our world to do. In the sight of God, we are not owners of what we possess, but only trustees. "Not thine, but mine," God says. He will call all to give an account of their stewardship. Our accountability to heaven should cause us to fear and tremble. The decisions of the last day turn upon practical benevolence. Christ acknowledges every act of beneficence as done to himself.

(1) There is a great work to be done in our world. Men and women are to be converted, not by the gift of tongues nor by the working of miracles, but by the preaching of Christ crucified. Why delay the effort to make the world better? Why wait for some wonderful thing to be done, some costly apparatus to be provided? However humble your sphere, however lowly your work, if you labor in harmony with the teachings of the Saviour, he will reveal himself through you, and your influence will draw souls to him. He will honor the meek and lowly ones, who seek earnestly to do service for him. Into all that we do, whether our work be in the shop, on the farm, or in the office, we are to bring the endeavor to save souls.

We are to sow beside all waters, keeping our souls in the love of God, working while it is day, using the means entrusted to us in the Master's service. Whatever our hands find to do, we are to do it with cheerfulness; whatever sacrifice we are called upon to make, we are to make it cheerfully. As we sow beside all waters, we shall realize the truth of the words, "He which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully."

We owe everything to grace, sovereign grace. Grace ordained our redemption, our regeneration, and our adoption to heirship with Jesus Christ. Let this grace be revealed to others.

The Saviour takes those whom he finds will be molded, and uses them for his own name's glory. He uses material that others would pass by, and works in all who will give themselves to him. He delights to take apparently hopeless material, those whom Satan has debased, and through whom he has worked, and make them the subjects of his grace. He rejoices to deliver them from suffering, and from the wrath that is to fall upon the disobedient. He makes his children his agents in the accomplishment of this work, and in its success, even in this life, they find a precious reward.

But what is this compared with the joy that will be theirs in the great day of final revealing? "Now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face;" now we know in part, but then we shall know even as also we are known.

It is the reward of Christ's workers to enter into his joy. That joy, to which Christ himself looks forward with eager desire, is presented in his request to his Father, "I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am."

The angels were waiting to welcome Jesus, as he ascended after his resurrection. The heavenly host longed to greet again their loved Commander, returned to them from the prison-house of death. Eagerly they pressed about him as he entered the gates of heaven. But he waved them back. His heart was with the lonely, sorrowing band of disciples whom he had left upon Olivet. It is still with his struggling children on earth, who have the battle with the destroyer yet to wage. "Father," he says, "I will that they also, whom thou hast given me, be with me where I am."

Christ's redeemed ones are his jewels, his precious and peculiar treasure. "They shall be as the stones of a crown,"—"the riches of the glory of his inheritance in the saints." In them "he shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied."

And will not his workers rejoice when they, too, behold the fruit of their labors? The apostle Paul writes to the Thessalonian converts, saying, "What is our hope, or joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy." And he exhorts the Philippian brethren to "be blameless and harmless," to "shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain."

Every impulse of the Holy Spirit leading men to goodness and to God, is noted in the books of heaven, and in the day of God every one who has given himself as an instrument for the Holy Spirit's working will be permitted to behold what his life has wrought.

Wonderful will be the revealing as the lines of holy influence, with their precious results, are brought to view. What will be the gratitude of souls that will meet us in the heavenly courts, as they understand the sympathetic, loving interest which has been taken in their salvation! All praise, honor, and glory will be given to God and to the Lamb for our redemption; but it will not detract from the glory of God to express gratitude to the instrumentality he has employed in the salvation of souls ready to perish.

The redeemed will meet and recognize those whose attention they have directed to the uplifted Saviour. What blessed converse they have with these souls! "I was a sinner," it will be said, "without God and without hope in the world, and you came to me, and drew my attention to the precious Saviour as my only hope. And I believed in him. I repented of my sins, and was made to sit together with his saints in heavenly places in Christ Jesus." Others will say, "I was a heathen in heathen lands. You left your friends and comfortable home, and came to teach me how to find Jesus, and believe in him as the only true God. I demolished my idols, and worshiped God, and now I see him face to face. I am saved, eternally saved, ever to behold him whom I love. I then saw him only with the eye of faith, but now I see him as he is. I can now express my gratitude for his redeeming mercy to him who loved me, and washed me from my sins in his own blood."

Others will express their gratitude to those who fed the hungry and clothed the naked. "When despair bound my soul in unbelief, the Lord sent you to me," they say, "to speak words of hope and comfort. You brought me food for my physical necessities, and you opened to me the word of God, awakening me to my spiritual needs. You treated me as a brother. You sympathized with me in my sorrows, and restored my bruised and wounded soul, so that I could grasp the hand of Christ that was reached out to save me. In my ignorance you taught me patiently that I had a Father in heaven who cared for me. You read (1) to me the precious promises of God's Word. You inspired in me the faith that he would save me. My heart was softened, subdued, broken, as I contemplated the sacrifice which Christ had made for me. I became hungry for the bread of life, and the truth was precious to my soul. I am here, saved, eternally saved, ever to live in his presence, and to praise him who gave his life for me."

(1) (2)

What rejoicing there will be as these (1) redeemed ones meet and greet those who have had a burden in their behalf! And those who have lived, not to please themselves, but to be a blessing to the unfortunate who have so few blessings,— how their hearts will thrill with satisfaction! They will realize the promise, "Thou shalt be blessed; for they can not recompense thee: for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just."

The Blessedness of Giving

"It is more blessed to give than to receive," because it delivers us from the bonds of selfishness, and from the burden of dependence. One of the greatest hindrances to the spread of the gospel at home is the failure to give enough to carry it abroad. In proportion as we give do we become interested in worldwide evangelization. If we give liberally, our hearts become warmed and thrilled, and we feel the greater need of the entire consecration of ourselves to God, and thus we become more efficient workers at home. "There is that scattereth, and yet increaseth." The rule is that those churches which give the most to spread the gospel of the kingdom abroad are the churches which have the greatest vitality, and are the most potent in building up the Master's kingdom at home.

What is true of the church is also true of each individual in the church. The man who gives the most willingly and cheerfully, in the spirit of the Master, is the man who receives the greatest supply of grace, who enjoys the most of his presence, who has the greatest peace and happiness here, and who has the prospect of eternal bliss at God's right hand above. While it is true that the man who gives with pure motives receives, and many, with accumulated interest, in this life; yet we should not give with that motive in view. That would be giving from a selfish motive. If we give expecting to receive as much or more in return, we shall not be benefited by giving. But we are benefited when we lose ourselves in the work of the Lord, and give because of the great love we have for him, and because of the great desire we have to further his kingdom in the world, and to hasten the time when all nations and tongues and peoples will acknowledge the supremacy of our King.

The standard which Christianity raises is this: "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." He gave freely. He gave his Son for a lost world. He gives rain and sunshine, both on the just and on the unjust. It has been truly said, "No man has a purely benevolent emotion until he has done a deed or given a dollar without any desire for, or expectation of, any recompense but the approval of God." Any work which makes no appeal to selfishness, and offers no return save the expansion and enrichment of our spiritual natures, is the most closely related to our Christian growth. The greatest object of true giving is to develop this unselfishness, not because God or his poor need our help, but because we need the discipline of giving. Every individual Christian should give for the extension of the gospel of the kingdom. That is a debt that every man owes. We should feel that it is a debt of gratitude that every man owes to the bountiful Giver of all things. Then again, all the members of the church should pay their tithe and make liberal offerings. The tenth of our earnings belongs to God, and the increase of our flocks and fields of grain should be faithfully tithed. Nine tenths with the blessing of God upon it, will go further than ten tenths without his blessing.

The church of God stands in need of a great revival to-day, but along with it should be the revival of the pocketbook. If the churches and individuals would come forward, cheerfully and willingly giving as the Lord has prospered them, there would sweep such a wave of blessing over the land as has not been witnessed yet. We should be in the midst of a greater Pentecost than that which swept over Jerusalem in the apostles' days. Do you doubt it, reader? Listen to the word of God: "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." When this is done, then it will be time to shout, Hallelujah! But it comes with poor grace when the individual is not paying his tithe or making any offerings to missions, and then says that he is wholly the Lord's, and his soul is filled with divine love.

In our social life there are many opportunities of ministering to the needy and lost ones, and the Master himself says that in doing such service we are also ministering to him. What a privilege! The more we help others, the more we are helped ourselves. The more we impart light and hope and cheer to the hearts of our fellow men, the more shall we be cheered on our journey, and the more will our pathway be illuminated by the presence of Christ, the true light. The follower of Christ is never so happy as when head and heart and hand are actively engaged in helping others, and leading the perishing to the Redeemer of men. Let us, then, imitate the Master in spending and being spent, in giving our time, our energy, our means, ourselves, to him and for him, and thus learn by experience that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

History of the Early Advent Awakening in China — No. 3

The End of the Movement

J. O. CORLISS

The Tae-pings published many books and leaflets, and were very persevering in distributing them. In these they attempted to show that at one time China was blessed with a correct knowledge of true religion. They referred to the worship of Shang-te, the one supreme God, by ancestors of the Chinese race, and traced their subsequent deterioration to the point where they engaged in the worship of creatures of wood and stone. They also acknowledged the original fall of man, and the power of Jesus Christ to save him from his sins. They gave the work of the Holy Spirit in the heart great prominence, as the agent of God in man's regeneration.

These doctrines were clearly set forth by them, especially that one referring to the saving of men, which was expressed as follows: "Who has ever lived in the world without offending against the commands of Heaven? But until this time no one has known how to obtain deliverance from sin. Now, however, the great God has made a gracious communication to man; and from henceforth whosoever repents of his sins in the presence of the great God, and avoids worshiping depraved spirits, practising perverse things, or transgressing the divine commands, may ascend to heaven, and enjoy happiness for thousands and myriads of years in pleasure and delight, with dignity and honor, world without end."

It is questionable whether many among Western nations could set forth the Christian's benefit any clearer, in so few words. One more quotation on this point may not be out of place, however. In a text-book for children, entitled "Ode for Youth," there occurs the following verse: —

"Jesus, His first-born Son,
Was in former times sent by God,
Who willingly gave his life to redeem us from sin.
Of a truth, his merits are pre-eminent.
His cross was hard to bear,
The sorrowing clouds obscured the sun;
The adorable Son, the honored of heaven,
Died for you, children of men.
After his resurrection he ascended to heaven;
Resplendent in glory, he wields authority supreme.
In him we know that we may trust,
To secure salvation and ascend to heaven."

New-year's Hymn

SAVIOUR, let thy light appear,
On our pathway gleaming,
Through the portals of the year,
'Mid our darkness streaming.
Day by day,
Lord, we pray,
Keep us, lest our footsteps stray
Where false lights are beaming.

Clouds and sunbeams, smiles and tears,
Lie before us blended;
Hopes of youth, old age's fears,
Visions sad or splendid.
Day by day,
Still we pray,
Lord, be thou our strength and stay
Till our course is ended.

Cleansed and pardoned may we live,
Let not fears appal us;
Strength to do our duty give
Whatsoe'er befall us.
Day by day,
This we pray
Lead us Father, in thy way,
Till at last thou call us!

Thus sustained by thee alone,
Happy in thy guiding,
Bravely may we follow on,
In thy love confiding.
Day by day,
All the way,
Be thy cross our hope and stay,
Safe in thee abiding.

The Condition of Gaining Eternal Life

MRS. E. G. WHITE

ALL the instruction that any one needs in order to gain eternal life is found in the Word of God. This Word is a revelation of the divine will, given to us that by a daily study of it, our characters, showing daily improvement, may become transformed to the likeness of the character of the great Medical Missionary.

The Word of God is definite and specific, pointing out plainly the path to heaven. Those who heed the teachings of this Word will not turn their feet into false paths. Not only is the right way pointed out, but man is commanded to walk in that way, lest by setting a wrong example, he shall lead others in the path that ends in ruin.

"And, behold, one came and said unto him, Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?"

The young man who asked this question was a ruler. He had great possessions, and occupied a position of responsibility. Not long before he asked Christ this question, the mothers had brought their children to the Saviour to receive his blessing. The disciples would have kept these mothers away from their Master, but Jesus rebuked them, saying, "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God."

The ruler saw the love that Christ revealed for these children; he saw how tenderly he received them; and his heart kindled with love for the Saviour. He felt a desire to be his disciple. He was so deeply moved that as Christ was going on his way, he ran after him, and kneeling at his feet, asked with sincerity and earnestness the question so important to his soul and to the soul of every human being: "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?"

"Why callest thou me good?" Christ said; "there is none good but one, that is, God." Jesus desired to test the ruler's sincerity, and to draw from him the way in which he regarded him as good. Did he realize that the One to whom he was speaking was the Son of God? What was the true sentiment of his heart?

"If thou wilt enter into life," Christ continued, "keep the commandments. He saith unto him, Which?" In response Jesus quoted several of the commandments: "Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not steal, Thou shalt not bear false witness. Honor thy father and thy mother; and, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

The ruler's answer to this was positive: "All these things have I kept from my youth up. What lack I yet?"

"One thing thou lackest," Jesus said. "If thou wilt be perfect, go and sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven;" "and come, take up the cross, and follow me." Christ read the ruler's heart. He laid his hand upon his idol, — his earthly possessions,— which he must renounce before he could be found wanting in nothing. The possessions that he called his own were the Lord's, entrusted to him to be used for the very purpose that Christ has pointed out,— for the help of the poor and needy, for the relief of suffering humanity, to clothe the naked and feed the hungry.

Had the ruler been willing to obey Christ, great would have been the good that he might have done in following the Saviour's example. But he was not willing. The cost of eternal life seemed too great, and he went away sorrowful; for he had great possessions. The Saviour was not so much to him as his own name among men, or his possessions. To give up his earthly treasure, which was seen, for the heavenly treasure, which was unseen, was too great a risk. He refused the offer of eternal life, and ever after the world was to receive his worship.

Christ came to this world to give men and women an example of how to do true missionary work. He came to bring to human beings physical and spiritual healing. Laying aside his royal robe and kingly crown, he stepped down from his high command in the heavenly courts, and, clothing his divinity with humanity, came to this world to help human beings to rid themselves of selfish practises, and to give themselves to the service of God in helping others.

The healing of diseased souls and diseased bodies,— this was Christ's work in our world, and it is our work also. His words to the rich young ruler, "Sell that thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven," are spoken to all who possess this world's goods. If they will follow Christ's example, using their entrusted possessions to relieve the physical and spiritual necessities of those less fortunate than themselves, they will secure the enduring riches of eternal life.

To those who, like the young ruler, are in high positions of truth, and have great possessions, it may seem too great a sacrifice to give up all in order to follow Christ. But this is the rule of conduct for all who would become his disciples. Nothing short of it can be accepted. Self-surrender is the keynote of the teachings of Christ. Often it is presented and enjoined in language that seems authoritative, because God sees that there is no other way to save man than to cut away from his life that which, if entertained, would demoralize the whole being.

The work of evangelizing the world has been greatly hindered by personal selfishness. Some, even among professed Christians, are shortsighted, unable to see that the work of the gospel is to be supported by the goods that Christ has entrusted to them. Are we obeying the Saviour's instructions? Are we following his example? If we are truly converted, we shall regard ourselves as God's almoners, and will dispense for the advancement of his work the means that he has placed in our hands. Money is needed in order that the work waiting to be done all over our world may be carried forward. If Christ's words were obeyed, there would be thousands where there are hundreds willing to carry out his directions to the ruler. The Lord has entrusted to men and women an abundance of means for the carrying forward of his plan of mercy and benevolence. He bids his stewards of means to invest their money in the work of feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and preaching the gospel to the poor. Perfection of character can not possibly be attained without self-sacrifice.

When Christ's followers give back to the Lord his own, they are accumulating treasure which will be theirs when they hear the words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." "Who for the joy that was set before him endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God." The joy of seeing souls redeemed, souls eternally saved, is the reward of all who follow in the steps of him who said, "Follow me."

There are many in our world who are longing to hear the words of life.

But how can they hear without a preacher? And how can those sent to teach them live without support? God would have the lives of his followers carefully sustained. They are his property, and he is dishonored when they are compelled to labor in a way that injures their health. He is dishonored, also, when, for lack of means, workers can not be sent to destitute fields.

We are at this time making special efforts to set in operation certain lines of work in different places. These lines of work must have support. My brethren and sisters, read carefully the following scripture, and ask God to help you to do justice to the needs of his work: —

"He which soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he which soweth bountifully shall reap also bountifully. Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give; not grudgingly, or of necessity: for God loveth a cheerful giver. And God is able to make all grace abound toward you; that ye, always having all sufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work, . . . being enriched in everything to all bountifulness."

An Appeal to Clergy *

Open Letter From Seventh-day Adventist Ministers

Sunday Observance Crusade

They ask Protestant ministers whether such a movement as was recently proposed is really Christian — What the Bible says on the subject of the Lord's day — Breach in God's Law

The following open letter has been addressed to the Protestant clergy by the Seventh-day Adventist ministers of Washington: —

Esteemed Brethren: Having noticed the report of your meeting held in this city on Dec. 12, 1904, and the plan to open the new year with a campaign for the better observance of Sunday in the city of Washington, we wish, in the spirit of Christian kindness, and as brethren with you in the ministry, to present from a Bible standpoint what to us appears to be the truth respecting the Sabbath question, and why both Sunday keeping and Sunday legislation are wrong.

We, with you, love the Lord Jesus, and desire greatly to honor him. We stand firmly with you, we hope, on the solid rock of Protestant faith — "the Bible, and the Bible only," as the rule of belief and action. We, with you, believe thoroughly in the pressing need of a world-wide campaign in favor of better Sabbath observance. But let us be sure that all that we do is Christian, and done in a Christian way.

As ministers of God, our commission is to "preach the gospel." We are also commanded to "preach the word." What does our guide, the Bible, say on the Sabbath question?

As Found in Exodus

In Rev. 1:10 John says, "I was in the Spirit on the Lord's day." As this was written in the Christian dispensation, sixty years this side of the resurrection, it was given for Christians today.

This verse does not tell us which day is the Lord's; so we must go to other parts of the Lord's word to find out what day he claims.

In Ex. 20:8-11 we find the only command for a weekly Sabbath in the whole Bible. In this we read, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord."

In Matt. 12:8 Jesus claims to be "Lord even of the Sabbath day." In Isa. 58:13 he calls this same day "My holy day," and entreats his people not to trample upon it.

All through the Bible the seventh day of the week is called by God "My holy day," "My Sabbaths," "The Lord's day," "The Sabbath of the Lord," etc. And God has never claimed any other day as his own.

In the second chapter of Genesis we are told how the seventh day became God's holy day. First, God rested on it; that made it God's rest day. Second, he blessed it; then it was God's blessed rest day. Third, he sanctified it. To sanctify anything is to set it apart for a sacred, holy, religious use.

So God set the seventh day "apart," from the "six working days," for sacred, holy, religious use. For whose use? — "The Sabbath was made for man." Mark 2:27.

God blessed and sanctified the seventh day after he had rested upon it, and because he had rested; so it was the seventh day of all future time that God set apart for a sacred, holy, religious use.

As the Sabbath was made for man, the rest, blessing, and sanctification are for man.

The Sabbath is a part of the spiritual law (Rom. 7:14); the rest, therefore, is a spiritual rest, the blessing a spiritual blessing, and the sanctification is also spiritual.

So in giving to man his Sabbath, Jesus gave him his own character — his rest, blessing, and sanctification.

Christ Made the Sabbath

Jesus was the active agent in creation. John 1:1-3; Col. 1:12-17; Heb. 1:1, 2. He was the One who did the work and the resting; therefore Jesus made the Sabbath. He is the One who gave to men in the seventh-day Sabbath his own rest, blessing, and holiness; and in Eze. 20:12 we are told that if we hallow the Sabbath, it is a sign that the Lord is sanctifying us. As Christ is our sanctification (1 Cor. 1:30), the Sabbath is, therefore, a sign of what Christ is to the believer.

Notice, too, that in the making of the Sabbath, it is the day, and not the institution only, that was honored. God blessed the seventh day. Gen. 2:3. He sanctified the day, and he commands us to remember the day. Ex. 20:8.

All this was done in Eden before the fall, before there was any sin, before there was any need of a Saviour from sin, before there were any types or shadows. Hence, the Sabbath is in no sense typical or shadowy; it is wholly commemorative — a memorial of creation. Ex. 20:8-11.

It was made twenty-five hundred years before there was a Jew; so it is not the Jewish sabbath.

When nearly the whole world was in idolatry, God called Abraham, and made him many promises, because Abraham kept his laws. Gen. 26:5.

After the children of Abraham were brought out of Egypt, God gave them manna in the "six working days," but none on the Sabbath, to see if they would keep his law. Ex. 16:4. When they went to seek it on the Sabbath, God asked, "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?" Ex. 16:27-30. This was a month before the law was given from Sinai.

Ceremonies and Moral Precepts

Later, God gave them many ceremonies as well as moral precepts, and among them were shadowy sabbaths, pointing to the work of Christ. Col. 2:16, 17. But he carefully distinguished between the two kinds of laws, and the two kinds of sabbaths. The ten commands he spoke with his own voice to the people. Deut. 4:12, 13. He wrote them with his own finger on tables of stone, and commanded them to be kept inside the sacred ark. Ex. 24:12; 31:18; 32:15, 16; Deut. 10:4, 5. All the other ceremonies, etc., were given through Moses to the people, were written by Moses in a book, which was kept in the side of the ark. Deut. 1:1-18; 33:4; 31:24-26. Thus God made a plain difference between the ten commandment law and all the other laws.

In the very center of the honored ten commands, God placed the seventh-day Sabbath, thus clearly showing the difference between it and the shadowy, ceremonial sabbaths given through Moses. God intends that everybody shall see this difference.

When his ministers put no difference between the holy and the common, and hide their eyes from his Sabbaths, he complains of it, and says he is profaned. Eze. 22:26.

God's ten commandment law is perfect, right, pure, clean, and true. By it the soul is converted, or restored. Ps. 19:7-11.

God will not alter, or change, the thing that is gone out of his lips. Ps. 89:34. All his commandments are sure, and stand fast forever and ever. Ps. 111:7, 8.

Paul writes of this same law in the Christian dispensation that it is still holy, just, and good. Rom. 7:12. What is true of the law as a whole must be true of all its parts; so the seventh-day Sabbath is perfect, holy, just, and good; it also stands fast forever and ever.

Our Source of Strength

Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will avail to make!

. . . . .

We kneel, how weak! We rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others, that we are not always strong,
That we are ever overborne with care,
That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
And joy and strength and courage are with thee?

The College View Council

MRS. E. G. WHITE

From the Omaha camp-meeting we went to College View, where the General Conference Committee was in council from September 15 to 25. We were made welcome, and were well cared for at the Nebraska Sanitarium.

On Thursday morning I spoke to the students in the college chapel. A goodly number of the College View church-members were present, and I was led to present to them the exhortation given by the apostle to those who know that the day of the Lord is near at hand. Please read 1 Thess. 5:1-7. The apostle continues, "Let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breastplate of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation. For God hath not appointed us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ, who died for us, that, whether we wake or sleep, we should live together with him. Wherefore comfort yourselves together, and edify one another."

This is our work. We are not to watch for defects in those around us. By so doing, we are placing ourselves on the judgment-seat, and are judging. This is not our proper place or work.

If we see one in error, we should go to him kindly, and speak to him in regard to the matter, seeking by every possible means to present the truth in contrast with error. There is always a truth with which to meet error. Let this never be forgotten. And believers are to watch for souls as they that must give an account. Not that you are to watch for their haltings and their errors; you are to watch for the prosperity of their souls, that you may know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary.

We take upon ourselves a grave responsibility when we unite with the church. The church is God's family, and the members of this family are to be unselfishly interested in one another. They are to pray and work for one another's salvation.

This is the work that God expects from us as a people. When you see a church whose members are in arms against one another, complaining and finding fault, you may know that there are duties which they have neglected. You may know that there is something lacking in those who always see something defective in their brethren. You may know that such ones have something to correct in their own characters.

If you think that a brother is in the wrong, go right to him. Do not go to some one else, because this will not cure the difficulty. Go to the very one who you think is in error, and ask him if he is standing in a position that will lead others to make missteps. Tell him that he must make straight paths for his feet, lest the lame be turned out of the way.

It will not do for any of us to get careless and indifferent in regard to our church-membership. While on this journey that I am now taking, I have felt a most solemn responsibility to try to show our people that God holds them accountable to live lives that will keep the atmosphere of the church pure and fragrant. God is dishonored, and his Spirit is grieved, when this atmosphere is tainted by careless living and by evil-speaking.

The haphazard work done in the church by speaking to others of errors and mistakes before speaking to the one at fault has been the greatest cause and manifestation of wickedness and defection in the church. Weakness has come to many because they have not taken up their appointed work. God will not accept your gifts, however precious they may be, unless you make a straight path for your feet by following the directions that Christ has given.

"If thou bring thy gift to the altar," he says, "and there rememberest that thy brother hath aught against thee; leave there thy gift before the altar, and go thy way; first be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift."

We read again, "Moreover if thy brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone: if he shall hear thee, thou hast gained thy brother."

Tell him his fault "between thee and him alone." If he listens to you, you have gained your brother. You have not lost him, you have not built up a barrier between him and you. You have gained him.

Say to him, If you have anything against me, tell me what it is, that I may take it out of the way. Do not blame him. Do not cast reflections on him, but ask, What have I done? If I have done wrong, I want this to be removed; for I have a gift to offer to the Lord, and he has told me first to be reconciled to my brother.

When you have done all in your power to bring about a reconciliation, you have acted your part, and you can then offer your gift, knowing that it will be accepted by God. You will have removed a mountain of difficulty out of the way of your brother. It may be that the difficulty was really only a mole-hill, but it had been made into a mountain. When you remove the mole-hill, the mountain has gone.

This is the work resting upon us, and we are not to delay to do it. We can not afford to delay. We have much of this work to do, because we have left much undone. It is because of this neglect that the Lord of heaven is not glorified in our lives.

When this work is done, the disunion existing in the church will be cured, and the cause of God will move forward with power. When you see that which you think is wrong, do all in your power to correct it. Find out what it is that separates you from your brother, and plead for the unity that Christ has said should exist in the church. Love as brethren, and do the work appointed you. Then you will know the preciousness of Christ's words, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me."

As you seek for Christ with all your heart, and in faith, that you may reach a higher standard of righteousness, he may reveal to you a duty undone, a stumbling-block that you must remove in order that your brother may be relieved, and that you may advance in the right way. Your brother may be wrong, and you may be wrong; therefore come together as children of the same family. Work as earnestly to make things right as you will wish you had worked in that day when the judgment shall sit, and the books shall be opened, and every man shall be judged according to the deeds done in the body.

It is the neglect of this work that is standing in the way of our churches all through our conferences. When believers stand where Christ has said they should stand, when they clear difficulties out of the way by the very process that he has outlined, they will be greatly blessed.

On Sabbath morning I spoke in the church to a large congregation. I read from the first chapters of Revelation the messages given to the apostle John for the churches.

John had a message for the people in his day. But they became tired of hearing of Jesus, and of the character which, in order to be saved, they must perfect through him, so they tried to kill the faithful messenger. This plan being thwarted, they banished him to the lonely, rocky island of Patmos. They thought that by separating him from his fellow men, they would silence his testimony, and that he would live out the remainder of his life in mournful solitude. But God was with the lonely exile, and opened to his view the glories of heaven, and the things that "must shortly come to pass."

John bore no uncertain message. "That which was from the beginning," he says, "which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the word of life (for the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us); that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

We have, as had John, a message to bear of the things which we have seen and heard. God is not giving us a new message. We are to proclaim the message that in 1843 and 1844 brought us out of the other churches. We need the Holy Spirit to kindle in our hearts the zeal and earnestness that were then seen among God's people. I thank the Lord that there are still living a few who can remember those days, and who know whereof they speak.

John continues: "These things write we unto you, that your joy may be full. This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all."

The Lord does not want us to walk in darkness and perplexity. He desires us to know the truth as it is in Jesus, and wherever we go, to proclaim that truth. By word and deed we are to reveal Jesus to the world.

"If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. If we say we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us. If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us."

"These things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby we know that we are in him. He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk even as he walked."

My heart was made glad to hear of the unity and good cheer that prevailed during the council. I had a severe cold, and was not able to attend all the meetings, but my mind was constantly exercised. In the night season scene after scene passed before me. I am so sorry that we are such dwarfs in the work of Christ, when such wonderful incentives are placed before us to encourage us to cultivate our powers to the very highest point of development. We are to grow. Christians are to grow up to the full stature of men and women in Christ. Our words and works are to bear witness to the world of what Christianity can do for human beings.

Every church should be a light in the world. If there is in your church a deadness, a stagnation, come together, as the disciples did before the day of Pentecost, and plead with God until you receive the light of life. Then let the light shine forth to those around you. Do not go on from week to week, from year to year, without knowing whether or not you are in the love of God. When Jesus went away, he promised to send the Holy Spirit, and we have a right to claim this promise. God wants us to work in the power of the Spirit. He wants us to be guided and controlled by the living, abiding principles that will keep us firm in the truth.

God has not placed us on the judgment-seat, to pronounce sentence against our brethren. There is only one Judge, — the One who died for us, who took upon himself our nature and all the infirmities of humanity, that we might stand on vantage-ground with God. Never are we to dissect the work or the character of another. Each one has enough to do to attend to the work that has been delivered to him. Each one is to bear his burden in the place in which he has been appointed to labor, doing his work with that perfection which will give character and influence to the cause of God. This is what the Lord expects of every conference president. This is what he expects of every worker in every line. Stand at your post of duty. When you act well your part, in your own place, there will come to you a freedom, a light, a power, that will enable you to endure as seeing him who is invisible.

Benefits Received in Faithfully Doing Periodical Work

D. T. BOURDEAU

With true consecration, and the Spirit of God to counsel, comfort, and strengthen, and to open the way before us, to prepare hearts, to remove obstacles, we shall not only succeed in disseminating present truth, but new faith and courage will spring up in our hearts, and we become a blessing to others. Opportunities will be opened to us that could come to us in no other work. We shall be drawn out in love for God and love for our fellow beings, and our appreciation of our papers and our other literature will be increased.

Reading the reports of the progress of the cause in the papers, we shall not be as inclined to be narrowly shut up to ourselves and to a small locality in our views of the work, but shall have enlarged views, and shall be in a better condition to pray more intelligently for the laborers in the work in other lands. We will naturally be led to put our tracts and other works into circulation, which will open new fields for the living preacher and hasten the loud cry of the third angel's message.

Are not these results sufficient to lead us to enter heartily into this work? As one who has derived incalculable benefits from reading the Review for nearly a half century, who has known it to be a great blessing to many others; who possesses the conviction that with the coöperation of its present readers it can be made a blessing to those who are not favored with its weekly visits, my heart palpitates with joy in view of the present movement for extending the circulation of our periodicals and other literature. God forbid that my attitude toward this movement be that of one who assents, but does not have his course in harmony with what he says. The writer has recently put forth special efforts to obtain subscribers for the Review, and has enjoyed more than an ordinary measure of the Spirit of God.

The great object of all of our periodicals is the heralding of the second advent of Jesus Christ, and the needful preparation to meet that most important event. Each of these periodicals has its special mission to fill, yet the grand and all-absorbing object of all of them is the same. How inconsistent it would be on the one hand, to divorce the Review from our other papers, and give all our attention to it! As well might we think of divorcing the good mother from her offspring who bear her noble character. The Review inculcates love and respect for our other papers, and let us do the same. Good soldiers who stand at the front, bearing the brunt of war and doing important pioneer work, are honored; and so let us honor and support The Signs of the Times, for a similar reason, from a spiritual standpoint; also doing the same for The Southern Watchman, for the same reason, and for the weighty additional reason that it is struggling in a vast, important, and long-neglected field, to rise to that sphere of usefulness for which it was intended by Providence.

The Review is emphatically our church paper. It deals more largely in matters pertaining to our interested believers than any of our other periodicals. It reports the progress of the cause more fully than our other papers, and should make its weekly visits to every family of believers in present truth, and every isolated, English-speaking Seventh-day Adventist should read it. It is all the preaching many of our people have, and it will not be improper to extend its circulation to persons not of our faith. It has been the means of leading many persons to God and present truth.

Bearing the Cross

THE heavier cross, the nearer heaven;
No cross without, no God within:
Death, judgment, from the hearts are driven,
Amidst the world's false glare and din.
O, happy he, with all his loss,
Whom God hath set beneath the cross!

The heavier cross, the better Christian;
This is the touchstone God applies.
How many a garden would lie wasting,
Unwet by showers from weeping eyes!
The gold by fire is purified:
The Christian is by trouble tried.

The heavier cross, the stronger faith;
The loaded palm strikes deeper root;
The vine-juice sweetly issueth
When men have pressed the clustered fruit;
And courage grows where dangers come,
Like pearls beneath the salt sea-foam.

The heavier cross, the heartier prayer;
The bruised herbs most fragrant are;
If wind and skies were always fair,
The sailor would not watch the star;
And David's psalms had ne'er been sung
If grief his heart had never wrung.

The heavier cross, the more aspiring;
From vales we climb to mountain crest;
The pilgrim, of the desert tiring,
Longs for the Canaan of his rest;
The dove has here no rest in sight,
And to the ark she wings her flight.

* * * *

Thou Crucified! the cross I carry,
The longer may it dearer be;
And, lest I faint whilst here I tarry,
Implant thou such a heart in me
That faith, hope, love, may flourish there,
Till for my cross the crown I wear!

Moline and Battle Creek

MRS. E. G. WHITE

AT the close of the General Conference Committee Council at College View, Neb., we returned to Battle Creek, as I had promised. At Moline, Ill., we broke our journey, that we might visit the Moline Sanitarium. Here we had a profitable visit with Drs. Sanford and Maria Edwards, who have charge of the medical work of the institution. We were pleased with the location and appearance of the sanitarium, though we wished it might have been a little way out of the city. Dr. Edwards gave us as much of his time as possible, and took us for a drive through the city and the park.

This city is an important field, and must be given the message for this time. We are glad that the sanitarium work has been begun here, and we hope that a holy influence may be exerted by this institution through its workers. The Lord has many souls in this place that should be visited by workers ready to do their Master's bidding.

Not long ago this sanitarium had a narrow escape from being destroyed by fire. Electric wires set fire to a portion of the upper story, and the flames had begun to burst out from the roof. But Dr. Edwards discovered the blaze, and by quick action with fire-extinguishers succeeded in putting it out. When the fire-engines arrived, the fire had been entirely subdued. All are very thankful that it has not been necessary for the fire-engines to be put in operation.

This sanitarium has a good patronage, and the hearts of the workers have been greatly cheered by the favors and tokens of appreciation shown them by the patients. One day one of the wealthy patients, after climbing the stairs to his room after his bath, remarked that they should have an elevator. Sister Edwards replied that when they had taken in sufficient money so they could afford it, they would put in an elevator. Very soon this gentleman gave Dr. Edwards instruction to select a good elevator, promising that he and a friend of his would purchase it, and present it to the institution. This elevator is now in daily use.

We hope that our brethren and sisters in northern Illinois will encourage and assist Brother and Sister Edwards and their faithful helpers in the good work to be done in the sanitarium and in the city. If all will labor heartily and disinterestedly, the Lord will give them souls for their hire. I think of the many places in need of such work, and wish that all our people could realize that the Lord is ready to go before every self-sacrificing worker who will carry the truth to places where it has not been heard. Then those who are collected in large numbers in some of our churches would feel a burden to go out into other cities and villages to search out those who are waiting for the truth.

In the night season I am repeating the words: —

"My righteousness is near; my salvation is gone forth, and mine arms shall judge the people; the isles shall wait upon me, and on mine arm shall they trust."

"Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

As I rode through the streets and parks of Moline, I thought, Verily this is a place where the truth should be firmly established. The Lord will work here if those who are placed in positions of trust will work and watch and pray. He will in mercy call out in this place a people who will be united in keeping his way. I felt an earnest desire that our people, who profess to accept the great commission given by Christ to his disciples just before his ascension, should take up their appointed work, and carry the message to all the cities and villages in our land. The truth must be proclaimed in the highways and the byways.

The Lord says to his people: "Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee." O that the Lord would awaken the church-members to go forth to devote their powers to the work of saving the souls that are perishing in sin! God calls upon men and women everywhere to go forth and earnestly prepare the way for his coming.

On our arrival at Battle Creek, we were met by our friends, who gave us a hearty welcome. We spent five days there, during which time I spoke three times to large congregations in the Tabernacle, once to the students in the medical college, and once to the helpers in the sanitarium gymnasium. The Lord gave me a decided testimony to bear at these meetings. I can not find words to tell how heavy was the burden resting upon me as I looked upon the large audience before me in the Tabernacle Sabbath morning, and thought of the instruction and the warnings that have so often come to the people in this congested center. Often has the testimony been borne that there are thousands upon thousands perishing in ignorance of the requirements of God, and of the judgments that will fall upon the disobedient.

There were between twenty-five hundred and three thousand people present. I knew that if they were awake to discern the signs of the times, if they understood the responsibility resting upon them individually, they would not all be in Battle Creek, listening to a repetition of gospel truth, and paying little attention to the messages sent them. If they knew and understood the voice of God, many would leave Battle Creek, and go forth with the light of present truth, carrying it to many places now in darkness.

As I read the words of the twenty-fourth chapter of Luke, I wonder that God's people do not see and understand the work they have been given to do. Read the whole chapter carefully and prayerfully.

After receiving the Holy Spirit, the disciples were first to bear their witness in Jerusalem, and then they were to go forth to all nations. "Ye shall be witnesses unto me," Christ declared, "both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

Under the influence of the Holy Spirit, thousands were converted in a day. The word of the Spirit, newly edged with power, and bathed in the lightnings of heaven, cut its way through unbelief. The hearts of the disciples were surcharged with a benevolence so full, so deep, so far-reaching that it impelled them to go to the ends of the earth, testifying, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ." They were filled with an intense longing to add to the church such as should be saved. They called on believers to arouse and do their part, that all nations might hear the truth, and the earth be filled with the glory of the Lord.

As the disciples, filled with the power of the Spirit, went forth to proclaim the gospel, so God's servants are to go forth to-day. Every one on whom is shining the light of present truth is to be stirred with compassion for those who are in darkness. From all believers light is to be reflected in clear, distinct rays. A work similar to that which the Lord did through his delegated messengers after the day of Pentecost he is waiting to do to-day. At this time, when the end of all things is at hand, the zeal of the church should exceed even that of the early church. Zeal for the glory of God moved the disciples to bear witness to the truth with mighty power. Should not this zeal fire our hearts with a longing to tell the story of redeeming love, of Christ and him crucified?

Sunday afternoon I spoke again in the Tabernacle. The meeting had been advertised, and there were present many citizens of Battle Creek who were not of our faith. At this meeting I assured my hearers that we held the same principles of truth that we had so many times set before them in past years. I assured them that no phase of our message had been changed to meet scientific or spiritualistic philosophy, but that we hold as firmly as ever to the strongholds of our faith, which have made the Seventh-day Adventist people what they are. We have built our house upon the eternal Rock, the Rock of Ages.

I said that I did not claim to be a prophetess. I have not stood before the people claiming this title, though many called me thus. I have been instructed to say, "I am God's messenger, sent to bear a message of reproof to the erring and of encouragement to the meek and lowly." With pen and with voice I am to bear the messages given me. The word given me is, "You are faithfully to reprove those who would mar the faith of the people of God. Write out the things which I shall give you, that they may stand as a witness to the truth till the end of time."

I said, "If any of the citizens of Battle Creek wish to know what Mrs. White believes and teaches, let them read her published books. My labors would be naught should I preach another gospel. That which I have written is what the Lord has bidden me write. I have not been instructed to change that which I have sent out. I stand firm in the Adventist faith; for I have been warned in regard to the seducing sophistries that will seek for entrance among us as a people. The Scripture says, 'Some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils.' I present before our people the danger of being led astray as were the angels in the heavenly courts. The straight line of truth presented to me when I was but a girl is just as clearly presented to me now."

I have a most earnest desire that the truth for this time shall be proclaimed throughout the world. God's people have a great and solemn work to do. The day of the Lord is near, it is near, and hasteth greatly. Every hour, every minute, is precious. We have no time to spend in the gratification of selfish desires. All around us there are souls perishing in sin. Every day there is something to do for the Master. Every day we are to point souls to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world.

Seventh-day Adventists and Labor Unions

K. C. RUSSELL

It must be admitted that from a human or worldly point of view, labor unions seem to be the most effective means for maintaining the rights of the laboring man against the oppressive system of the money power.

But with the person who has "been born again," and has become "a new creature," old things have passed away, and all things have become new. Hence he can not view things as he did before. He must look at them with heaven and eternity in view, and not from a worldly and temporal standpoint.

With this understanding of the question, it will not be difficult for every Seventh-day Adventist to determine what his relation should be to labor unions.

The very essence of the gospel is to make men free; for Jesus says he was sent "to preach deliverance to the captives," and "to set at liberty them that are bruised." The Lord wants his people delivered from Egyptian bondage and servitude. Anything that restricts their liberties he is not pleased with; for it deprives them of their free moral agency, which lies at the very foundation of all that makes this life or the future one worth living for.

Every one who has any acquaintance with labor organizations knows that when one becomes allied with them, he surrenders to a certain extent his freedom to act. Such matters as the number of hours he is to work each day, the rate of wages he is to receive, the choice of an employer, when he is to work, when to strike or cease to work, and the like, have passed from under his control. Should a strike be declared by the leaders of the organization, he must refrain from labor, even though he is satisfied with his wages and his employment, and there exists the most perfect satisfaction and the sweetest harmony between himself and his employer. In some instances he is even denied the right to choose where he and his family shall spend the wages he has earned by the sweat of his own brow.

Not only is the man who joins the labor unions thus deprived of his own liberties, but the liberties and the rights of others are also involved. One illustration will suffice to show this. The manager of an extensive job printing plant in an Eastern city desired on a certain occasion to discharge a workman who was not giving satisfaction. But, although employer of the man and owner of the printing plant, did he have the power to exercise that right? — No; he must first place the matter before the local printers' union. And before he could even do this, he must secure with difficulty the privilege of presenting the case before them; and then it would be a question whether he could secure redress.

Illustration after illustration might be given showing that the principles that govern those connected with these unions are in flagrant contradiction to the principles of the gospel.

There is another feature that should not be overlooked by every Seventh-day Adventist, and that is the fact that every member of these unions is equally responsible with every other member of the organization for all the results that follow this relation, and the influence of them.

Let me ask you, my brother and sister, are you prepared to assume the awful responsibility of the fruits that are often borne as the result of labor troubles, in which are destroyed property, and sometimes life itself?

The Lord has plainly said, "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." This statement does not apply merely to the marriage relation, but to any other that makes us equally responsible in our actions and influence with those who are not walking in the light of present truth. It embraces partnership in business with unbelievers, and uniting with secret societies or labor unions. There is a union that we can all safely join, and that is the one spoken of in John 17:20-23.

Christ or Diana?

GEO. O. STATES

While visiting one of my neighbors recently, and trying to interest him in the truth for our time, he remarked that he belonged to a certain order, and that the man who lived up to its teachings would be about as good as a man could be. I told him I fully agreed with him, and no doubt the man who lived up to such teachings would be as

THE world is old with centuries,
  But not for these she bows her head;
Close to her heart the sorrow lies —
  She holds so many dead!
Sad discords mingle in her song,
  Tears fall upon her with the dew,
The whole creation groans; how long
  Ere all shall be made new?

Yet brightly on her smiles the sun,
  A bounteous heaven delights to bless;
O, what shall be that fairer one
  Wherein dwells righteousness?
O happy world! O holy time!
  When wrong shall die, and strife shall cease,
And all the bells of heaven chime
  With melodies of peace.

No place shall be in that new earth
  For all that blights this universe;
No evil taint the second birth —
  "There shall be no more curse."
Ye broken-hearted, cease your moan,
  The day of promise dawns for you;
For he that sits upon the throne
  Says, "I make all things new."

An Open Letter

"ELMSHAVEN," SANITARIUM, CAL., Jan. 11, 1905.

To Our Workers in Washington, D. C.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS: You are engaged in a most important work, and I feel a deep interest in all of you. I am hoping that every stroke that is made in Takoma Park and in the city of Washington toward the upbuilding of the cause of God, may tell to the glory of the Lord. I pray that you may all work in such a way that many souls shall be brought to a knowledge of the truth for this time. Let all who can speak words for the Master be wide-awake now, just now, when so much depends upon the earnestness of our efforts. We have not a moment to lose, The end is nearer than when we first believed. Keep your eyes fixed steadfastly on Jesus. Seek the Lord daily for a new consecration.

Often ask yourselves the question, "What must I do to be saved?" Then search your Bibles, and pray earnestly for the impartation of the Holy Spirit, that you may understand the truth as it is in Jesus. Remember that you are workers together with God, and that your hearts are to be purified from all defilement. Put away all strife, all evil speaking and evil thinking. Remember that haphazard work will not answer now. We are to do faithful work in upholding the claims of God's law.

Truth in the heart guides us to Christ, who is the author of all truth, and the only one who can cleanse the soul from defilement. The practise of the principles of truth fills the soul with peace.

The Medical Missionary Work

I am very much pleased to know that our brethren in Washington have been successful in finding, in a good locality, a building suitable for well-equipped treatment rooms. I see the providence of God in this. I have been instructed that some provision must be made to carry on sanitarium work in this city as soon as possible, while the sanitarium building at Takoma Park is being erected. It would be in harmony with the instruction given me for our brethren to begin sanitarium work in rented buildings in the cities, and then carry on the work until other buildings outside of the cities can be provided. Patients can be transferred from the city place to the institutions in the country. City treatment rooms and country sanitariums can work together advantageously and harmoniously. In Washington the sanitarium work should thus make rapid advancement. The city patients can be gathered in by the place in the city, and from there be taken to Takoma Park, which is only a few miles away, and where they can have the retirement of rural life.

In our Washington work wise, competent physicians, efficient managers, and nurses with the very best qualifications will be needed. Earnest, devoted young people also will be needed, to enter the work as nurses. These young men and women will increase in capability as they use conscientiously the knowledge they gain, and they will become better and better qualified to be the Lord's helping hand. They may become successful missionaries, pointing souls to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world, and whose healing efficiency can save both soul and body.

The Lord wants wise men and women, acting in the capacity of nurses, to comfort and help the sick and suffering. Through the ministrations of these nurses, those who have heretofore taken no interest in religious things will be led to ask, "What must I do to be saved?" The sick will be led to Christ by the patient attention of nurses who anticipate their wants, and who bow in prayer and ask the great Medical Missionary to look with compassion upon the sufferer, and to let the soothing influence of his grace be felt, and his restoring power be exercised.

O that all who are sick and afflicted could be ministered to by Christlike physicians and nurses, who could help them to place their weary, pain-racked bodies in the care of the great Healer, in faith looking to him for restoration!

The nervous timidity of the sick will be overcome as they are made acquainted with the intense interest that the Saviour has for all suffering humanity. O the depth of the love of Christ! To redeem us from death, he died on the cross of Calvary.

Let our physicians and nurses ever bear in mind the words, "We are laborers together with God." Let every physician and every nurse learn how to work for the alleviation of mental as well as physical suffering. At this time, when sin is so prevalent and so violently revealed, how important it is that our sanitariums be conducted in such a way that they will accomplish the greatest amount of good. How important that all the workers in these institutions know how to speak words in season to those who are weary and sin-sick.

Physicians and nurses should ever be kind and cheerful, putting away all gloom and sadness. Let faith grasp the hand of Christ for his healing touch.

As our nurses minister patiently to those who are sick in body and soul, let them ask God to work for the suffering ones, that they may be led to know Christ, and let them believe that their prayers will be answered. In all that is done, let the love of Christ be revealed.

Every sincere Christian bows to Jesus as the true physician of souls. When he stands by the bedside of the afflicted, there will be many not only converted, but healed. He who declared, "I am the way, the truth, and the life," will be with his faithful physicians and nurses as they strive to co-operate with him. If through judicious ministration the patient is led to give his soul to Christ, and to bring his thoughts into obedience to the will of God, a great victory is gained.

It is for the object of soul saving that our sanitariums are established. In our daily ministrations we see many care-worn, sorrowful faces. What does the sorrow on these faces show? — The need of the soul for the peace of Christ. Poor, sad human beings go to broken cisterns, which can hold no water, thinking to quench their thirst. Let them hear a voice saying, "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters." Poor, weary, oppressed souls, seeking you know not what, come to the water of life. All heaven is yearning over you. "Come to Me, that ye might have life."

It is that thirsting souls may be led to the living water that we plead for sanitariums, not expensive, mammoth sanitariums, but homelike institutions, in pleasant places.

Never, never build mammoth sanitariums. Let these institutions be small, and let there be more of them, that the work of winning souls to Christ may be accomplished. It may often be necessary to start sanitarium work in the city, but never build a sanitarium in a city. Rent a building, and keep looking for a suitable place out of the city. The sick are to be reached, not by massive buildings, but by the establishment of many small sanitariums, which are to be as lights shining in a dark place. Those who are engaged in this work are to reflect the sunlight of Christ's face. They are to be as salt that has not lost its savor. By sanitarium work, properly conducted, the influence of true, pure religion will be extended to many souls.

From our sanitariums trained workers are to go forth into places where the truth has never been proclaimed, and do missionary work for the Master, claiming the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Christ can bring light out of darkness.

I appeal to all who have means to make a determined effort to carry out the instruction God has given regarding the establishment of a sanitarium in Takoma Park. Let our people rally to the support of this important enterprise. Let the churches in every State act their part, that the work in Washington may not come to a standstill. Let us make liberal gifts to this work, and the Lord will bless us and it. We can not see this work coming to a standstill while it is but half done. It need not come to a standstill if all our people will come up to the help of the Lord.

Let us come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty powers of darkness. Satan is working with intensity of purpose to enslave and destroy souls. Let us take a firm stand against him. The word of God urges every one to go steadily forward on the upward grade, pressing toward the mark of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

The Missionary Generation

ALLEN MOON

During the Dark Ages the heathen nations remained closed to Christian missionaries. Owing to the corrupted form of Christianity then being taught and practised, the time had not come for it to go to all nations. The Reformation came to the so-called Christian nations, and for a time the work of purification went on, also the exposure of the rubbish of false doctrines substituted for the truth by the leaders of the Christian church. The revelation of truth continued through the efforts of godly men until the time came for the Bible, which now began to be printed in many languages, to go to all the world.

The Saviour, in conversation with his disciples, told them that some great signs would mark the beginning of the work of giving the gospel of the kingdom to all the world. He mentioned a great earthquake, the darkening of the sun and moon, the falling of the stars, wars of nations, and told them that the generation that saw these signs would also witness the preaching of the gospel to the heathen. These signs began to appear toward the close of the eighteenth century, and continued into the nineteenth century. In addition to the signs referred to, it would be the most natural thing in the world to look for other indications that God and the heavenly host were moving not only the heavens, but the earth also, for the accomplishment of the work for this generation. Let us for a moment view what God has wrought on the earth.

When Carey entered India at the very beginning of the nineteenth century, he met with great opposition. Up to that time India had successfully resisted all missionary effort on the part of Christians. The time had come for the decreed change, and in 1812 Carey baptized his first converts, and by the end of 1817 he had many native preachers in the field. The work spread rapidly. Bishop Thorburn, who spent thirty years in India, in writing of the period already referred to, says: "The organization of the London Missionary Society followed, and in many places, both in England and in Scotland, an intense interest was manifested in the new enterprise. The missionary era had been fairly ushered in." It is recorded of the cobbler Carey that the greatest work of his life was the arousing of the missionary spirit among the Christian people of Europe, which resulted in rallying the people to the support of missionary effort. Thus it was at the opening of the missionary generation. To-day India is open to receive the gospel. More than one hundred and fifty thousand of the people of India have the Bible, and profess faith in the Christian religion.

Africa was very little known until Livingstone began his explorations in 1843. The millions that peopled that continent were in total ignorance of the existence of the Bible, but now are being taught the word. The language is the principal obstacle, aside from the hardships of life in the wilderness. In Egypt the gospel may be taught as freely as in England or America, although only a few short years ago the entrance of the gospel was forcibly resisted.

We might speak of China and Japan, the center of interest for all the world at the present time. Centuries ago the Chinese were not averse to foreign intercourse, but owing to the doubtful course pursued by the Spanish and other European people, as well as Catholic missionaries, nearly all foreign intercourse was cut off, and it was not until the nineteenth century that a change came. China to-day is ready for the gospel, and the missionary has already penetrated almost every part of that land peopled by more than four hundred millions of inhabitants. Japan was the most exclusive of nations, the laws prohibiting any intercourse of its people with the world. This condition continued from 1624 until the treaty with the United States in 1853. Since that time Japan has welcomed the Christian religion almost as freely as Western civilization. Through the conflict of nations and political evolution, God has wrought the preparation of the world for the great last-day work,— a preparation that only God could bring out of conditions existing three quarters of a century ago; and besides all this, in the same period, the railroads and steamship lines were built, penetrating the very heart of these dark lands, and bringing them as it were to our doors. Printing in almost every language and dialect proves a very great aid in the work of enlightening the dark corners of the world.

We are in the last end of the missionary generation. Will God's people embrace the opportunities provided by divine power, and use the facilities within their reach?

"Ye Have Robbed Me"

R. A. UNDERWOOD

"Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord." Mal. 3:7.

This terrible indictment of God against the remnant church is coupled with a message of hope. Christ holds out the scepter of mercy to a people that have committed a great crime. "Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord." To stand in the judgment, we must have clean hands and pure hearts. God commands his servants to "cry aloud, spare not, . . . and show my people their transgression, and the house of Jacob their sins." The books of record have been opened. It is court week in heaven.

"Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel," (Amos 4:12) is the message of the hour. The angel with the measuring line has gone forth to measure Jerusalem. Zech. 2:1, 2. The search-light of the divine law must be turned upon every soul. Zeph. 1:12-18; Rev. 11:1; 14:12. The soul temple must be cleansed from every sin. Isa. 1:16; 1 John 1:9. Transgression must be put away from every one who abides the day of Christ's coming. The church must be without spot upon her garments. The law of God, united with the faith of Jesus Christ (Rev. 14:12), will be the only passport that will admit a soul into the kingdom. This banner must be raised before the world by the church. The world must see exemplified in the life of the church all that the holy law of God demands. The church accepted at the coming of Christ, must be a living example of the divine law engraved in human flesh. For these reasons we invite your prayerful study of this great accusation.

When the Creator gave man a being, he reserved holy unto himself the seventh day of time. This day must be recognized as not belonging to man for secular purposes; it is to be kept holy unto God. Ex. 20:8-11. God also reserved one of the fruit-bearing trees of the garden as a test of man's loyalty, and a recognition of God's ownership. Gen. 3:3. God reserved sacredly but one day out of the seven to himself. Likewise, of all the products of the earth, he reserved but one tree to test man's loyalty.

Time is essential to man's being, so are the products of the earth. The former would be of no value to man without the latter, and the bounties of the earth would be of no profit to man without time. Hence God brings a test to man touching these essential gifts of God to man, which involve the entire moral law. The Sabbath has been a test in all the ages of the past, and will be to the end of the world. The tree of

The Call

W. R. PATTERSON

"What mean all these open doors in every land, if it is not God's call to action on the part of his people?"

Go forth, ye sons of Emmanuel's legions
(None of your number should now be found sleeping),
Each wind bears a sigh from the sin-fettered regions
Where death, the reaper, his harvest is reaping.

Sad, sad are the sounds that are borne on the wave,
Thrice bitter the waiting as time's onward sweeping,—
Waiting, still waiting the light that will save,
While death, the reaper, his harvest is reaping. (1)

Sin's banner dark, o'er the nations unfurled,
Waves on triumphant from many a land.
Man is thy brother, "the field is the world;"
Go scatter thy seed with an unsparing hand.

Lift up the cross where the long, weary night
Holds minds of millions forever enthralled;
Onward, go swiftly and herald the light,
And think not of rest till the message is told.

The isles are awaiting the tidings we bear;
Love for the dying constrains us to go;
Loud as a trumpet love's story declare,
Fearlessly invade the lands of the foe.

Turn to the lands where night, like a pall,
Hangs dark o'er the pris'ners who sigh to be free;
Each beckoning hand, each plaintive call,
Is mutely appealing to you and to me.

Notes of Travel—No. 3

Chicago to St. Helena

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Evangelism, p. 572, 573

Leaving Battle Creek on the morning train, we spent Monday afternoon, October 3, in Chicago, visiting some of our institutions there. In company with Dr. Paulson and Elder Sadler, we visited the Life Boat Mission and the Workingmen's Home. I was much pleased with the report of the work being done in this place. The workers assured me that the Lord was giving them success. I rejoiced with them, but I was so weary that I could not enter into the details of the work as fully as I should have been glad to.

The Lord is pleased with the efforts made to gather people to a place where they can hear his praises sung and his Word explained in the simplicity with which Christ explained it as he went through Palestine from village to village and from city to city. Those engaged in this work may take courage. As they walk and work humbly with God, he will certainly impart his grace to them, that they may impart it to others. I shall ever encourage any work that brings souls to Christ. How large a number of our cities might hear the truth if the people of God would put their talents out to the exchangers.

[From the Life Boat Mission we drove out to see the newly established Swedish Mission on Oak Street. There we were shown a building which our Swedish brethren, under the leadership of Elder S. Mortenson, have recently purchased for the headquarters of their work in Chicago. The building presents a good appearance. In the basement they have a well-equipped vegetarian restaurant. On the first floor there is a pleasant, commodious hall for meetings, comfortably seated for a congregation of about one hundred and fifty, and the two upper stories are rented to lodgers. I was indeed glad to see this evidence of progress in the Swedish work in Chicago.

There is a great work to be done for the people of all nations in the large cities of America, and such rallying points as this may be a great help in the matter of gaining the attention of the people, and in the training of workers. In every large city in America there are people of different nationalities, who must hear the message for this time. I long to see evidence that the lines of work which the Lord has marked out are being disinterestedly taken up. A work similar to that which is being done in Chicago for the Swedish people should be done in many places.]

Time is fast passing. The day of the Lord's reckoning is approaching. Seventh-day Adventists are not to colonize. We are to work as Jesus has given us an example. Of the work of Christ we read: "And leaving Nazareth, he (2) came and dwelt in Capernaum, which is upon the seacoast, in the borders of Zabulon and Nephthalim; that it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, The land of Zabulon, and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the sea, beyond Jordan Galilee (2) of the Gentiles; the people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." "And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness, and all manner of disease among the people." This is the work that will open doors for the truth.

"And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them. And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan."

Thus was the time of the Great Missionary occupied. I think of the work that might be done if those held in Battle Creek and a few other favored places, were carrying forward the work in the villages and towns and cities in which there are no memorials for the truth.

We are to do all in our power to fulfil the commission given by Christ to his disciples just before his ascension. Of the giving of this commission we read: "Then the eleven disciples went away into Galilee, into a mountain where Jesus had appointed them. And when they saw him, they worshiped him: but some doubted. And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

When the eyes of the members of our large churches are anointed with the heavenly eye-salve, they will arise, and go forth to fulfil this commission. When their hearts are imbued with the Holy Spirit, they will worship the Lord their God, and him only will they serve. The Lord is calling upon those who are congregated in congested centers to go forth into the places where the truth has never been proclaimed. They are to teach the things that Christ has commanded, leaving alone the various suppositions born of erratic theories. False teachers will come in, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men. Satan will bring forward fables to militate against the principles of Christ's teaching. God calls upon his faithful messengers to search his Word, and to teach only those things that Christ has commanded.

[To give all nations the message of warning,—this is to be the object of our efforts.] A way will be prepared for the faithful worker to labor at all times and seasons for the conversion of souls. Upon all who have received the word of God there rests the burden of doing this work. [From city to city, and from country to country, they are to carry the publications containing the promise of the Saviour's soon coming. These publications are to be translated into every language; for to all the world the gospel is to be preached.] To every worker Christ promises the divine efficiency that will make his labors a success.

There is too much hovering round our institutions; too much ease-loving. The commission of Christ is to be carried out to the letter. God's people must consecrate to him their means and their capabilities. The faithful soldiers of the cross of Christ are to go forth without the camp, bearing the reproach, and following in the path of self-denial trodden by the Redeemer.

The ministers who are hovering over the churches, preaching to those who know the truth, would better go into places still in darkness. Unless they do this, they themselves and their congregations will become dwarfed. Our religion has become weak and sickly because the members of the church have left their first love. They might be strong men and women in Christ if they would obey the Lord's directions.

I am commanded to lift my voice in warning, and to call upon our people who are gathered together in Battle Creek to go forth and take up the work appointed them by God. The world is perishing in sin. How much longer will you allow yourselves to be held from the great, needy vineyard, when the history of this world is so near its close?

"The time is fulfilled, and the kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye, and believe the gospel." This is the message that we are to proclaim at this time. Men and women are turning from obedience to the law of God, and are perishing in transgression. They must reap the sure consequence of their abuse of the laws of nature. By habits of intemperance, they lay the foundations of disease, and crime after crime is the result. Under the influence of poisoned liquor, men lift the hand of murder, and bring dishonor upon themselves, and want and wretchedness upon their families. Obedience to the law of God would save those who are perishing in defiance of truth and righteousness.

Christianity a Mighty Bulwark of Omnipotence

D. T. BOURDEAU

To a mind harassed with doubt, the strength of Christianity is discernible through candidly and prayerfully considering the plain evidences of the Christian religion, rather than through frequent and long-continued attempts to solve its mysteries.

The evidences of Christianity are seen in the purity and ennobling power of its doctrines, in the fulfilment of its prophecies, in its miracles, and in what it does for those who receive it with childlike faith.

Many stumble and give way to unbelief and infidelity when they see the inconsistencies of some who profess Christianity, and, disgusted at their course, they say, "There is nothing to the religion of Jesus Christ." But this is a rash and illogical conclusion. Better and more consistent would it be to consider what Christianity does for those who exemplify it in their lives. Would it be fair to take Judas as a representative of the Christian religion? It would be but a part of the same logic that judges of Christianity by the inconsistencies of the lives of many who profess it, and yet disgrace it by their lives.

The strongest evidence we have in favor of Christianity is that which is seen in the purity and elevating character of its doctrines, and in its power to transform the thoughts, dispositions, and character of a sinner, so that they will answer to those of Jesus Christ, our perfect model. This is a creation (Eph. 2:10), a work that could not be produced by the philosophical and religious theories of ancient writers, and which no man has ever been able to produce. Yet it is performed through genuine Christianity. And, thank God, it is multiple, being wrought for many even in our day. And those for whom it is wrought have the illuminating influences of that Spirit which guides into the truth. They may be naturally skeptical, as many honest souls and deep thinkers are; but, by persevering prayer and reliance on Christ, skepticism, with them, may be replaced by strong faith, so that their weakest point may become their strongest.

This has been the experience of many honest souls who have suffered enough to die several times under the dense clouds of skepticism and infidelity; and what has already been experienced by many of this cast of mind, may be experienced by others of the same cast of mind; and God may use them to help others who need to be helped by those who have passed through the same fiery ordeal that they are passing through, and have come off conquerors over doubt and infidelity.

The writer once knew a man whom God designed to use as an effectual messenger of the cross of Christ, but who suffered extremely through skepticism. The point on which he was sorely tried was the divine origin of the Scriptures. He did not yield to doubt, but suffered as words can not tell. With him everything seemed to be at stake. If the Bible was not of divine origin, there was no plan of salvation, and his hope was confined to this life. He opened his mind to a devoted Christian lady who was at the head of a mission. She got an able man to talk on infidelity before the tried soul, then asked the man especially concerned how he now viewed the subject. He replied, "The victory is gained; but it is not due to the effort of the pompous, self-conceited young man whom you secured to deliver this discourse, but to the virtue I found in wrestling for victory in secret places."

If any reader of these lines is troubled through a skeptical turn of mind as to the genuineness of Christianity, let him try this remedy. There is nothing that helps on this point like communion with God and intimacy with Christ, the Great Teacher, that is of such a character that one feels as if he were in the very presence of the Saviour. This intimacy with Jesus through his truth and Spirit as the result of earnest, importunate prayer, is a sure antidote against doubt and infidelity. He who experiences it unconsciously forgets his doubts, and acquires implicit faith in the divinity of the Bible and in the genuineness of Christianity.

What a bulwark of Omnipotence, of infinite wisdom and love, is Christianity! It is that subject which, above all others, will, through endless ages, engross the minds of the redeemed and of unfallen angels, and be to the universe an eternal safeguard against doubt and infidelity, and against the repetition of another fall with its sad consequences. May we contemplate genuine Christianity, digging for truth as for hidden treasures, enjoying the acquisitions of new truths brought out of the inexhaustible mine of truth, and pouring out gratitude and adoration to Christ, "the Way, the Truth, and the Life," in this mortal state, that it may be ours to enjoy this delightsome occupation during the endless ages of a blissful eternity.

God's Gifts to Man

R. A. UNDERWOOD

Man was given a beautiful home, a kingdom containing everything pleasant to the sight and good for food. Gen. 2:9. He was crowned with glory and honor, and given dominion over the earth and all therein. Heb. 2:6-8; Ps. 115:16. God put all things in "subjection" to man, and left nothing that was not put under him, except the restrictions God made concerning the use of the Sabbath day and the tree of knowledge of good and evil, which he reserved to himself. With these exceptions Adam was given absolute dominion. Gen. 1:26-28.

Among the gifts the Creator had bestowed upon man was the power of choice. From eternity the purpose of God has been that man should be happy. "I alone know the thoughts that I entertain respecting you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace and not of evil, to give you a happy future and hope." Jer. 29:11, Jewish Version. Every bounty bestowed upon man, and every requirement made of him, has ever been with this purpose in view in all the dealings of God with men.

The endowment of power to choose life or death, righteousness or sin, was essential to man's liberty and happiness. To refuse created intelligences the power of choice, meant bondage, discontent, and unhappiness; therefore heaven prized liberty of sufficient value to bestow this unspeakable gift upon man, although it involved the possibility of the fall. It was when the counsels of eternity had decided that man and created intelligences should be free (Deut. 30:19; Lev. 25:10; John 8:34, 36) that Christ became man's surety, that the purpose of God concerning man should not fail. 2 Tim. 1:9; Heb. 7:22; 1 Peter 1:20.

"Sold Under Sin"

"Ye have sold yourselves for naught." Isa. 52:3; Rom. 7:14. In this transaction Adam lost his dominion, and became a slave to Satan; "for of whom a man is overcome, of the same is he brought in bondage." Thus the dominion of this world, with its treasures of wealth, power, and glory, passed into the hands of man's conqueror.

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Concluded)

From the North Side, we drove across the city to the neighborhood of the great Chicago University, to visit Brother R. Eason and his family, who are conducting the Drexel Avenue restaurant. We were pleased to hear of the interest that some of the students who patronize the restaurant manifest in the principles and belief of those who conduct it. We had a short talk with Brother Eason's sick daughter. My heart was made sad as I saw her unable to take part in the work in which she was so much interested. She made no complaint, but put her whole trust in the Lord, saying, "Thy will be done," yet hoping that her life might be spared, that she might help in the work so greatly needing to be done.

Brother Eason is doing a good work, and I pray that he may see many souls converted as the result of his efforts. Already some of those coming to the restaurant for their meals are interested in the truth for this time.

It is certainly a great blessing to students for them to be able to take their meals at a restaurant where they can get pure, wholesome food, free from grease, condiments, and stimulants. Far more good may be accomplished by this line of work than is generally supposed. Those engaged in it are obeying the command to sow beside all waters.

In our restaurants no opportunity for presenting the truth should be left unimproved. Free reading-matter should be provided, and an occasional lecture on health topics should be given. The instruction that for years has been given me is that most earnest efforts should be put forth by believers for those outside the church. Not only should the truth be proclaimed from the pulpit; the Lord's servants are to go forth into the highways and the byways, to seek for souls. Let our restaurant workers learn to make the best use of our periodicals, tracts, pamphlets, and books.

Late at night we took our places in the tourist sleeper that was to take us home to California over the Burlington, Rio Grande, and Southern Pacific Railways.

At Salt Lake we were met by several of our brethren, who urged us to remain with them for a few days. By a hard struggle the church in Salt Lake City has built a good meeting-house. In a prominent part of the city our brethren are conducting a vegetarian cafe and a health food store; and all felt the need of counsel as to how to conduct the work in Utah.

This invitation we were obliged to refuse. We had cut short our work in Battle Creek because of the sickness of Sister Marian Davis, and had to hasten home as quickly as possible on her account. Our visit with the brethren at Salt Lake was a short one, but it was cheering to hear of the progress of our work in this citadel of Mormonism.

About half an hour's ride west from Ogden, we came to the shore of the great Salt Lake, and instead of skirting round the north end of the lake as we used to do, our train kept straight on in its westward course on a long embankment built across the lake.

From shore to shore the distance across the lake is thirty-one miles. For more than an hour the shores seemed far away and indistinct, the mountains looming up in the distance. By one hundred and three miles of new road that has been built, the line has been shortened nearly forty-four miles, and many steep grades are avoided. Three thousand men were employed on the work for more than a year, and the cost is said to have been four and a half million dollars.

All the way from Chicago the traffic along the lines seemed heavy, and from Ogden west the number of long passenger-trains and freight-trains was surprising. Waiting for trains to pass delayed us, and Friday morning we saw that we could not reach home before the Sabbath. So we stopped off at Reno, Nev., and spent the Sabbath with my granddaughters, Ella and Mabel White, who had recently gone there for the winter. Ella was teaching the church-school, and Mabel was conducting a small kindergarten. On Sabbath I spoke to our people in their little meeting-house, and met some who were at the camp-meeting which I attended in Reno many years ago.

Some of our brethren and sisters in Battle Creek and other favored centers should be working in Nevada.

Death of Sister Marian Davis

Sunday evening, October 9, we reached home, after an absence of nearly six months. We found Sister Davis very sick. For twenty-five years she had been a member of my family, and a most efficient helper in my literary work. She had been with me in Texas, California, Michigan, Europe, and Australia. A year ago last May, during the General Conference at Oakland, she caught a severe cold, which led to pneumonia. This brought her very low; but during the autumn she recovered, and carried on her work during the winter. Last summer her health began to fail rapidly, and the best care of physicians and nurses could not avail to restore her to health and strength.

On our arrival home, we found her weak and emaciated, unable to eat enough to sustain life and build up her strength. When we had been at home for about a week, she rallied a little, and for a few days we hoped for her recovery. But suddenly she failed, and on Tuesday, October 25, she closed her life-work. Her sister, Mrs. W. K. Kellogg, and her niece, Miss Beth Kellogg, were with her during the last six weeks of her sickness. At the funeral Elder H. A. St. John spoke words of comfort, and we laid our faithful helper away to rest in the St. Helena Cemetery.

Of Sister Davis it can truly be said, "She hath done what she could." All the energies of her being were freely given to the work she loved. Her quick appreciation of truth, and her sympathy for the seeker after truth, enabled her to work enthusiastically in preparing for the press the matter which the Lord has given me for his people. I miss her at the fireside, at the table, and at the family altar; but we sorrow not as those who have no hope. The time is not far when the trump of the Archangel shall sound, awaking all who sleep in Jesus to a life of endless joy.

"Not Your Own"

R. A. UNDERWOOD

"Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's." Was it gold, silver, or costly diamonds that was paid for the redemption of man and his lost dominion? — No, no! It cost the life of the only begotten Son of God. The purchase price of man not only required the death of Christ, but Christ must live for man, and conquer Satan for man with all the disabilities and liabilities of a fallen race upon him. In doing this Christ jeopardized his own existence, and that of all the universe upheld by him. Heb. 1:3. Is this too strong a statement? Let us see. Christ steps into man's place, to live, conquer, and die with his divinity clothed in "sinful flesh." "For he hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him." 2 Cor. 5:21. "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh, God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh." Rom. 8:3. "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of

His Lamps

HIS lamps are we,
  To shine where he shall say.
And lamps are not for sunny rooms,
  Nor for the light of day;
But for dark places of the earth,
Where shame, and wrong, and crime
    have birth;
Or for the musky twilight gray,
Where wandering sheep have gone
    astray;
Or where the light of faith grows dim,
And souls are groping after him.
And as sometimes a flame we find,
  Clear shining through the night
So bright we do not see the lamp,
  But only see the light,
So may we shine — his light the flame —
That men may glorify his name!

Labors in Central California

MRS. E. G. WHITE

FRIDAY morning, October 28, we left St. Helena for southern California. We had been at home less than three weeks, and the need of completing unfinished books was urgent. But there were two new sanitariums in southern California in which I was deeply interested, and I hoped to be able to help our brethren who had the burden of the work in arranging for the opening and successful operation of these two sanitariums.

We spent the Sabbath in Fresno. I spoke to the church there on Sabbath afternoon. The large meeting-house was well filled, and the Lord helped me to bear my testimony. Here we met Dr. G. A. Hare, from Washington, who had been called back to his old home by the sickness of his mother. He told us of the advancement of the work at Takoma Park, and of the excellent place secured for treatment rooms in the city of Washington.

We intended to go on to Los Angeles Saturday night, but we were unable to secure accommodations on the train, so we stayed over, and on Sunday went to the Hanford-Lamore district, intending to spend the day visiting old friends. On our arrival there, we found a missionary convention in progress, and the brethren asked us to stay with them for a few days. This we consented to do, and I spoke each afternoon while I was there, twice in Hanford, once in Lamore, and once in Armona.

On Sunday afternoon, when I spoke at Hanford, the Lord gave me much liberty, and I think that a good impression was made. I dwelt especially on the words, "Let not your hearts be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me. In my Father's house are many mansions: if it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you. And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

I sought earnestly to carry the minds of those present from the things of this world to the things of eternity. I sought to impress them with the thought that those who are saved must now prepare for the heavenly mansions by washing their robes, and making them white in the blood of the Lamb. I urged the fathers present to realize the duty resting upon them to train their children for God. I told them that this work is of infinitely more importance than all the advantages that they gain by undue devotion to the things of this world. Those parents who set their affections on the things of earth rob themselves and their children of a place in the mansions that Christ has gone to prepare for those who love him.

It was at an infinite sacrifice that Christ redeemed the human race. But in his parting conversation with his disciples, he made no reference to the suffering that he had endured and must still endure. He did not speak of the humiliation that was before him, but sought to bring to their minds that which would strengthen their faith, leading them to look forward to the joys that await the overcomer.

Adam sinned, and his posterity became sinners. Christ came to this world, and died on the cross of Calvary, that human beings might not "perish, but have everlasting life." O how diligent and faithful we should be, in view of the great sacrifice that has been made for us! How earnestly we should strive to separate from all sin, and through Christ become partakers of the divine nature.

On Tuesday afternoon I spoke at Lamore. I spoke of the great opportunities offered God's people to present the truth for this time to those who know it not. This truth must be proclaimed throughout the world. It is positively necessary that we become more deeply interested in the work that must be done to prepare the way for the coming of the Lord.

"How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace, and bring glad tidings of good things!" "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent?" Those who know the truth must give of their means to send it to those who know it not. They must not be so engrossed in worldly business that they have little time to keep their souls refreshed and strengthened with the bread of heaven, of which they must eat daily if they would prepare for the future immortal life.

I endeavored to set before those present the necessity for strict economy in the outlay of means, that they may have something to bring to the Lord, saying, Of thine own we freely give thee. Thus they are to offer God thanksgiving for the blessings received from him. Thus, too, they are to lay up for themselves treasure beside the throne of God. Hear the words of the Great Teacher: "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through and steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

"The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light. But if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If therefore the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness!

"No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye can not serve God and Mammon.

"Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought"— no anxious, troubled, complaining thought —"for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?

"Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your Heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they? And which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature? And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin: and yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these."

In these words the great Master speaks to every one. There are many who spend upon dress large sums of money,— money that ought to be used in feeding and clothing those who are suffering from hunger and cold. Many of those for whom Christ died have but little even of the cheapest, most common clothing, while others are spending thousands of dollars in the effort to satisfy the never-ending demands of fashion.

Even among those who profess to be children of God there are those who spend more than is necessary upon dress. God's children should be neatly and tastefully clothed, but they should leave off all unnecessary trimmings, and lay aside the means thus saved for the advancement of the cause of God.

Parents, learn the lesson of self-denial, and teach this lesson to your children. Every dime that you can spare is needed now in the work that must be done. The necessities of the suffering must be relieved; the naked must be clothed, and the hungry fed. The truth for this time must be proclaimed to those who know it not. By denying ourselves of that which is not necessary, we may all have a part in this great work.

We are Christ's witnesses, and we are not to allow worldly interests and plans to absorb our time and attention. There are higher interests at stake. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

Christ gave himself willingly and cheerfully to the carrying out of the will of God. He became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. In view of all that he has done, should we feel it a hardship to deny self? Shall we draw back from being partakers of Christ's sufferings? His death ought to stir every fiber of our being, making us willing to consecrate to his work all that we have and are. As we think of what he has done for us, our hearts should be filled with gratitude and love, and we should renounce all selfishness. What duty could the heart refuse to perform, under the constraining influence of the love of God and Christ? "I am crucified with Christ," the apostle declares; "nevertheless I live; yet not I, but Christ liveth in me: and the life which I now live in the flesh I live by the faith of the Son of God, who loved me, and gave himself for me."

Let us relate ourselves to God in self-denying, self-sacrificing obedience. Faith in Christ always leads to this. The Saviour died to redeem us from all iniquity, and to purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. There is to be perfect conformity, in thought, word, and deed, to the will of God. Heaven is for those only who have purified their souls through obedience to the truth. It is a place where unsullied purity alone can dwell. "Every man that hath this hope in him" — the hope of seeing Christ — "purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

In perfect obedience there is perfect happiness. "These things have I spoken unto you," Christ said, "that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." May the Lord bless his people, and strengthen their faith, and lead them onward to the heights to which they have not yet attained. He gave Christ to die for us, that we might be purified from all iniquity. He has promised to pour out his Spirit upon us, that we may be sanctified through the truth. He has given us his Word, that through obedience to its teachings we may be made holy. This is the will of God, even our sanctification.

Praying for the Sick

"Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord: and the prayer of faith shall save the sick, and the Lord shall raise him up; and if he have committed sins, they shall be forgiven him." James 5:14, 15. This is one of the many encouraging promises that are left on record for the people of God.

The position has been taken by some that the instruction regarding the anointing of the sick is simply to teach that means should be used for their recovery, and that faith in those means is all that is intended. Such a position introduces a principle that will undermine every direct promise in the Bible. We should use every lawful means to preserve our health; and when our health is broken, it is right to use rational remedies for our recovery. But here is a special promise based upon a particular condition. If there be "any sick among you, let him call for the elders of the church." This is the first step. Second, "Let them pray." Third, "anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord." Fourth, confession of sin; for this should not be entered upon in a thoughtless manner. There should be an examination of the heart. Fifth, when these conditions are complied with, the prayer of faith saves the sick, and the Lord will raise him up. In these things we co-operate with the Lord.

To the man with a withered hand, Jesus said, "Stretch forth thine hand." He did so, and it was made whole. Christ anointed the blind man's eyes with clay, and told him to go and wash, and he went and washed, and came seeing. The man might have said, It does not make any difference whether I wash, or simply wipe off the clay. But would that have healed him? Was it necessary to do as the Saviour said? We might as well substitute Sunday for the Sabbath as to sit in judgment on the Saviour's words.

It is a promise given so that when other means fail, the sick can be encouraged to come, and be healed. But it is not necessary to wait for every other means to fail. It does not tell us what kind of sickness, nor how to anoint, but to do it in the name of the Lord, and the prayer of faith saves. The anointing does not save, but the prayer of faith. The anointing is the co-operation with the Lord. Luther said on a certain occasion: "If I go to Rome on my knees, there is no virtue in it, because the Lord did not say it. But if God tells me to pick up a straw, there is virtue in it, because God tells me to do it." Not one of God's commands is meaningless.

We know not how any who have had an experience in the third angel's message, and have witnessed the power of God in healing the sick, could take the position that there is nothing specific in this. The Lord would revive in our midst the faith that was practised among those who first accepted the message. On the one hand, God would not have his people become fanatical, and throw away their judgment, and do nothing for the sick except pray; neither would he have them lose sight of the power of God. He can heal as well to-day as in the past. When every earthly resource has failed, as in the experience of the woman in the gospel who had spent all her means on many physicians, and was no better, but rather grew worse, a touch of his garment can heal at the present day the same as when he walked on the earth.

When God has given light upon any point, as he has on healthful living, there is danger that we shall arbitrarily measure every man by our standard, and thus lose sight of the power of God; that is, that we shall recognize the power of God only when manifested in one particular way, or through certain agencies. These agencies are all right, but when we set any agency or form, however correct it may be, and God-given, above the principle guarded by it, we thereby place ourselves in the position of the Pharisees. Mercy is the greatest element in the law of God. The form is to guard this principle. The Pharisees saw this form, and were very strict in it, but they neglected "the weightier matters of the law, judgment, mercy, and faith." The same danger lies in the pathway of God's people to-day.

An illustration of faith is given in the case of Elijah's praying that it might not rain, and again praying for rain. "Elias was a man subject to like passions as we are, and he prayed earnestly that it might not rain: and it rained not on the earth by the space of three years and six months. And he prayed again, and the heavens gave rain, and the earth brought forth her fruit." "Elijah said unto Ahab, Get thee up, eat and drink; for there is a sound of abundance of rain." Then "Elijah went up to the top of Carmel; and he cast himself down upon the earth, and put his face between his knees, and said to his servant, Go up now, look toward the sea. And he went up, and looked, and said, There is nothing. And he said, Go again seven times. And it came to pass at the seventh time, that he said, . . . Go up, say unto Ahab, Prepare thy chariot, and get thee down, that the rain stop thee not. And it came to pass in the meanwhile, that the heaven was black with clouds and wind, and there was a great rain." 1 Kings 18:41-46.

While the writer was in Africa a few years ago, tons of powder were shot into the air to cause it to rain; but there was no artificial means used in Elijah's case, and no resort was made to natural methods to cause it to rain. It was simply the result of praying to God. God heard the prayer, the clouds gathered, and the rain fell. At first there was only a cloud as big as a man's hand, and then the clouds and rain immediately followed.

This illustrates the power in praying for the sick and anointing with oil. There is hope given for the church of God. It is one of those divine legacies imparted by the Holy Spirit to give encouragement and hope for the afflicted among the people of God. Remove from the church these promises that bring instantaneous manifestations of the

At Prayer-Meeting

THERE were only two or three of us
Who came to the place of prayer,
Came in the teeth of a driving storm;
But for that we did not care,
Since after our hymns of praise had risen,
And our earnest prayers were said,
The Master himself was present there,
And gave us the living bread.

We knew his look on our leader's face,
So rapt and glad and free;
We felt his touch when our heads were bowed;
We heard his "Come to me."
Nobody saw him lift the latch,
And none unbarred the door;
But "peace" was his token to every heart,
And how could we ask for more?

Each of us felt the load of sin
From the weary shoulder fall;
Each of us dropped the load of care,
And the grief that was like a pall;
And over our spirits a blessed calm
Swept in from the jasper sea,
And strength was ours for toil and strife,
In the days that were thence to be.

It was only a handful gathered in
To the little place of prayer,
Outside were struggling and pain and sin,
But the Lord himself was there;
He came to redeem the pledge he gave
Wherever his loved ones be,
To stand himself in the midst of them,
Though they count but two or three.

And forth we fared in the bitter rain,
And our hearts had grown so warm,
It seemed like the pelting of summer flowers,
And not the crash of a storm;
"'Twas a time of the dearest privilege
Of the Lord's right hand," we said,
As we thought how Jesus himself had come
To feed us with living bread.

Los Angeles, Cal.

MRS. E. G. WHITE

AFTER four busy days spent at Hanford, Lamore, and Armona, we resumed our journey south, and reached Los Angeles on Thursday, November 3. At the restaurant and treatment rooms we were welcomed by Elder Burden and Dr. Simpson, and there we met Elders Santee, Healey, Simpson, and Adams.

The next day several of us went out to Glendale to see the large building that our people have recently purchased for a sanitarium. We found this building well adapted to sanitarium use, and conveniently located. The new electric street-car line runs past the property. The Glendale post-office is but two blocks away. We found that double treatment rooms were being added to the building, and painting, plumbing, and plastering were going on.

Elder W. W. Simpson had been holding tent-meetings in the heart of the city of Los Angeles during a large part of the summer, and the large tent, then standing on Grand Avenue and Seventh Street, was being used by the church for their Sabbath meetings. Soon after our arrival, letters were sent to our people in the neighboring churches, suggesting that a general meeting be held at Los Angeles on Sabbath and Sunday. In response to this, two or three hundred brethren and sisters came in from surrounding towns, and these, (1) with the believers in the city, filled the large tent on Sabbath morning. The Lord helped me to speak to this congregation of over a thousand souls, all of whom seemed much interested. At the close of my discourse, a collection amounting to seventy-five dollars was taken up for the work among the colored people of the Southern States.

In the churches that I visited in central and southern California, I made earnest appeals in behalf of this needy work, and I hope to hear that our churches throughout the land are becoming aroused to their duty to give the work for the colored people their continual support. (2)

There were about six hundred present at the afternoon meeting, and Brethren Adams, Ballenger, Santee, and W. C. White presented the plans for the home missionary campaign, and three thousand copies of the four special numbers of The Signs of the Times were subscribed for.

On Sunday morning W. C. White presented some encouraging facts about the progress of our work in many lands. Then Elder Burden made a plea in behalf of the Glendale Sanitarium, presenting especially the need of furniture, that the beautiful building may soon be opened for patients. In response to this appeal, eight hundred dollars was subscribed for furniture, and one hundred dollars toward the purchase fund.

On Sunday afternoon I spoke again to a large congregation. At the close of my talk, W. C. White told the people of a letter that my son Edson had written me, saying that he had gathered together one hundred and sixty dollars toward the building of an orphanage for colored children, and pleading for my help in raising one hundred and forty dollars more, saying that with three hundred dollars he hoped to be able to put up one wing of the orphanage, and open it for the waiting, suffering orphans. A collection was taken, and sixty-five dollars was given for this blessed work.

Advancement in Los Angeles

We rejoice to see that the work is moving forward in Los Angeles. The interest aroused by the meetings that Elder Simpson has been holding is remarkable. Night after night the large tent, holding two thousand persons, has been crowded. As a result of these meetings, a large number have taken their stand for the truth.

Elder Simpson presents the truth as it was presented in past years, illustrating his remarks by means of many charts. He explains the prophecies very clearly, showing plainly that the end of all things is at hand. The Lord certainly works with him, and I wish that there were hundreds of such workers in the field, proclaiming with the same earnestness and enthusiasm the last message of warning.

[Special light has been given me regarding the character and magnitude of the work to be done in Los Angeles. Several times messages have been given regarding the duty that rests upon us of proclaiming the third angel's message with power in that city.] And now, as we see that the Lord has blessed the labors of Brother Simpson and his faithful helpers, and that large additions have been made to the Los Angeles church, it is our duty to be wide-awake to the privileges and opportunities of the hour. [Wherever such an interest is awakened as that which is now shown in Los Angeles, men of the best ability should be chosen to help in the effort. They should enter heartily into the work of visiting and holding Bible readings with those newly come to the faith, and with those who are interested, endeavoring to establish them in the faith. The new believers are to be carefully instructed, that they may have an intelligent knowledge of the various lines of work committed to the church of Christ. One or two men should not be left alone with the burden of such a work.

Much depends upon the work done by the members of the church in connection with and following the tent-meetings that shall be held in our cities. During the meeting, many, convicted by the Spirit, may be filled with a desire to begin the Christian life; but unless there is constant watchfulness on the part of the workers who remain to follow up the interest, the good impressions made on the minds of the people will become indistinct. The enemy, full of subtle reasoning, will take advantage of every failure on the part of God's workers to watch for souls as they that must give an account.]

Earnest efforts must be made to lead men and women to place themselves on the Saviour's side. In this work there is need of divine help and of untiring vigilance. No one is to sleep at his post of duty. Every capability must be put to use to win for Christ a victory against the powers of darkness.

The voice of duty is the voice of God. The gospel demands from Christians unreserved consecration of soul and body. The Lord claims the highest service that men and women, aided by divine grace, can offer. In childhood, youth, and age, human beings of every rank, high and low, rich and poor, belong to God. They are to withhold nothing from him. Each one is to stand at his post of duty in the great enterprise of saving souls.

(1) [Those who present the truth are to enter into no controversy. They are to preach the gospel with such faith and earnestness that an interest will be awakened. By the words they speak, the prayers they offer, the influence they exert, they are to sow seeds that will bear fruit to the glory of God. There is to be no wavering. The trumpet is to give a certain sound. The attention of the people is to be called to the third angel's message. Let not God's servants act like men walking in their sleep, but like men preparing for the coming of Christ.]

"Thou Triest the Heart"

R. A. UNDERWOOD

Before his lost possessions are restored to man, he must be tried as a steward, and, as such, prove his faithfulness and loyalty to God. "For the kingdom of heaven is as a man traveling into a far country, who called his own servants, and delivered unto them his goods. And unto one he gave five talents, to another two, and to another one; to every man according to his several ability; and straightway took his journey." Matt. 25:14, 15.

"He that is faithful in that which is least is faithful also in much: and he that is unjust in the least is unjust also in much. . . . And if ye have not been faithful in that which is another man's, who shall give you that which is your own?" Luke 16:10-12.

We now inquire, By what are we to be constantly led to a recognition of the fact that all we are and have is the Lord's, and not our own? The Lord has reserved as holy unto himself one tenth of all the products of the earth. Christ claims a tithe of all man's income, whether it is from the toil of brain or muscle, or from other sources. It is reserved by God as a test of our acknowledgment of Christ's ownership of the world and all its resources. Christ places in our hands a means of income from various sources. This he denotes as "talents." As stewards of his goods he asks every man, woman, and child to return sacredly one tenth of all to God. Those who refuse to do this he charges with the high-handed sin of robbery.

"All the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord." Lev. 27:30-32. Some suppose that this plan of tithing belonged only to the Levitical priesthood, and that none but those living in that age were under obligation to pay tithe.

But the tithing system is co-existent with the gospel, and rests upon moral principles, the violation of which resulted in the fall of man. It is not confined to any one dispensation, but is of —

Universal Obligation

Look at a few facts which the Lord presents concerning the tithing question: Long before the Mosaic age, Abraham, the father of the faithful, paid to the priest of God a tithe of all his income. Gen. 14:18-20; Heb. 7:2. When Jacob became a converted man, he at once recognized Christ's ownership, and vowed to pay a tithe of all unto God. Gen. 28:20-22. In the Mosaic age the tithing of all of Israel's income was sacredly observed. Lev. 27:30; Num. 18:21, 26.

God has given a commandment that those who preach the gospel shall be supported from the tithe. Heb. 7:5, 8; 1 Cor. 9:13, 14. Christ taught that the moral obligation rests upon all men to pay to God a tithe of all their income. Matt. 23:23.

The awful curse of God is pronounced against those who do not pay a faithful tithe. Mal. 3:9; Deut. 28:15-26. The blessing of God rests upon those who bring into the Lord's treasury the tithe. 2 Chron. 31:4-10; Deut. 28:1-13.

God has not changed his plan concerning the tithe; it is still a test of man's recognition of Christ's ownership of this world. Mal. 3:6; Heb. 13:7, 8.

The use of the tithe for other purposes than those prescribed by God is classed as a terrible sin. Mal. 3:7-10.

When the tithe is withheld from its appointed use, not only is God robbed, but millions of perishing souls are robbed of the light of the gospel. Mal. 3:10; Matt. 24:44-47.

The sins of robbery and Sabbath-breaking have long stood in the way of the outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the church. Mal. 3:7-10; Isa. 58:6-13.

Why should any one longer brave the curse of God, and stand as an Achan in the camp of Israel? O, arise, arise, and wash away thy guilt by repentance and confession of sin! Why longer grieve the Lord? He will graciously forgive and heal all thy backsliding. Mal. 3:7; Isa. 1:16-19; Hosea 14:1-7.

A Clarion Call

W. H. THURSTON

During the week of prayer many, if not all, either read or heard others read the earnest calls for help from regions beyond. These calls are for workers and for means to support the work and carry it on to completion.

No doubt all have made their annual offerings ere this, and feel a source of satisfaction, but the responsibility and the blessing do not end here. Like the seed, which absorbs the dew and the rain, and requires more and more in its process of development, so this work requires more men and means year by year as it develops and extends into new territory.

Men and women have responded to the commission, severing the ties that bound them to friends, relatives, and native land, and have gone to all parts of the world to carry the gospel of salvation to perishing souls. They did not have to go, but, actuated with the spirit of the Master, and moved with compassion on the multitude of unsaved, they have gone forth to the harvest. On reaching the vast fields, north, south, east, and west, they find open doors and great opportunities. They soon find themselves taxed beyond their strength, ministering to soul and body, and they exclaim, in the language of Scripture, "The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few." "Come over . . . and help us!" is the Macedonian call. "Pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." Other men and women are moved by the same spirit that actuated those already in the mission fields, and are saying, "Here am I; send me."

"Herein is love,"— a love for souls and a desire to go to earth's remotest bounds with the gospel of the kingdom, the last message of mercy to the world. As in the days of the apostles, "The sword of the Spirit, newly edged with power, and bathed in the lightnings of heaven, cut its way through unbelief;" so be it in these days.

Hundreds of people are accepting the truth in the mission fields, and thousands are waiting for the opportunity — waiting for us. Why should we not as a people arise to our privilege and send forth these consecrated workers, called of God to the ministry, and provide means as well, for the advancement of the work in all lands? Money is what is needed just now, and all the time, to keep the work moving, and why shall it not be forthcoming? Many calls are being made for money, and this will continue until the work is finished, and all that we have is transferred to the city that hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God.

This question of raising means for the mission fields has been very carefully considered by the Mission Board, and it is agreed that if the ten-cent-a-week envelope plan is adopted by all our people, in addition to the annual and some special offerings from time to time, there will be sufficient funds for carrying on and enlarging the work in all lands. A systematic effort, an unceasing effort on the part of all week by week, making it a part of our regular business to see that the mission fields are supplied with men and means, is the only solution of the great problem. The call is urgent, and demands our attention. We can not pass this matter by indifferently, and remain loyal to the cause we love.

Faithful workers are ready to move on at the Master's bidding, and rich fields of toil are awaiting them. Shall we say, Go on, and annex new territory for God, pledging ourselves to provide the means each month necessary for the work? How can we do otherwise and prove ourselves true to our mission and our message? — It is impossible. We have entered the field, and we shall maintain our possession and complete

Triumph Through Christ

PREPARE me, Lord, my foes to meet,
I tarry at thy mercy-seat;
Thy presence there I wait.
I wait, and seek with earnest prayer
A rescue from temptation's snare,
Before it is too late.

When in temptation's trying hour,
Wilt thou not give thy servant power
To triumph in thy name?
Yea, Lord, I verily believe
My soul shall ever help receive,
Since thou endurest the same.

Then let me always trust in thee;
When tempted, O, deliver me!
When want and hunger press,
And pomp's ambition haunts me sore,
O may I trust in thee the more,
And love vain world the less!

The gift of help, dear Lord, I need;
I therefore come, and anxious plead:
Withhold it not from me.
I know 'tis mine, since thou hast died
In triumph on the cross, and cried,
"'Tis finished;" all for thee.

God's Purpose for Us

INDEXED

"AFTER this I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshiped God, saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and might, be unto our God forever and ever. Amen. And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said unto me, These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple; and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters: and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

(1) [Those whom the Lamb shall lead by the fountains of living waters, and from whose eyes he shall wipe away all tears, will be those now receiving the knowledge and understanding revealed in the Bible, the Word of God.] To us has been given the privilege of receiving the wisdom that cometh from God, of seeing the beauty and the glories of that Word which lies at the foundation of all true knowledge. The Bible teaches us what a Christian ought to be, and what he ought to do.

[We are to copy no human being. There is no human being wise enough to be our criterion. We are to look to the man Christ Jesus, who is complete in the perfection of righteousness and holiness. He is the author and finisher (1) of our faith. He is the pattern Man. His experience is the measure of the experience that we are to gain. His character is our model. Let us, then, take our minds off the perplexities and the difficulties of this life, and fix them on him, that by beholding we may be changed into his likeness. We may behold Christ to good purpose. We may safely look to him; for he is all-wise. As we look to him and think of him, he will be formed within, the hope of glory.

Let us strive with all the power that God has given us to be among the hundred and forty-four thousand.] And let us do all that we can to help others to gain heaven. We are to have an intense interest in Christ Jesus; for he is our Saviour. He came to this world to be tempted in all points as we are, to prove to the universe that in this world of sin human beings can live lives that God will approve.

Think of how much it cost Christ to leave the heavenly courts, and take his position at the head of humanity. Why did he do this? — Because he was the only one who could redeem the fallen race. There was not a human being in the world who was without sin. The Son of God stepped down from his heavenly throne, laid off his royal robe and kingly crown, and clothed his divinity with humanity. He came to die for us, to lie in the tomb as human beings must, and to be raised for our justification. He came to become acquainted with all the temptations wherewith man is beset. He rose from the grave, and proclaimed over the rent sepulcher of Joseph, "I am the resurrection and the life." One equal with God passed through death in our behalf. He tasted death for every man, that through him every man might (a) be a partaker of eternal life.

[Christ ascended to heaven, bearing a sanctified, holy humanity. He took this humanity with him into the heavenly courts, and through the eternal ages he will bear it, as the One who has redeemed every human being in the city of God] (3) the One who has pleaded before the Father, "I have graven them upon the palms of my hands." The palms of his hands bear the marks of the wounds that he received. If we are wounded and bruised, if we meet with difficulties that are hard to manage, let us remember how much Christ suffered for us. Let us sit together with our brethren in heavenly places in Christ. Let us bring heaven's blessing into our hearts.]

Our Saviour bore all that we are called upon to bear, so that no human being could say, "He does not know my suffering and my trials." In all our afflictions he was afflicted, and because of this, the Father has committed to him all judgment.

Satan declared that human beings could not live without sin. Christ passed over the ground where Adam stumbled and fell, and by a sinless life placed the human race on vantage-ground, that every one might stand before the Father accepted in the Beloved.

The Saviour ascended to heaven to plead before the throne of God in our behalf. Just before his ascension he gave to his disciples the commission, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." To us as well as to the disciples this commission is given. We are to speak the things that Christ has commanded us. Let us not talk of the mistakes and defects of others. Let us speak the words that Christ has given us to speak. Let us seek for the blessings that Christ has placed within our reach, that we may be made capable of receiving more and still more of his grace, and that we may be filled with a living, active, growing faith,— a faith that believes the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

The Ten-Cent-a-Week Plan

WM. COVERT

THIS question has been carefully considered by a number of persons appointed by the General Conference to give advice about regular offerings for the foreign work, and the decision has been rendered that ten cents a week could be paid on the average by our people. This was to be apart from the tithe and the Sabbath-school offerings. It was thought that while there are some who can not easily pay ten cents a week, there are many who can and do pay much more than that amount.

It is believed that the member in average circumstances, with average ability to acquire money, can pay ten cents a week, if he keeps the subject in mind, and makes an effort throughout the entire year to do it. The whole sum for twelve months would amount to only $5.20, and many persons find themselves able to do many times this amount by making the proper effort. Indeed, the amount paid will, in the majority of cases, depend very much upon the will of the individual and the attention given to the question.

The present membership of our denomination is about eighty thousand. If the plan of giving ten cents a week for

Spring

I FEAR no more the coming years
What they may bring;
Days will be sunless, night bereft of stars:
Mayhap the brightest blossoms of the spring
Shall first be bound with winter's icy bars.
But still beyond the cloud is always light:
The stars are in the sky all night,
And deepest snows are they which hide the bright
Green heart of spring.

Not all of life is dreamed away
In summer skies.
Time holds a loss, a loneliness for me:
But hope is strong, and faith dare not be weak,
And love abides, the greatest of the three.
Enough if sweet to-morrow will repay
The disappointment of to-day:
Light follows dark: sun, rain, seas ebb away
Again to rise.

And if the rugged road of life
Doth wind around
The mountainside where heavy clouds hang low,
And, as I climb, the pilgrim staff be changed
Into the cross, still onward would I go!
The peaks of only highest mountains rise
Above the clouds of bluest skies,
And round the heaviest cross is hung the prize,
The brightest crown.

Notes of Travel—No. 6

San Diego County, California

MRS. E. G. WHITE

FROM Los Angeles we went to San Diego, and spent three weeks, from November 7 to 28, at the Paradise Valley Sanitarium.

There are nearly three hundred Sabbath-keepers in San Diego County, settled mostly in San Diego, National City, Escondido, and San Pasqual. A general meeting was appointed to be held in the San Diego church, November 12 and 13. The brethren responded cheerfully, and the commodious meeting-house was well filled. Elders Santee, Healey, and Burden came down from Los Angeles County to take part with us and Elder F. I. Richardson in the general meeting, and to counsel about the work of our new sanitarium.

It had been announced that I would speak on Sabbath morning, but I was unable to fill my appointment. While traveling I had caught a severe cold, and could only whisper. Sunday afternoon was pleasant, and I attempted to speak. With great difficulty I spoke for about twenty minutes. Then Elder Healey gave a stirring discourse to the large audience that had assembled.

On Monday the attention of our brethren was given to the affairs of the Paradise Valley Sanitarium. They looked over the land and the buildings, and saw the improvements that were being made. All were surprised to find that so much had been done during the summer in preparing the building for occupancy, and with thankful hearts they entered into counsel concerning future plans and work.

A Review of Our Experiences

During the spring of 1902 the attention of several of our brethren was called to the Paradise Valley Sanitarium building, which was erected for a sanitarium by Mrs. Mary L. Potts about twenty years ago. After being used for a few months, it lay idle for many years, and was then offered for sale at twenty thousand dollars, with encouragement that it might be purchased for fifteen thousand dollars cash.

In September, 1902, after the Los Angeles camp-meeting, we spent a week in San Diego, and visited several places that were offered us for sanitarium work. In the building offered us by Mrs. Potts, it seemed to me we found about all that we could ask. Here was a well-constructed, three-story building of fifty rooms, with broad verandas, standing upon a pleasant rise of ground, and overlooking a beautiful valley. Many of the rooms are large and airy, and there is a stationary marble wash-bowl in most of the bedrooms.

Besides the main building, there is a good stable, and also a six-room cottage, which can be fitted up for helpers. The property is conveniently located, being less than seven miles from San Diego, and about a mile from the National City post-office.

There are twenty acres of land. About one half of this had once been planted to fruit-trees, but during the long drought that this country has suffered, all the trees died except the ornamental trees and shrubbery around the buildings, and about seventy olive-trees on the terraces.

When we learned that the owners of this property had become so discouraged on account of the many years of drought that they were offering it for twelve thousand dollars, I said to our brethren, "I believe that the Lord has kept this place for us, and that he will open the way for us to secure it. I never saw a building offered for sale that was better adapted for sanitarium work. If this place were fixed up, it would look just like places that have been shown me by the Lord."

A year before, light had been given me that our people in southern California must watch for opportunities to purchase such properties, and it seemed plain to me and to those who were with me that the opportunity of securing this place was a fulfilment of the encouragement given us, and published in the "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VII, in the following words: —

"As soon as possible sanitariums are to be established in different places in southern California. Let a beginning be made in several places. If possible, let land be purchased on which buildings are already erected. Then, as the prosperity of the work demands, let appropriate enlargement be made. . . . In southern California there are many properties for sale on which buildings suitable for sanitarium work are already erected. Some of these properties should be purchased, and medical missionary work be carried forward on sensible, rational lines. Several small sanitariums are to be established in southern California, for the benefit of the multitudes drawn there in the hope of finding health. Instruction has been given me that now is our opportunity to reach the invalids flocking to the health resorts of southern California."

In December we learned that this place could be purchased for eleven thousand dollars, and I encouraged Dr. Whitelock to take steps to secure it. But our leading brethren in the Southern California Conference were not ready to co-operate in the matter, and nothing was done.

In the summer of 1903 the property was offered to us for eight thousand dollars, and again we found that our brethren were not in a position to act.

The drought continued, and the owners of this property were very much discouraged. In January, 1904, Dr. Whitelock wrote me that the mortgages could be bought for six thousand dollars, and perhaps less. Again I advised our brethren connected with the medical work in southern California to secure the place. But I learned that they were not prepared to act. Then I laid the matter before Sister Gotzian, and she consented to join me in securing the place. Then we telegraphed an offer of four thousand dollars for the mortgages. Two days later a telegram was returned accepting the offer. Meanwhile a letter from other parties in San Diego was on its way to New York, offering six thousand dollars for the mortgages.

Shortly after we had secured the place, Elder and Mrs. J. F. Ballenger joined us in raising the amount to be paid for the property.

Having secured the place, we needed a manager, and we found one ready for the work. Brother E. R. Palmer and his wife, who had spent the winter in Arizona, were in San Diego. Brother Palmer's bronchial trouble, which had brought him West, was being overcome, and they were willing to take charge of the work of fitting up the sanitarium building for use.

At first Brother Palmer had to work moderately and with great caution. His health would not admit of violent exertion, and our funds would not admit of hiring much help. He began the work cautiously, and the way opened for advance.

When we visited the place in November last, we found that much had been done during the summer. The building had been thoroughly repaired, inside and out, and painted outside. It had been fitted up with electric lights, and about one third of the rooms were furnished. By taking advantage of several sales of furniture by wealthy families leaving the country, first-class furniture had been secured at very low prices.

Our great anxiety about the place was the matter of an ample supply of water. Years ago, when the valley was prosperous, it depended upon the water of the mountain streams stored up by great dams, but as the result of the many years of drought, there was no water in the reservoirs to supply our needs. Some of our neighbors in the valley had good wells, but our place was a little to one side. The great question was, Can we get plenty of water by digging?

The well-diggers had gone down eighty feet, and found a little water, but they wanted much more. O how much depended upon our finding plenty of good, pure water! With an abundance of water our work could go forward, but without it, what should we do? From the beginning, I had felt the assurance that the Lord would open the way for our work to advance; but who could tell when and how? Our people were deeply desirous of seeing the sanitarium make a success, and as we met them, the question was, "Have you found water?"

While this important question was pending, Prof. E. S. Ballenger and my son went to San Pasqual and Escondido to present to our people the encouragements that had attended the enterprise thus far, and the plan of organization that had been prepared, and to ask for their help.

All were glad to share the burden of making this sanitarium, as far as possible, a San Diego County enterprise, and they gave freely according to their ability. About fifteen hundred dollars was subscribed, and half of this was brought back for immediate use.

The very day of the return of Professor Ballenger and my son, with the evidence of the hearty, practical support of the people, the workers in the well struck a fine stream of good, pure water. The next morning Brother Palmer came up early to tell me that there was fourteen feet of water in the well. The water is soft and pure, and we are greatly rejoiced to know that there is an abundant supply. This well is a treasure more valuable than gold or silver or precious stones.

The workers at the sanitarium are all cheerful and hard working. Every morning and evening they have a season of worship. For a day or two after reaching there, I met with them, and enjoyed the privilege very much. The blessing of the Lord rested upon us, and I was very sorry when sickness prevented me from attending regularly.

When shall we open the place for patients? was a question often discussed. Several were impatiently waiting to enter, but how could we admit them while the house was being repainted inside, and while the large kitchen range was being set up?

One morning a lady came unannounced, and insisted upon staying. Others came before we were ready, and patients continued to come till there were twenty, and our workers were kept so busy that there has been no time as yet for a formal opening.

One evening, just before we left, a four-horse team drawing a large, heavy wagon, drove in, bringing gifts to the sanitarium from San Pasqual. In the load there were potatoes, squash, canned fruit, and two beautiful Jersey cows.

During the last three nights of my stay at this institution, much instruction was given me regarding the sanitariums which for years have been greatly needed, and which should long ago have been equipped and set in working order. Medical missionary work is to be to the third angel's message as the right hand to the body. Our sanitariums are one great means of doing medical missionary work. They are to reach the people in their need.

The workers connected with our sanitariums are to be sympathetic, kind, and straightforward in their dealings with one another and with the patients. Their words and deeds are to be noble and upright. They are ever to receive from Christ light and grace and love to impart to those in darkness. By their efforts the sick, the sinful, the prodigals, who have left the Father's house, are to be encouraged to return. God's word to these workers is, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." "Fear not, neither be discouraged; for I am thy God."

Christ's Ambassadors

R. A. UNDERWOOD

"Now then we are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us: we pray you in Christ's stead, be ye reconciled to God." 2 Cor. 5:20.

Christ's commission is: "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." Matt. 28: 18-20.

"Go your ways: behold, I send you forth as lambs among wolves." "The laborer is worthy of his hire." Luke 10:3, 7.

"Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all. Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself, and them that hear thee." 1 Tim. 4:15, 16.

These scriptures show that the work of the gospel minister demands his whole time and energies to be given to preaching, teaching, and laboring for souls.

An ambassador is a minister of first rank employed by a government to represent it and manage its interests at the court, or seat, of some foreign power. Such minister, or ambassador, looks to the appointing power that sent him, for his support. We should not therefore expect Christ to set apart men to preach the gospel, and leave them and their families to the mercy and charities of a cold, indifferent world. No; Christ could not do this; but in harmony with every principle of right dealing, he must provide for the support of the laborers whom he sends forth into the great harvest-field.

Is it possible that this perfect Being has never provided a system by which his own servants should have their reasonable wants supplied, but be left to the tender mercies of others upon whom God has laid no burden of duty? This class of servants devote their lives to God's cause, renounce the honors of wealth and the world, leave home and every association dear to mankind — and all for the Lord's sake.

Touching upon this principle, the apostle Paul, in 1 Cor. 9:7-10, says: "Who goeth a warfare any time at his own charges? who planteth a vineyard, and eateth not of the fruit thereof? or who feedeth a flock, and eateth not of the milk of the flock? Say I these things as a man? or saith not the law the same also? For it is written in the law of Moses, Thou shalt not muzzle the mouth of the ox that treadeth out the corn. Doth God take care for oxen? Or saith he it altogether for our sakes? For our sakes, no doubt, this is written." These questions answer themselves. Who ever heard of a nation's sending an army to fight an enemy, and not providing for its wants? Is Christ less righteous than a wicked, cruel nation? — O, no! He provides that the laboring ox shall be generously cared for. Then will he not see that his faithful ministers are supported?

Some have thought that they paid the ministers when they paid their tithe. In this they are greatly mistaken; for Christ commissions and sends forth his laborers. He also pays them through his own agents from the tithes and offerings devoted to that purpose by himself. Notice the language: "And, behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation." "Thus speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithes which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up an heave-offering of it for the Lord, even a tenth part of the tithe." Num. 18: 21, 26. "And I perceived that the portions of the Levites had not been given them: for the Levites and the singers, that did the work, were fled every one

Jesus Comes!

THEODOR HANSON

Lo, the morning bright is dawning,
  And the shadows pass away;
All the signs are now fulfilled,
  And at hand is God's great day.

Waiting have the saints looked forward
  To the day of victory,
When the sorrows and temptations
  Shall forever ended be.

O what joy when death and darkness
  And the cry of battle cease,
And instead there comes the kingdom
  Of the glorious Prince of Peace!

Though the night was long and dreary,
  Lo, the sun is on the hill!
Let us lift our heads, rejoicing,
  And await a moment still!

Jesus comes as he has promised,
  And our hope was not in vain.
Jesus comes! O, are you ready
  When the Saviour comes again?

Jesus comes! Awake and hasten!
  Lo, the dayspring from on high!
Jesus comes! Sing Hallelujah!
  Our redemption now is nigh.

An Open Letter (1)

SANITARIUM, CAL., March 6, 1905.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS: There is a great work to be done in many cities. Just now is the time for a deep, earnest effort to be made in Washington, the capital of our nation.

I feel somewhat disappointed that the gifts that are being made toward the work in Washington do not steadily increase. The remarkable developments in the work in Washington, showing the importance of our moving there, should lead the people of God to make their offerings toward the One Hundred Thousand Dollar Fund larger and larger. The present showing should be decidedly different. My brethren and sisters, do not allow the large gifts for the work in Washington to be so few. We thank the givers of the small sums. And we know that there are those who can make larger gifts. The occasion demands that the men of means among us should bestir themselves. Our reputation is at stake. Now is the time for all to act a part. Unbelievers are looking on, and forming their opinions by the representation made.

Let our ministers arouse, and fully realize the importance of the situation. Let the work in Washington become a matter of the first interest now. Let every believer in every place feel called upon to help. Let all feel that the work in Washington belongs to them, and let them do their utmost toward its advancement. (1)

Counsels on Health, p. 212-214

Come to the front, my brethren and sisters, with your gifts and offerings. Awake to the responsibilities of the hour. We plead with the Lord to work upon minds, and to lead those who have means to realize that now is their time to help liberally in a most important crisis.

The Takoma Park Sanitarium

We have purchased land in Takoma Park, not for the purpose of building up commercial enterprises, but for the purpose of establishing institutions in which workers may be prepared to go out into the great harvest-field. The school has made a humble beginning. A sanitarium must be established there. The ground is ready for the building. Who will now bring their hundreds and their thousands for the help of this enterprise? And let not those who can afford to give but little withhold the smaller sums.

Our sanitariums are one of the most successful means of reaching all classes of people. Christ is no longer in this world in person, to go through our cities and towns and villages healing the sick. He has commissioned us to carry forward the medical missionary work that he began; and in this work we are to do our very best. Institutions for the care of the sick are to be established, where men and women may be placed under the care of God-fearing medical missionaries, and be treated without drugs. To these institutions will come those who have brought disease on themselves by improper habits of eating and drinking. These are to be taught the principles of healthful living. They are to be taught the value of self-denial and self-restraint. They are to be provided with a simple, wholesome, palatable diet, and are to be cared for by wise physicians and nurses.

Our sanitariums are the right hand of the gospel, opening doors whereby suffering humanity may be reached with the glad tidings of healing through Christ. In these institutions the sick may be taught to commit their cases to the Great Physician, who will co-operate with their earnest efforts to regain health, bringing to them healing of soul as well as healing of body.

There is most precious missionary work to be done in our sanitariums. In them Christ and the angels work to relieve suffering caused by bodily disease. And the work is by no means to stop there. The prayers offered for the sick, and the opening of the Scriptures to them give them a knowledge of the great Medical Missionary. Their attention is called to him as the One who can heal all disease. They learn about the great gift of eternal life, which the Lord Jesus is longing to bestow on those who receive him. They learn how to prepare for the mansions that Christ has gone to prepare for those that love him. If I go away, he said, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." In the Word of God there are gracious promises, from which those who are suffering, whether in body or in mind, may receive comfort and hope and encouragement.

The plan to provide institutions for the proper care of the sick originated with the Lord. He has instructed his people that these institutions should be established. With them are to be connected intelligent, God-fearing physicians, who know how to treat the sick from the standpoint of the skilful Christian physician. These physicians are to be earnest and active, serving the Lord in their activity. They are to remember that they are working in the place and under the oversight of the Great Physician. They stand as guardians of the beings that Christ has purchased with his own blood, and it is therefore essential that they be governed by high, noble principles, carrying out the will of the divine Medical Missionary, who is ever watching over the sick and suffering. (1)

He who is set as a guardian of the health of the sick should understand by experience the soothing power of the grace of Christ, so that to those who come to him for treatment he can impart in words the uplifting, health-giving power of God's own truth. A physician is not fit for medical missionary work until he has gained a knowledge of him who came to save perishing, sin-sick souls. If Christ is his teacher, if he has an experimental knowledge of the truth, he can hold up the Saviour before the sick and dying.

The sick note carefully the looks and words and acts of their physician, and as the Christian physician kneels beside the bedside of the sufferer, asking the Great Physician to take the case into his own hands, an impression is made upon the mind of the sick one that may result in the saving of his soul.

A sanitarium building is to be erected at Takoma Park, that this work may be carried forward. Will not those who have means feel it a privilege to give something toward this work, that the needed fund may be raised soon? The Lord will certainly bless those who will cheerfully return to him his own. Doors that were once fast closed are now opening wide for the entrance of our workers. I call upon our people, while the way is open, to do earnest work, to rally round the standard, to answer the call that has been made for the completion of the One Hundred Thousand Dollar Fund. Come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty. This work is the Lord's, and he calls upon those who have means to place it in the treasury for the advancement of his work. Send in your offerings for the buildings to be erected at Takoma Park. We are praying that the money buried in lands and houses may now be called in, because it is the Lord's money, and he needs it. It is to our honor to send in large and small sums, so that, when the next General Conference shall assemble, we can say that the fund needed has been raised.

We call upon those who have invested money in worldly interests to withdraw it, and place it in the Lord's cause, where it is now greatly needed. Show your gratitude to God by the liberality of your offerings. Thus you may give evidence that you appreciate the mercies of the gospel.

To the workers in Washington, I would say: We have faith, my brethren and sisters, that if you will walk humbly with God, you will see of his salvation. It is the desire of my heart that you shall know the power of the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have an all-sufficient Helper. He understands our weakness and our needs. Let there be fasting and prayer. Let self be humbled. Let the heart be cleansed from all impurity. Confess your sins, and plead with God day and night for the victory, and you will walk in the light as Christ is in the light. Ellen G. White.

Apostasy and Reformation

R. A. UNDERWOOD

Since the fall of man and the promulgation of the gospel, God has reserved holy unto himself not only the seventh day, but the tithe of all man's income. Man has no more right to use the tithe or the seventh day, only as directed by God, than had Adam to use the forbidden tree in Eden. All can see that in both the Sabbath and the tithe, man is brought to the same test on which Adam failed. Hence it has been on the same line of deception and transgression that Satan has led the world away from God into apostasy in all ages.

The fall of Lucifer himself came because he coveted the position and power bestowed upon Jesus Christ. He dared to question the right of the eternal God to bestow upon whomsoever he would his own free gifts. Isa. 14:12-14. All can see that with the power to bestow there is power and right to withhold. It was this right of the Lord to do with his own what he chose, that Lucifer disputed in heaven. Therefore it is but natural that all departures from God should involve the same principles. Thus the gospel may be said to be the power of God to proclaim the sovereign right of God's ownership.

In all the reformations brought to view in the Bible, the proper observance of the Sabbath, and the acknowledgment of the tithe as being holy unto God are the leading questions under consideration. This was so in the work of God by Moses. See Ex. 9:29; Lev. 27:30; Ex. 16:28-30; 20:8-11. Nehemiah's reformation was upon these two great questions. See Neh. 8:8; 9:13, 14.

It will be noticed that when Nehemiah read the law distinctly and gave the sense, the people "confessed their sins" (Chap. 9:2), and began the proper observance of the Sabbath and the paying of tithes. See Neh. 13:10-21.

Hezekiah was led to take a similar course. The record says: "And as soon as the commandment came abroad, the children of Israel brought in abundance the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly. . . . Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps. And Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zodak answered him, and said, Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the Lord, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty: for the Lord hath blessed his people; and that which is left is this great store. Then Hezekiah commanded to prepare chambers in the house of the Lord; and they prepared them, and brought in the offerings and the tithes and the dedicated things faithfully." 2 Chron. 31:5, 9-12.

In apostolic times the same truths were received by those that accepted the gospel. See Acts 4:32, 33; Heb. 7:8. In the last days the Sabbath and the tithe stand out in the work of reformation, under the closing work of the gospel. See Rev. 12:17; Isa. 56:1; 58:1-13; Mal. 3:1-18. In the past, as now, the tithing system tested men's souls. In "Gospel Workers," page 269, I read: "This tithing system, I saw, would develop character, and manifest the true state of the heart."

What Is the Tithe?

The tithe is one tenth of all man's income. What is the meaning of the word "income"? Webster defines it as follows: "That gain which proceeds from labor, business, or property of any kind; the produce of a farm; the rent of houses; the proceeds of professional business; the profits of commerce or of occupation; the interest of money or stock in funds, etc.; revenue; receipts; especially the annual receipts of a private person or a corporation from property; as, a large income, a limited income."

This is a very different word from "increase," which means to "become greater in bulk, quantity, number, degree, value, intensity, authority, reputation, etc.; to grow; to augment; to advance."

The definition of income is very clear. Man's income is what comes in as gain from all sources,— rents, labor, business, or property, interest, proceeds of stock, salary, etc. One tenth of all that income God claims as his own, with which he proposes to sustain his ministers who give their lives to his cause, and renounce the world.

Some think it a difficult matter to determine just what is the tenth of their income. Suppose you should rent your farm for one half of all its produce, the renter to have the other half for his labor in working the farm; would you consider it a hard task to determine what your share of the proceeds of that farm were? The renter who would not think carefully enough to divide the proceeds of your farm with you, according to the contract, in every item of product from that farm, you would soon judge unworthy to act as a steward of your goods, and he would be asked to vacate. It is true that we can not enter into a single transaction or enterprise that brings into our hands gain, but what God is to be considered in the dividends. This is one of the blessed fruits of tithing.

But many think they are paying tithes when they come far short of doing so. They freely consume from the farm, milk, butter, eggs, vegetables, fruit, and the bread they eat, and simply pay a tithe on what they sell. This is not tithing. Jacob said, "Of all that thou shalt give me I will surely give the tenth unto thee." Our living is to come out of the nine tenths after the tithe has been taken out for God. Not only does God ask for a tithe of the grain, cattle, horses, sheep, fruit, vegetables, but of honey, oil, etc., a tithe of all. See Matt. 23:23; Lev. 27:30-33; 2 Chron. 31:5, 6. But some will say it is hard to know the cash value of the garden, the fruit we consume, milk, butter, etc., that we daily eat from the farm. I have known brethren to estimate the value of their garden from ten to sixty dollars, according to its size. If the garden is worth twenty dollars in the support of the family, we can easily find what the tithe would be. I have known the sisters to test the amount of butter and milk used in the family, by weight, for a few weeks, and then pay a tithe on the same amount for each week during the year. It is such as "thought" upon the name of God and acknowledged him in all their ways, that will be gathered with the jewels to adorn the everlasting kingdom of God. Mal. 3:16, 17.

The Message Closed

T. E. BOWEN

A day is coming when the third angel's message will be finished. That angel sent out of heaven to warn earth's inhabitants of the coming destruction from the Almighty, foretold by the prophets in the Old and New Testaments, will have completed his work, and winged his way back to heaven to announce his mission accomplished. That will be the most important day for this earth — with perhaps the exception of those of the death and resurrection of the Son of God — ever experienced. The doom of every living soul will that day be sealed either for life or for death.

The mad strife among nations will no longer be held in check. The servants of God will have no further words of warning and comfort from heaven to impart. There will be no further calls for men or means for the cause of God. All the presses turning out the printed pages of truth will come to a standstill. God's work is done. This day is surely coming.

"I was pointed down to the time when the third angel's message was closing. The power of God had rested upon his people; they had accomplished their work, and were prepared for the trying hour before them. They had received the latter rain, or refreshing from the presence of the Lord, and the living testimony had been revived. The last

My Prayer

I WOULD not ask that all my way may be
With earthly glory bright,
The shaded pathway may be best for me,
But give me, Lord, thy light.

I know life's winter days will chill my heart,
But as the blue above,
And the bright sun, the life of spring impart,
Give me, O Christ, thy love.

I know not where storms may sweep my way,
How long ere conflicts cease;
But when the tempest rages, this I pray,
Give me, O God, thy peace.

I do not know how long the way may be,
What care and toil are best,
Only when care and toil are done, with thee,
Give me, my Father, rest.

A Visit to Redlands and Riverside

MRS. E. G. WHITE

FROM San Diego we returned to Los Angeles, and on Tuesday, December 6, we went to Redlands for a few days' visit. A little way out from Los Angeles, the scenery became very uninteresting. We passed through much barren land. Here and there, the desert, by means of irrigation, had been converted into flourishing orange groves; but for miles and miles at a stretch the land was uncultivated. As we rode along, I remembered scenes presented to me years before, of barren land, such as that through which we were passing, being cultivated and improved, and, by irrigation, made to yield rich returns. I was instructed that this was an object-lesson of the influence that the saving grace of Christ should have upon the hearts and lives of human beings. And had those to whom God has given the riches of the water of life, realized the responsibilities resting upon them as stewards of the grace of God, and gone forth as faithful missionaries into all the barren places of the earth, the wilderness would have been made to blossom as the garden of the Lord.

The dreary, uninviting appearance of the desert over which we were passing represented only too well the spiritual condition of many cities, towns, and country places,— a condition that might have been changed had those who know the truth put forth earnest, self-sacrificing efforts to impart light to others.

Places that have not yet been worked should long ago have heard the message. Those who are familiar with the teachings of God's Word, those who understand the things that Christ has commanded, are required, as stewards of his grace, to perform faithfully their appointed work. The means entrusted to them they are to use in opening new fields, in teaching those who would accept the truth were it presented to them in the way that Christ presented it when on this earth. All who have received the light of truth are held responsible to do their part in enlightening others.

Of the Saviour's work we read, "The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up."

"Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people. And his fame went throughout all Syria: and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments, and those which were possessed with devils, and those which were lunatic, and those that had the palsy; and he healed them. And there followed him great multitudes of people from Galilee, and from Decapolis, and from Jerusalem, and from Judea, and from beyond Jordan."

These words give an illustration of the way in which Jesus cultivated the soil of the heart. They point out clearly the work that we are to do, not in one place merely, but in every place. The light that God has graciously given us we are to communicate to many others. To every nation and kindred and tongue and people the warning message is to be given.

We are to learn from Christ the science of soul saving. He is the mighty Healer. In our work of preaching the gospel, we are to establish small sanitariums in many places. Sanitarium work is one very successful means of bringing the message of salvation through Christ to the attention of a large class of people who can be reached in no other way. Those from the higher walks of life will come to our sanitariums for treatment, and when they go away, they will tell others of the benefits they have received. Thus others will be induced to come. It is God's design that our sanitariums shall act an important part in giving the message of Christ's soon coming to those in the highways and the byways.

As we neared Redlands, the aspect of the country changed entirely. Cultivation and irrigation have transformed the desert into beautiful and fertile orange groves, which, at the time of our visit, were laden with fruit. On reaching Redlands, we went to the home of Brother and Sister E. S. Ballenger, where we were entertained during our stay.

In this short sketch I shall not attempt to describe Redlands. One morning we took a long drive over the city. We drove through a beautiful highland park, known as Smiley Heights. This was once barren hills, but it is now covered with orange groves and with a great variety of ornamental trees and shrubs. As we drove higher and higher up the mountainside, which was so beautifully adorned, we were charmed with the scenery. From the top of the hill, we obtained a fine view of the city of Redlands; and as I looked upon it, I realized that just such places had been presented to me in vision as places to which we must give special attention. I had been instructed that in places similar to this, we would have opportunity to establish sanitariums, and that by means of these institutions men and women would be taught the gospel of physical and spiritual healing.

On Sabbath morning I spoke in the pretty little church building that has recently been erected by our people in Redlands. There was a good attendance, some of the brethren and sisters from San Bernardino being present. The Lord gave me strength to speak for about thirty minutes. I felt so thankful for this; for I was just recovering from a four weeks' sickness.

The Lord blessed our meeting. In the evening another meeting was held, at which Brother Ballenger and W. C. White spoke of the Glendale Sanitarium and its needs, and invited those present to help in preparing the building for the reception of patients. The church-members in Redlands are poor, but they gave liberally in response to this call.

The Baptism of the Holy Ghost, the Latter Rain

R. A. UNDERWOOD

ON the day of Pentecost the disciples were endued with power from on high. See Acts 2: 16-20, 33-39; 4: 32, 33. This wonderful refreshing and baptism of the Holy Ghost is called in the Bible the early, or former, rain. A similar outpouring of the Holy Ghost will fall upon the remnant people of God. This is called the latter rain. This latter refreshing will be as wonderful in power and results as the first on the day of Pentecost.

We are admonished to pray for it at this time. "Ask ye of the Lord rain in the time of the latter rain.". Zech. 10: 1. Speaking of this, the prophet says, "Come, and let us return unto the Lord: . . . he hath smitten, and he will bind us up. . . . Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord: his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain." Hosea 6: 1-3. This same work is referred to by Joel in chap. 2: 1-23. In verse 1 the prophet says: "Blow ye the trumpet in Zion, and sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand." In verse 12 the Lord pleads, "Turn ye even to me with all your heart," and in verse 23 he gives the result: "Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the Lord your God: for

Coming

"At his coming." 1 Thess. 2:19.

Coming! O, the glorious promise!
How it thrills our hearts anew
With its certainty of gladness!
He said it: he is true.
Not a dream of bygone ages,
That great hope for which we pray:
"Coming" — and when God's "hour" striketh,
It shall break — that blessed day!

Coming — then the glad fruition
Of his servants' labors here,
Golden sheaves, and garnered treasure —
When his goodness crowns the year.
All that now seems lost or wasted,
Seeds long hidden out of sight,
Bursting into life and beauty,
Shining in his advent light.

Coming — then the tearless brightness
For the eyes with longing dim;
O, the rapture of that meeting
And our gathering unto him!
Earth has had its blessed foretastes,
Hallowed hours, communion sweet —
But the bliss when he unites us
In his presence, at his feet!

Coming — then the final triumph
Of his kingdom and his name.
Joy for those who held his banner,
Bore it through reproach and shame.
Strife of tongues forever silenced,
Doubts and fears forever past,
Manifested in his glory,
Owned of all, at last, at last.

Coming — and our cup of gladness
Now is trembling to the brim;
More than all his advent bringeth
Is the thought, it bringeth him.
"This same Jesus" is returning;
With him triumph, rest, and home;
For himself our hearts are yearning —
Even so, Lord Jesus, come!

A Visit to Redlands and Riverside

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Concluded)

Years ago many places in southern California were presented to me as very important fields, needing earnest labor. While at Redlands, I recognized it as one of these places. Light was given me that the unworked condition of the cities of southern California is a dishonor to those who know the truth. Recently Elder Simpson held tent-meetings in Redlands, as a result of which many new members were added to the church. For this we praise the Lord. But there is still much to be done in Redlands. We need now to put forth earnest efforts in the cities of southern California.

On reaching Redlands we learned that Brother J. A. Bowles had died a few days before. I felt so sorry to think that I could not meet him once more and have prayer with him. As we passed by his flourishing orange grove, we thought of the kindness he had so often shown in sending us presents of oranges. Brother Bowles was a sincere Christian, and ever showed a deep interest in the work and cause of God. He rejoiced greatly when he saw souls accepting the truth. He is resting now, till the last trump shall sound, and the dead in Christ shall rise to meet their Lord in the air.

An announcement had been sent out that on Sunday morning at eleven o'clock I would speak in our church at Riverside. Sister McEnterfer and I drove across with Brother Bowles's son and his wife. On the way we passed through miles and miles of orange groves. A wonderful work has been done in bringing water from the mountains and from wells, and irrigating the land so abundantly that it yields rich harvests of beautiful fruit.

On reaching the place of meeting, we found that here at Riverside, also, our people had recently built a beautiful house of worship. The church was well filled. Several not of our faith were present. I was able to speak for an hour, and all seemed interested.

For a year or two Dr. Leadsworth has been operating treatment rooms in Riverside; and at the close of the meeting, I went there to rest for a little while before taking the train for Redlands. Here we met Brother and Sister Towle, old friends from Maine.

On our way back to Redlands, as our train passed through miles of orange groves, I thought of the efforts that should be made in this beautiful valley to proclaim the truth for this time. I recognized this section of southern California as one of the places that had been presented to me with the word that it should have a fully equipped sanitarium.

Why have such fields as Redlands and Riverside been left almost unworked? As I looked from the car window, and saw the trees laden with fruit, I thought, Would not earnest, Christlike efforts have brought forth just as abundant a harvest in spiritual lines? In a few years these towns have been built up and developed, and as I looked upon their beauty and the fertility of the country surrounding them, there rose before me a vision of what the spiritual harvest might have been had earnest, Christlike efforts been put forth for the salvation of souls.

The Lord would have brave, earnest men and women take up his work in these places. The cause of God is to make more rapid advancement in southern California than it has in the past. Every year thousands of people visit southern California in search of health, and by various methods we should seek to reach them with the truth. They must hear the warning to prepare for the great day of the Lord, which is right upon us.

In his work, Christ met the people where they were. Much of his public labor was done in Capernaum, a great thoroughfare of travel. People from many lands passed through the city, or tarried for rest in their journeyings to and fro. Here Jesus could meet all nations and all ranks, the rich and the great as well as the poor and lowly, and his lessons would be carried to other countries and into many households. Investigation of the prophecies would thus be excited, attention would be directed to the Saviour, and his mission would be brought before the world.

We are called upon by God to present the truth for this time to those who year by year come to southern California from all parts of America. Workers who can speak to the multitudes are to be located where they can meet the people, and give them the warning message. Ministers and canvassers should be on the ground, watching their opportunity to present the truth and to hold meetings. Let them be quick to seize opportunities to place present truth before those who know it not. Let them give the message with clearness and power, that those who have ears to hear may hear.

I have longed to see men moved by the Holy Spirit meeting these people with the message borne by John the Baptist, "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand. . . . This is he that was spoken of by the prophet Esaias, saying, The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight."

"Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan," went out to hear John the Baptist, "and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins." Just such a work as this can be done to-day in southern California.

That Old Prophet

R. C. PORTER

In the thirteenth chapter of First Kings, we have an illustration of the simple manner in which the Lord instructs his people of duties to be performed and dangers that confront them.

In this case there "came a man of God out of Judah by the word of the Lord unto Bethel." Note that this was "a man of God," and he came "by the word of the Lord." He knew where to go. The Lord had plainly told him to go to "Bethel." He was sent on a special mission, with a definite message. "And he cried against the altar in the word of the Lord, and said, O altar, altar, thus saith the Lord; Behold a child shall be born unto the house of David, Josiah by name; and upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high places that burn incense upon thee, and men's bones shall be burnt upon thee. And he gave a sign the same day, saying, This is the sign which the Lord hath spoken; Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out." Verses 2, 3.

King Jeroboam stood by the altar to burn incense at the very moment the

Memories of Jesus

Of thoughts ye are the sweetest,
Fond mem'ries of my Lord;
In all my mind and feelings
I give thee full accord.

Nor shall my recollections
Forget the gracious love
That brought thee to my rescue,
That bought me with thy blood;

Nor all thy many sorrows,
Thy deep, atoning pain,
The cross by which thou'st entered
My heart fore'er to reign.

For all thy gracious mercies,
With freedom from my maze
Of sin and jumbled nature,
I give thee hearty praise.

And treasured in my mem'ry,
For earth and heaven above,
I'll faithfully be keeping
The tokens of thy love.

O, grant me, then, the power
To give thee all my love;
To serve thee without ceasing,
Till brought to thee above!

An Open Letter

"Elmshaven," Sanitarium, Cal.,
Jan. 11, 1905.

To the Leaders in Our Work at Takoma Park: —

I exhort all who are connected with the work at Takoma Park to bring Christ into all that they do and say. Lift him up, higher and still higher, that by beholding him, you may be changed into the same image. To you, and to all others who believe in him, he becomes an inspiring force. To all who receive him he gives power to become the sons of God. Only by obtaining this power can we gain perfection of character.

We can be partakers of the divine nature. In the strength of the Redeemer, we can live pure, noble, helpful lives. Make yourselves acquainted with every detail of the life of Christ. Strive to become like the Saviour, who was meek and lowly and self-denying. He was inspired with the purest purposes. So must you be if ever you see the King in his beauty. Pure, unselfish love was the principle that governed all that he said and did. He has power to imbue us with the faith that works by love and purifies the soul.

I thank the Lord that we have men in charge of our work at Takoma Park who have taken a firm stand that they will not be corrupted in any of their transactions with worldly men. Thus business men will be convinced that the faith of Seventh-day Adventists is not a pretense or sham, but that it leads men to walk in the way of the Lord and to do his will.

I have been instructed that strong temptations will come to men who are connected with our institutions. The work we are called upon to do in Washington is to keep every jot and tittle of the law in surety and in strength, in might and in power. When worldly men present temptations to you, listen not to their offers, and accept not their bribes. I thank the Lord that you have not betrayed the sacred trusts committed to your hands.

Our physicians also will have opportunities to gain advantages for themselves, by following worldly policy. Let them distinctly tell those who offer these temptations that they will not enter into any worldly schemes. I rejoice to think that those who have charge of the work in Takoma Park are Christians, men who can teach the youth in their charge to do acceptable work. My brethren, let unselfishness and scrupulous integrity characterize all that you do. Do not allow your actions to be tainted with dishonesty. Work for time and work for eternity, remembering that the Lord sees and hears all that is said and done. His all-seeing eye examines every work. Never resort to the slightest dishonesty to gain an advantage. Do not buy or sell dishonestly. In all that you do, inquire, "Is this the way of the Lord?" Cherish a clear sense of what you must be and do in order to develop a character that is without spot or wrinkle or any such thing. It is the perfect man in Christ who meets God's ideal. The work of those who are guided and controlled by Christian motives will bear witness for God. Christ lived the very life that he requires his followers to live.

(1) [The Saviour has a deep contempt for all deception. The stern punishment meted out to Ananias and Sapphira shows this.] Desiring to receive commendation for good deeds, yet unwilling to give all to God, they sold their possessions, and keeping back part of the price, laid the rest at the apostles' feet. They hoped to be thought liberal and self-denying, but the Holy Spirit read the deception, and sudden punishment came upon them. To-day the same Spirit condemns all underhand dealing. All selfish meanness is to be put away from the character. This is the lesson that God would have us learn from the experience of Ananias and Sapphira.

There are virtues that are to be daily strengthened. A reverence for justice and equity is to be cultivated. He who permits in himself that which he condemns in others is doing himself a great wrong.

(2) ["Love as brethren, be pitiful, be courteous." Cherish a supreme reverence for justice and truth, and a hatred for all cruelty and oppression. Do unto others as you would wish them to do to you. God forbids you to favor self, to the disadvantage of another.]

A terrible deception has taken possession of the Christian world. There is a high profession, but a dwarfed godliness. Let us so live that at last God can say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Our lives may show a steady spiritual growth. But I have seen that which makes me tremble — men and women dwarfed in character, possessing the Word of God, which tells them what they must do in order to be saved, yet unsanctified and unholy.

"Enter ye in at the strait gate: for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

This is a time for every one to deal truly with his own case. "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father that is in heaven."

Daily, hourly, the leaders in the work are giving lessons to those with whom they are associated. My brethren, be reasonable in your every requirement, as men of intelligence, whom God has chosen. Let all that you do reveal the strictest integrity. Be true and faithful. Set an example that all may safely follow. Do not draw into the web of your character one thread of selfishness; for this would spoil the pattern.

As you advance in the work, you will find that there are many things that must receive careful consideration. Allow no shiftlessness. When a man is employed in the work of God, he is under obligation to use all his capabilities in the very best service that he can offer. He is to remember that God has hired him to work in his vineyard. Every woman is to stand in her place, helping to perfect her own character and the characters of the members of her family. Father, mother, and children are to do honor to the principles of heaven, that the influence of angels may unite with their efforts in the preparation of character for the higher life.

A Loyal People

E. K. SLADE

The purpose of the plan of salvation is to develop a people who will be loyal to the ways and requirements of the kingdom of God. To this end the law of God with all its requirements is ever held before us as a rule of action, loyalty to which is required on the part of every one.

It was pleasing to God when this people took a firm stand for obedience to the commandments of God. The Sabbath commandment was a test of loyalty in a special sense. For one to step out and obey the fourth commandment, and thus take a position so different from the practises of the nominally Christian world, in the face of ridicule and great

To-day and To-morrow

WILLIAM BRICKEY

"Boast not thyself of to-morrow; for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth." Prov. 27:1.

O BOAST not thyself of to-morrow;
  Thou knowest not what it may bring:
Thy heart it may burden with sorrow,
  Thy soul be unable to sing.
To-day, it is thine to win laurels
  By battle with wrong for the right;
To-morrow may end all your quarrels
  By turning your day into night.

But fret not thyself for to-morrow,
  The future will care for itself;
Much trouble is easy to borrow,
  More easily borrowed than pelf.
To-day, it is yours, with its burden;
  You can not escape what is here:
To-morrow may bring you the guerdon;
  Your troubles may all disappear.

Then fret not nor boast for to-morrow,
  What good or what ill may betide;
If time bring you pleasure or sorrow,
  Remember the Lord will provide.
The hairs of your head he has numbered,
  He feedeth the fowls of the air:
Then why should your thoughts be encumbered
  With doubts of his fatherly care?

The Work for This Time

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I HAVE a message to bear to our people. For weeks I have not been able to sleep for more than a few hours each night. I am thinking, praying, and planning for the work in Washington. Shall the work at the capital of our nation be hindered for lack of funds? Shall the number of laborers be limited to a very few, when many should be improving the present opportunity to call the attention of the people to the truth for this time? I pray that those of our people who have means to spare will at this time place it in the Lord's treasury, that his purpose for the advancement of his cause may be carried out. This is the Lord's opportune time for the working of Washington and the surrounding suburbs.

(1) [Night after night I am standing before the people, bearing a very positive testimony, and pleading with them to be wide-awake, and to take up the work of circulating our literature.] I have seen men and women agitated in regard to present truth, and in need of some one to lead them into clearer light. Night after night I am urging our people to awake from their spiritual slumber, and do their utmost to help in this great crisis in the work in Washington.

God is looking down from his throne, and is sending his angels to this earth to co-operate with those who are teaching the truth. Read the record of the experience of Philip and the eunuch. "The angel of the Lord spake unto Philip, saying, Arise, and go toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert. And he arose and went: and, behold, a man of Ethiopia, an eunuch of great authority under Candace queen of the Ethiopians, who had the charge of all her treasure, and had come to Jerusalem for to worship, was returning, and sitting in his chariot read Esaias the prophet.

"Then the Spirit said unto Philip, Go near, and join thyself to this chariot. And Philip ran thither to him, and heard him read the prophet Esaias, and said, Understandest thou what thou readest? And he said, How can I, except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him.

"The place of the scripture which he read was this, He was led as a sheep to the slaughter; and like a lamb dumb before his shearer, so opened he not his mouth; in his humiliation his judgment was taken away; and who shall declare his generation? for his life is taken from the earth.

"And the eunuch answered Philip, and said, I pray thee, Of whom speaketh the prophet this? of himself, or of some other man? Then Philip opened his mouth, and began at the same scripture, and preached unto him Jesus.

"And as they went on their way, they came unto a certain water: and the eunuch saith, See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? And Philip saith, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he answered and said, I believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God.

"And he commanded the chariot to stand still: and they went down both into the water, both Philip and the eunuch; and he baptized him. And when they were come up out of the water, the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip, that the eunuch saw him no more: and he went on his way rejoicing.

"But Philip was found at Azotus: and passing through he preached in all the cities, till he came to Cæsarea."

This incident shows the care that the Lord has over every mind that is susceptible to the truth. We see how closely the ministration of heavenly angels is connected with the work of the Lord's servants on this earth.

A burden was placed upon Philip to enter new places, to break up fresh ground. Direction was given him by an angel who was watching for every opportunity to bring men into connection with their fellow men. Philip was sent "toward the south unto the way that goeth down from Jerusalem unto Gaza, which is desert." This brought him into touch with a man of wide influence, who, when converted, would communicate to others the light of truth. By the Lord's working through Philip, the man was convinced of the truth, and was converted and baptized. He was a highway hearer, a man of good standing, who would exert a strong influence in favor of the truth.

To-day, as then, angels of heaven are waiting to lead men to their fellow men. An angel showed Philip where to find this man, who was so ready to receive the truth, and to-day angels of God will guide and direct the footsteps of those workers who will allow the Holy Spirit to sanctify their tongues and refine and ennoble their hearts.

There is no place in America of greater importance than Washington. The recent developments in that place show that our brethren moved there none too soon. Angels of heaven directed their course in planting the standard of truth in Washington. Men of influence are being aroused to study the truth for this time. No opportunity should be left unimproved to establish the work firmly in this important place. And our efforts are not to stop there. In many cities the truth has not yet been proclaimed. Workers are to come to the front; men and women who are wise in reaching human minds are to be set at work in every place where there is an opening. Every one who is interested is to be judiciously labored for. The men in high places are to hear the message of truth. Angels of heaven will unite with the Lord's appointed ministers and medical missionaries, aiding them to exert on the minds of the people an influence in favor of the truth.

Philadelphia and other important places should be worked. Evangelists should be finding their way into all the places where the minds of men are agitated over the question of Sunday legislation and of the teaching of religion in the public schools. It is the neglect of Seventh-day Adventists to improve these providential opportunities to present the truth that burdens my heart, and keeps me awake night after night.

Instruction has been given me that there is a withholding of the tithe that should be faithfully brought into the Lord's treasury, for the support of the ministers and missionaries who are opening the Scriptures to the people, and working from house to house. These workers are to do their best, as the Lord's light-bearers. As they walk humbly with God, angels of heaven will co-operate with them, making impressions on minds. In the past angels of God have stood beside his messengers, as they have raised the standard bearing the inscription, "The Commandments of God and the Faith of Jesus." The ministers and evangelists who are laboring in the Lord's vineyard, must be supported. We may have a part in the work by bringing to the storehouse means for the sustenance of the Lord's chosen ones.

In the place of complaining of the officers of the General Conference because they can not respond to the multiplied calls for men and means, let our church-members bear a living testimony to the power of the truth by denying self, and giving liberally for the advancement of the work. Let our sisters save by refusing to put expensive trimmings on their garments. Let every unnecessary expense be cut down. Let every family bring their tithes and offerings to the Lord.

Most earnest work is now to be done in proclaiming the message of present truth. Every voice is now to harmonize; every believer is to unite in urging obedience to the law proclaimed from Sinai. Let us unite with the angels of heaven in presenting to our people in every place the necessity of paying a faithful tithe and of bringing to the Lord liberal gifts and offerings.

Never was there a more important time in the history of our work than at present. The message in the third chapter of Malachi comes to us, holding up before us the need of honesty in our relations to the Lord and his work. My brethren, the money that you use to buy and sell and get gain will be a curse to you if you withhold from the Lord that which is his. The means entrusted to you by the Lord for the advancement of his work should be used in sending the gospel to all parts of our world.

The curse of God will surely come upon those who rob him in tithes and offerings. "Will a man rob God? Yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings. Ye are cursed with a curse: for ye have robbed me, even this whole nation. Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it. And I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land, saith the Lord of hosts."

Shall we not, as a people, come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty? Shall we not with humble hearts confess our sins of neglect? Shall we not return unto the Lord his own? Then he will impart his goods to those who are faithful, that they may do still more for the advancement of his work.

Thousands upon thousands are perishing in sin, and a lack of means is hindering the proclamation of the truth that is to be carried to all nations, and kindreds, and tongues, and peoples. There are men ready to go forth as the Lord's messengers, but because of a lack of means in the treasury they can not be sent to the places where people are begging for some one to come and teach them the truth.

Our heaviest burden at the present time is for the work in Washington. Angels of God are co-operating with those who are lifting the standard of God's holy law in this important place. Will you help these faithful workers? Will you send in the means needed in order for the necessary buildings to be erected? Let the members of every church now do all in their power to raise the fund necessary for the completion of the buildings that are so much needed in Washington. The work must be quickly established at the capital of our nation. Will you not, my brethren and sisters, see that the necessary means are supplied for the accomplishment of this work?

St. Helena, Cal., March 28, 1905.

Present Tokens

S. N. HASKELL

"Watchman, what of the night?" is the question asked by the Lord. The Lord himself gave the answer, "The morning cometh, and also the night." It is well for the church to ask the same question to-day. There is light for the church that would not be appreciated by those who are not governed by the principles that govern the church. It is a fact that for more than fifty years we have stood before the world as a separate people, looking for the second coming of Christ. There are certain events that cluster around his second coming that to us are tokens of that event, which others do not appreciate.

About forty-five years ago, at a tent-meeting held in Lancaster, Mass., before any organization had been effected in the East, the Spirit of the Lord gave us light respecting certain things that would take place near the end. I was present at the meeting. The brethren were in trial because certain ones felt it duty to move West. So the matter was talked over. And the light given was that the Lord was moving on certain ones to move West. After the truth had gone West in the closing work, God would move on the minds of the brethren to come East, and at that time the work would go with power. It would be after organization was effected; for at that time we were unorganized. Now what have we seen? The truth has gone West, even to the islands of the sea and Australia. It has returned to the eastern portion of the United States, even at the head of the government. Shall we say it has not come with power? The judgment alone will reveal what has been accomplished recently in the city of Washington, in staying the making of an image to the beast. The States have Sunday laws, and all that is necessary to give them force is for the nation to make a law, and then the dragon will speak with authority. Who can not see the providence of the Lord in this? and also see that we are in the closing work of the message?

Again: we have looked forward to the time when nearly entire churches would embrace the truth, when the sick would be healed, when God would work wonders in behalf of present truth, when his providence would be over his work in a wonderful manner. Could our eyes be opened to all parts of the world at one glance, and see as God sees, there is not a phase of present truth that we have expected to see in the closing work, but in some portions of the world it is being fulfilled at the present hour. Simply because we do not see in our immediate neighborhood all these evidences is no sign that they do not exist. God has not said that everything he has spoken in regard to the closing of the gospel would be fulfilled in every particular in each locality. The Lord has a larger work on hand than to prepare some single township for the coming of the Son of man. The world is to be prepared, and surely we are in the day of his preparation, even in the time when the nations are angry, for his wrath is come; and soon, very soon, we shall see there has not a word failed of all he has spoken concerning his work. The loud cry will come and pass, and probation will end, while the world is going on the same as in the past. And I fear that many, yes, very many, of our people will be dreaming over what they expect to see in the loud cry, and will not awaken until probation has closed.

The openings and methods of labor have so increased that none can say, There is no opportunity for me. There is a place for every one, there are openings of various kinds, and it is only the narrow mind that thinks, because everything is not done in some one particular way, it can not be of the Lord. The Lord has set his hand to the work, and it will be accomplished. To every man the Lord has given his work. The important question with us is, Are we doing the work the Lord has appointed to us? The old ship Zion will enter harbor on time. Everything is working toward this one grand end. God will raise up laborers, and devise agencies that we little dream of to accomplish his purpose in the world. Nothing can be done against the truth, but for its advancement. It is the overruling providence of God that is so shaping matters that before we are aware of it, the work will be finished. May the Lord help us to realize the time in which we live, and to prepare for that glad day; for the morning cometh, and also the night of death and darkness to a sinful world.

South Lancaster, Mass.

Put It First

The Old Testament creed setting forth the triple requirement which God makes, puts first what too many Christians require last: "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly?" Let that requirement be held in its right place, and our labor problems would be in a fair way of adjustment. We have just heard of a man, now in an honorable position and a working Christian, who says he was for years alienated from Christianity because his employer refused him an unquestionably just increase

Waiting, Trusting

I am waiting, blessed Master,
For thy discipline to-day;
I am safe if thou but lead me,
Gently lead me all the way;
I will fear no storm of trial,
Strong through faith my heart within;
Walk beside me in the darkness,
Only keep me free from sin.

Let some weary, erring brother
See the Christ-light shine in me.
I will bow to all thou sendest,
Just that men may follow thee.
Let me meet thee in the Garden
Or on Calvary's rugged way,
If some poor, lost, wandering sinner
Only turn to thee to-day.

For my portion I will take thee;
For my need trust thy supply,
Let thy image grow within me;
Be my life, that self may die.
I am waiting for thy blessing;
For without thee I must fall.
Fill me with the Spirit's fulness;
Thou, O Christ, art all in all.

Instruction for Helpers and Students at Takoma Park, D. C.

MRS. E. G. WHITE

To the stewards and matrons, accountants and clerks, foremen and laborers, I would say: Let your stewardship and your service and all your business dealing be marked by strict integrity and the sanctifying influence of the truth, that others may take knowledge of you that you have been with Jesus, and have learned of him. Be faithful in all that you do. Let not one selfish, covetous act be recorded in the books of heaven against your name. Do not allow it to be seen that while you profess to be children of God, you are really serving the world. Serve God with heart and soul and mind and strength. Then angels of heaven will come close to you, and will lift up for you a standard against the enemy.

Give your whole heart and life to the service of him who gave himself for your redemption. Disappoint the enemy. Refuse to be his tool for the carrying out of his plans. Turn away from the financial advantages which he offers you, and which, if accepted, would prove a curse to your religious experience. Then you can say in the cleanness of your heart, "My soul shall make her boast in the Lord." Let there be in your lives no deceitful devising, no artifice, no underhand schemes and contrivings. Depart from all things that you would condemn in others.

Living Bible truth day by day will place you on vantage-ground. Your face will be calm and peaceful, and your words will be, "I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in the Lord; for he hath clothed me with the garments of his righteousness, and it is my salvation. He hath covered me with the robe of his righteousness." You will be able to give comfort and hope to others, because you have through your integrity glorified God.

You will walk carefully, lest you make crooked paths by which weak, struggling, halting souls shall be led out of the way. You will refuse to co-operate with worldly men to carry out worldly plans or policies. As you realize that you have a work to do for God, the temptations and allurements of the world will not tempt you from the path of equity and uprightness. The whole life will bear the testimony, "Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire beside thee. My flesh and my heart faileth: but God is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever." "O my soul, thou hast said unto the Lord, Thou art God. The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup." With the eye of faith you will behold the invisible, and the soul finds its strength in One who never fails. He is the joy of your life.

We are fighting a battle with the powers of darkness. The Bible is the rule of our life. This word is the light which is to guide us in all our perplexities. Make the Lord your counselor. When you are at work, the enemy may come to you with suggestions and temptations, hoping to lead you from the path of integrity. Do not listen to him. Look away from him to the One who has bought you with his life. Give yourself to Christ, trust in him, and he will give you strength to resist the enemy.

"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me." "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth." "Ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's."

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Never forget that you belong to Christ. Let all your work, to the most minute detail, be such that he can approve. Do not, in order to gain worldly advantages, steal that which belongs to God.

Only by doing the will of God can we show that we possess true religion. Those who strive sincerely to break from the grasp of the enemy, and with full purpose of heart seek to know and obey the commandments of God, will be given power to become the sons and daughters of God. Their search after the things of heaven will be rewarded.

To the Students in the Training College

To the students in the school I would say: Keep in the path of self-denial. Avoid all ungodly companionship. Seek daily for the faith that works by love and purifies the soul. You will find your safety in studying the Word of God with a sincerity that keeps Christ constantly before the mind as the example to be followed. Lift him up, the Man of Calvary, by purity of word and work; for thus you honor God. By true religion, revealed in the daily life, you and I and all who are striving for the crown of life, are to bear witness for Christ.

He who is sanctified by the truth is strengthened to resist the assaults of those who have grown hardened in guilt. Shun the companionship of those who have not heeded the appeals of conscience. Let your light shine forth in Christlike words and deeds. Ask yourselves, What can I do to help those with whom I am brought in contact to resist temptation? What can I say to warn those who have not been taught to believe that the Lord is soon to come?

Earnest searching of the Scriptures, with a sincere desire to understand the truth, will receive a sure reward. An occasional glance into the Word is not enough. An occasional prayer is not enough. "Search the Scriptures," Christ said, "for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." Make the Bible the man of your counsel. Only thus can you gain strength to overcome. Let your light shine forth in clear, constant, distinct rays. An occasional service done for the Master is not enough. Only by an unreserved consecration to Christ of all that you have and are can you win souls to him.

Let the students who are engaged in building do their work with thoroughness. Let them learn from their daily work lessons that will help them in their character building. Let them remember that in order to have perfect characters, they must make their work as perfect as possible. Into every line of this work let there be brought that stability which means true economy.

Students, eternal interests are before you. Work with heaven in view, remembering ever your character building. Keep a pocket Bible with you as you work, and improve every opportunity to commit to memory its precious promises.

"All things are yours; and ye are Christ's; and Christ is God's." God gave Christ to be the head over all things to the church. The Saviour loves the church with an everlasting love. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

Christ gave himself for the church that he might present it to himself a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle or any such thing, but that it should be holy and without blemish.

Remember that Satan will not leave any one alone who is working to build up memorials for the Lord. "Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation."

From the Washington training college missionaries are to be sent forth to many distant lands. Let the students improve every opportunity to prepare for missionary work, while at the school. They are to be tested and proved that it may be seen what their adaptability is, and whether they have a right hold from above. If they have a firm hold on Christ, they will have a right hold on all with whom they come in contact.

The Lord will surely bless all who seek to bless others. The school is to be so conducted that students and teachers will be continually increasing in power through the faithful use of the talents given them. By faithfully putting to a practical use that which they have learned, they will continually increase in wisdom and knowledge. We are to learn from the Book of books the principles by which we are to live and labor. By consecrating all our abilities to him who has the first right to them, we may ennoble all that is worthy of our attention.

The students who will get the most good out of life are those who live the word of God in their dealings with their fellow men. Those who receive to give will feel the greatest satisfaction in this life. Those who live for themselves are always in want, for they are never satisfied. There is no Christianity in shutting up our sympathies in our own selfish hearts. We are to bring brightness and blessing into the lives of others. We are to be channels through which God can let his goodness, mercy, and truth flow to the world. We are to be co-workers with Jesus Christ, imparting to others the blessings bestowed on us.

A Test

C. R. SPARROW

The Lord has given us abundant instruction, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Man will be left without excuse in this world, and will not be able to say, when he has to meet his God face to face, that he did not know; for the Bible gives all the instruction needed.

In reading the account of our first parents we find that the Lord put them in the garden of Eden. There he gave them all the privileges necessary to make them comfortable and happy. He also gave them all that they needed for food, the best they could have. But there in the garden he tested them to see whether or not they would obey him; and that test was in regard to the tree of knowledge of good and evil.

We find that the children of Israel had a test given them that has never been removed, and which will continue till the close of probation. Let us read what the Bible tells us concerning it: "And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord. And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord. He shall not search whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it: and if he change it at all, then both it and the change thereof shall be holy; it shall not be redeemed. These are the commandments, which the Lord commanded Moses for the children of Israel in Mount Sinai." Lev. 27:30-34.

We also have a test put upon us by the Lord, to see if we are ready for that immortal state through our obedience to him. Brethren, have we ever read in the Bible that this test of giving tithes has been removed? If so, where? We have just read that the tithe is holy unto the Lord, also that it is the Lord's. Not only the tenth of what we raise, but the tenth of our herds and of our stock is his; it is holy. Have we ever thought that this was a test laid on the children of Israel, and that they were required to keep it? Are we the children of Israel to-day? If so, has the Lord released us from this test? If the Bible does not give us a "Thus saith the Lord," why do not we keep this command in obedience to the requirements of our Heavenly Father? Brethren, this will not pass, and we be without excuse.

Let us turn to Neh. 13:10: "And I perceived that the portions of the Levites had not been given them: for the Levites and the singers, that did the work, were fled every one to his field." Here we see plainly that those who had the spiritual oversight of the work were farming to get a living, the treasury was empty, they could not live, so what was there to do but go and farm for a living? Had those who were not to wait on the spiritual necessities of the people paid their tithes and offerings, then the Levites would not have had to resort to farming, but would have had plenty to live on. The Lord has ordained that his "ministers" should have their needs supplied. So shall we not return to the Lord his own, that those who attend to the spiritual work may have that which is needed to support themselves, their families, and the cause of God? Why should it be said, when we come up to the conference meetings, that the treasury is empty?

When Hezekiah saw the condition of things in his day, that the priests and Levites were not getting what they ought, he commanded the people to give them "their portion" that they might be encouraged in the law of the Lord. The record says that as soon as the commandment was given, the people brought in of the first-fruits of corn, wine, and oil in abundance, also of the dates (margin), and the tithe of all things. And the children of Israel and Judah brought in "the tithe of oxen and sheep, and the tithe of holy things which were consecrated to the Lord their God, and laid them by heaps. . . . Then Hezekiah questioned with the priests and the Levites concerning the heaps. And Azariah the chief priest of the house of Zadok answered him, and said, Since the people began to bring the offerings into the house of the Lord, we have had enough to eat, and have left plenty [now take notice]: for the Lord hath blessed his people; and that which is left is this great store." 2 Chron. 31:4-10. My fellow seekers after eternal life, if we want a blessing, let us do likewise.

Malachi says we are thieves; we have been stealing, the whole "nation" of us. What have we stolen?—"Tithes and offerings." Is that true of the people who are looking for the Lord Jesus to come to take them from this earth?—Yes, we have been taking and keeping the tithes and offerings of the Lord. We expect blessings, but why do we not receive them? We have broken the eighth and sixth commands of the decalogue, and are cursed. In verse ten is given the invitation to bring in all the "tithes and offerings," to see what the Lord will do for us. Brethren, let us accept this invitation, and prove the Lord, and see if he will not pour us out a greater blessing than ever we have had before. Come, let us prove the Lord.

About three years ago we were confronted with a dreadful disease which threatened to take off all the cattle in Rhodesia as far as it went. Many farmers and others who were using oxen for transportation purposes lost nearly every beast they had, some losing all. At that time I was greatly impressed that live stock should be tithed as well as other produce, so I called on the nearest elder, and asked him if he would come over and tithe the stock that I had. I had forty-two head of cattle, so four went out for the Lord; and two still remain waiting to be tithed with the next lot in the near future.

Now I must truthfully confess that there is not one farmer in Rhodesia whose stock has done better than ours. In the three years one calf died from starvation, it being very dry at that season of the year. But the rest have done exceedingly well, and it has paid to tithe the stock. The disease did not reach us, though a transport rider passed by my house with sixty-four oxen, some of them sick with the disease at the time, but no evil effects resulted from it. All I can say is, The Lord be praised.

If we turn the tithe of our stock into the Lord's treasury, will there be any need of continually calling for means to carry on the work of the Lord? If we do that, then we can look up and expect Jesus to come quickly. Shall we not do it to hasten the coming of the Lord? We all want to get home, yet we are hindering by withholding from the Lord his own.

The Tribute of Suffering

It is those whom we love most upon whom we lay the heaviest burdens. We do not turn to strangers or untried acquaintances when we would lean hard on some one in a crisis of life. We tax most those whom we trust most. And what is true of our relations with each other is true of the Father's relations with his children. He does not send stress and burdens to weaklings. "God must love you very much to trust you with such suffering," said one to a friend whose

Christian Courage

Workman of God, O! lose not heart,
But learn what God is like;
And in the darkest battle-field
Thou shalt know where to strike!

Thrice blest is he to whom is given
The instinct that can tell
That God is on the field when he
Is most invisible.

Blest, too, is he who can divine
Where real light does lie,
And dares to take the side that seems
Wrong to man's blindfold eye.

Then learn to scorn the praise of men,
And learn to lose with God;
For Jesus won the world through shame,
And beckons thee his road.

The Gift of Christ

MRS. E. G. WHITE

God manifested his love for the world by sending his only begotten Son to save sinners. Christ took our nature, that through his grace we might be partakers of the divine nature. His divinity was bound up with humanity that humanity might stand on vantage-ground with God.

"Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be a propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another. No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us.

"Hereby know we that we dwell in him, and he in us, because he hath given us of his Spirit. And we have seen and do testify that the Father sent the Son to be the Saviour of the world. Whosoever shall confess that Jesus is the Son of God, God dwelleth in him, and he in God. And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him.

"Herein is our love made perfect, that we may have boldness in the day of judgment: because as he is, so are we in this world.

"There is no fear in love; but perfect love casteth out fear: because fear hath torment. He that feareth is not made perfect in love. We love him, because he first loved us. If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God loves his brother also."

We need to watch unto prayer, walking and working in constant dependence upon God. He in whose heart Christ is formed, he to whom Christ is the hope of glory, enlightening, sanctifying, strengthening, will be preserved from the false representations that will be made of God.

The false sentiments that prevail to-day are of the world; they belong to the world; they are worldly in spirit and character. The apostle declared, "We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us." The teaching of the apostles is not to be set aside. Men are not to feel at liberty to speak disrespectfully of these teachings because they do not agree with all that they set forth. Those who teach the truth for this time must understand the Scriptures, that they may give the right interpretation of the Scriptures, exalting the principles of the truth, and in life and character revealing the spirit of the truth. God works with such ones as speak of the life and miracles of his Son.

(1) He whose heart is filled with the love that proceeds from God, does not allow self-exaltation or dishonesty to find place in his life. He who is "born again," of the Spirit, reveals Christ in the daily life. He is upright in all his dealings. He does no sly, cunning, underhand work. The good fruit that appears in his life testifies to the condition of his heart.

Christ's true followers are made complete in him, because he gives them of his Spirit. The blessed hope of seeing Christ as he is, and being like him, works in mind and heart like a quickening power, cleansing away impurity and depravity. "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him"— the hope of seeing Christ as he is —"purifieth himself, even as he is pure."

How wide the contrast between the ones thus described and those who, though professing the faith, have not the love of God in their hearts. The latter class have not been made Christian gentlemen by the purifying influence of the truth. They are transgressors of the law of God, and their work is opposed to the work of Christ.

Those who walk humbly with God are approved by him. Let us build ourselves up, through Christ, in the most holy faith. The truth of God alone is invincible. Those who profess to believe the Scriptures need now to know where they are standing. Christ will receive all who come to him confessing and forsaking their sins, and will give to them transformation of character. He offers to all the eternal-life-insurance policy. The everlasting covenant is sealed with the blood of his crucifixion. Through his sacrifice on Calvary he makes peace for us. In him are hid the treasures of wisdom and knowledge. He is the divine storehouse of all light. He alone can prepare us to enter the gates of the holy city.

Offerings for Missions

N. P. NELSON

What is the greatest and most important theme to be brought before the world at the present time? Is it not the proclamation of the everlasting gospel in this generation? This indicates that we have no time to lose. But the question is, How shall I be able to help in the promulgation of this message? or will the Lord excuse me because I can not go in person to a foreign land?— No, by no means; the Lord says that he has given to every man a work. Facilities are within reach with which the weakest may have a part in this glorious work. It is a marvel what facilities the Lord has placed in the hands of his people with which to accomplish this work in a short time.

We are glad to know that the living preacher has now gone to nearly every civilized country in the world. Believers in the soon-coming Saviour are being raised up everywhere, but still we hear the "Macedonian cry" for more workers. Thanks be to God for our colleges and academies which are educating and preparing young men and women, who are willing to sacrifice home, to go out to proclaim this last message. So a way has been provided by which those who are so situated that they can not go in person may have a part. This way is by systematically giving ten cents each week to help defray the expenses of those who can go. Dear brethren and sisters, how do you look upon this most important work? Are you willing and ready to place your ten cents each week in the Lord's treasury? O brethren, let us awake out of this lethargy that has taken such a hold upon many of our people. We all want to hear the "Well done" said to us when the Lord comes to call his people. So shall we not all take hold of this plan to support laborers in foreign lands?

Work to Save Sinners

WM. COVERT

Christ came to our world to save sinners. Luke 19:10. This was the one consideration that brought him from heaven. His life-work related wholly to the salvation of sinners. He died and rose again for the accomplishment of this important work. The Christian worker is sent into the world that he may devote his time and energies to sinners' needs. The preaching of the gospel is done wholly for the benefit of sinners in our world. Churches are organized and conferences maintained to provide teachers, that sinners may be instructed.

Here is the only place in the universe where there is a chance to save sinners. Just now is the accepted time for bringing them from darkness into the light, that they may be saved. In a very little while it will be too late to do this. Jesus, who loves sinners, and who died to save them, is calling upon us from heaven,

The General Conference

THIRTY-SIXTH SESSION MAY 11-30

First Meeting

The thirty-sixth General Conference of Seventh-day Adventists was called to order at 10:30 A. M., May 11, at Takoma Park, D. C. The president, A. G. Daniells, was in the chair.

The Chairman invited to the platform Brethren Haskell, Butler, and Loughborough, the presidents of union conferences, the superintendents of mission fields, and other laborers of long years of service in the message.

After the hymn, "O worship the King," the forty-ninth chapter of Isaiah was read by W. W. Prescott.

The congregation united in the hymn, "Hark, hark, hear the blest tidings."

The conference was then led in earnest prayer by Elders J. N. Loughborough and E. W. Farnsworth. The presence of the Holy Spirit was very manifest as the conference unitedly dedicated itself to God.

The Chairman referred to the fact that the conference was to be held in the open air, according to the counsel that had been given. All were thankful for favorable weather, and for divine care over the delegates as they had come in from near and distant fields. It was stated that the General Conference was organized forty-two years ago this month, in a meeting held in Battle Creek, Mich. Of the delegates present at that meeting but four survive, Elders J. N. Loughborough, C. O. Taylor, Isaac Sandborn, and Washington Morse. Sister E. G. White was present throughout that meeting. The Chairman expressed in behalf of the conference thankfulness that in our present gathering we have Sister White and Elder Loughborough still with us.

Elder J. N. Loughborough spoke with feeling of the progress during the forty-two years since the organization of the General Conference, and the congregation heartily responded with the "amens" to the expression of his hope that he might witness the speedy finishing of the work.

Sister E. G. White, who was present on the platform, addressed the conference. She emphasized the need of repentance and humiliation before God and one another. In this last day of the great Day of Atonement it is time to make sure that every sin is confessed and forgiven. All through this meeting should be heard voices proclaiming, "He has pardoned my transgressions, he has made me clean from my unrighteousness." "Clear the King's highway," is the word to us now. "Gather out the stones, that a path may be made clear for the Holy Spirit to go through our midst, that the blessing of God may come to us in this conference. Depart from iniquity, and the Lord will make your feet to stand upon high and holy ground."

A praise service followed, the time being pressed full of testimonies. The keynote of these was that the workers had come from all the fields praying for God's blessing to be upon this gathering.

The roll of delegates was called. (The list of delegates was printed in last week's REVIEW. Nearly all were present at the roll-call.)

The Chairman presented the report of the executive committee, nominating chairmen for the current session of the General Conference, which was unanimously adopted as follows: G. A. Irwin, O. A. Olsen, A. G. Daniells, L. R. Conradi, W. W. Prescott, H. W. Cottrell.

The Secretary presented the following list of members of the various General Conference departments not otherwise represented among the delegates, whom the executive committee had appointed delegates at large: —

Educational Department: E. A. Sutherland, F. M. Dickerson, Mrs. L. F. Plummer.

Sabbath-School Department: G. B. Thompson, Mrs. F. L. Bland, Estella Houser.

Religious Liberty Department: K. C. Russell, W. A. Colcord, C. P. Bollman, D. W. Reavis, J. S. Washburn.

Publishing Department: S. N. Curtiss, James Cochran, E. R. Palmer, S. D. Hartwell.

The Chairman stated that various union conferences had appointed as delegates medical members, who, joined by physicians in attendance, were to hold meetings for the consideration of this department of the General Conference work. The executive committee recommended the following-named physicians and men connected with institutional work to form the departmental committee on medical work during the sessions of the conference, and the recommendation of the committee was unanimously adopted by the conference as follows: —

Medical Department: Delegates already appointed from union conferences. Drs. Rand, Simmons, Martinson, Hayward, Colloran, Edwards, Hoenes, Nicola, George, Paulson, W. H. White.

Medical members hereby appointed delegates: Drs. Heald, Green, Froom, Hare, Ross, Fullmer, Farnsworth, Perrine, Swayze, and Neall.

Institutional workers on departmental committee, and delegate members where not already so appointed: F. M. Wilcox, W. C. White, A. E. Place, W. J. Fitzgerald, Smith Sharp, and W. C. Sisley.

It was voted that the usual standing committees should be nominated by the executive committee of the General Conference.

Meeting adjourned to 2:30 P. M.

A. G. DANIELLS, Chairman,
W. A. SPICER, Secretary.

AT any price give me the Book of God. I sit down alone, only God is here. In his presence I open and read his Book for this end, to find the way to heaven. — Wesley.

The Unity of the Spirit

Remarks by Mrs. E. G. White at the Opening of the Conference, Thursday Morning, May 11

I WANT to say a few words at the beginning of this conference. I feel a deep and intense desire that those who have come to this meeting shall not occupy their minds in investigating other souls. The work resting upon us as individuals should be taken up at this meeting. We are living in the great day of atonement, when every person should confess his sins, that the conviction of the Spirit of God may come to his heart. If you think that there is something standing between you and God, go to him, and ask him to help you to make the confession necessary in order that the wrong, whatever may be its character, may be taken out of the way. And ask him to help you not to repeat the wrong.

It was a question with me whether I should venture to attend this meeting, because of the condition of my health. I decided that I would make no promises; I would wait and see what the will of the Lord was in the matter. Night after night I seemed to be bearing this testimony: that there are those in our churches who need at this time the deep movings of the Spirit of God upon their hearts; and I decided to come to the conference.

Some pass over their wrong-doings, or, if they have confessions to make, they think that they will not confess, because to do this would lessen the confidence that their brethren have in them. God wants us to look to him, and to him alone, and have everything straight between our souls and God. We need to seek the Lord with all our hearts, that we may find him; we need to come into close relation with the cross of Calvary. We need to see Christ hanging upon that cross, making an atonement for our sins. When we see and understand our relation to Calvary, we shall know for ourselves something of the grief which, because of sin, Christ knew for us.

How can we do this? — "Repent . . . and be converted." This is our only hope of salvation. We are to stand in a repentant, confessing attitude, and then joy will fill our hearts.

Just as soon as you are impressed that there is something standing between you and God, or between you and your brethren, leave your gift before the altar of prayer, and do that which Christ has said you must do in order for the wrong to be taken out of the way. This is the first work that is to be done in this conference, if we expect the blood of Jesus Christ to be efficacious in our behalf. If we confess and forsake our sins, we shall come into that close relation to Jesus to which reference is made in the seventeenth chapter of John. We shall be one with Christ. This is the evidence that we are to give to the world that God sent his Son to save sinners. This is the result of the influence of the grace of God upon human hearts; and when the conviction of sin comes, then the light of the glory of God will be revealed. If we have a living union with God, we shall hate the sin that separates the soul from God.

The Lord does not want us to bring a sorrowful tone into our meetings. He desires praise. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me," he declares. We are to be always praising God. We need in our hearts the light of Christ; we need to know the joy of pardoned transgression and forgiven sin. If this joy is in us, we shall not be able to keep our lips closed during this conference, because we shall realize the greatness of the sacrifice made for us upon the cross. We shall realize that Christ bore our sins in his own body upon the tree. He was mocked and derided by those who ought to have received him. As he hung upon the cross, the leaders and rulers of the Jewish nation cried out: "He saved others; himself he can not save. If he be the King of Israel, let him now come down from the cross, and we will believe him."

When there are set before us things that are a cross for us to take up, we can never be one with Christ until we have lifted the cross. It may be the cross of confession, the cross of repentance, the cross of humiliation; but whatever it may be, let us remember that in lifting it, we are one with Christ, partakers of the divine nature. He suffered the agony, he endured the reproach, and he cried out, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?" It was because of our sins — because of your sins and mine — that he was thus afflicted.

When those in our churches commit sins, they should repent of them before God, and they should also repent of them before their brethren, asking the pardon that they will be willing to give. Then the light that shines from the face of Christ will shine upon them. Let us clear the King's highway; let us plead with God until we know that we have received pardon. He will give it to us. But if you cover up your sin, you will have less and less sense of its sinfulness, and you will go on in the same line. God will receive every one who will confess and forsake his sins, crucifying self by departing from iniquity.

The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ has been promised to all who will come to him in faith. You may say, I do confess my sins; but I do not feel any better. What has feeling to do with it? If you have confessed your sins, if you have planted your feet on vantage-ground, and are sorry for your sins, so sorry that you will not repeat them, you will receive pardon. Remember that when you sin, you wound afresh the One who gave his precious life for you, putting him to open shame. The world looks on, and says, "Ah, they are the ones who profess to believe that Christ is coming, and who profess to believe that the Lord forgives their sins; but do you see their conniving, their dishonesty, their sinfulness?" Christ is humiliated in the person of his saints. Let us not take that position. Let us consider that it is a noble thing to confess our faults, and to forsake them.

We expect to see the salvation of God in this meeting; but it will never come to those who cover up their wrongs, those who, catching perhaps a glimpse of light, think that it is all right, and that they have nothing more to do. You can never stand on vantage-ground by taking that attitude. It is through the rectitude, the grace, revealed by the disciples of Christ, that the world is to be led to believe on him. This is to be the convincing power. In this our day of confession, this last great day of atonement, before the books shall be opened, and every man shall be judged by the things written in the books, are we considering how we shall stand in the judgment, in that day when every deed is to be tried, and every act is to be brought into review before the heavenly universe? Let us not make play-work of our religious life. Is it not time that we believed that Christ died on Calvary, that he might forgive our sins and pardon our transgressions?

All through this meeting we want to hear voices saying, "He has pardoned my transgressions, he has forgiven my sins, and I am looking unto him, beholding him who is the author and finisher of our faith." We must stand where we shall not dare to take up a report against our brethren. Go right to the one you think has erred, and tell him his fault between him and you alone. Let this work be carried on, that there may be a coming closer and closer to God. Then you can speak of his pardon, and tell of his glory; and every voice can proclaim, "He has pardoned my transgressions, he has forgiven my sins, and I will praise him with heart, and soul, and voice."

All heaven is looking upon this company. All the heavenly angels are watching those assembled here. We greatly desire that the deep movings of the Spirit of God shall be felt upon human hearts. Last night I lay awake for hours, saying these very things. I could not keep them out of my mind. I was repeating the very words that I am speaking to you this morning. Clear the King's highway; take out the stumbling-blocks; remove the rubbish; clear away the stones, that the Spirit of God may go through our midst, and that we may see the salvation of God as a lamp that burneth. That is what we need. We can not afford to cover up one sin. We want the richest blessing here; for trial is coming right upon us. Only a little while, only a short time, and every one will be severely tried. We want a daily renewal of the grace of God in our hearts, that we may climb the ladder of perfection step by step, rising higher and higher in the way that leads to heaven, to holiness, and to God.

May the Spirit of God come into our meetings. May we see of his salvation, and may his glory be revealed here. Let every voice be raised to glorify God, not to pick flaws in one another. It is an individual work that we are to do. When this work is done, we shall hear the high praises of God in the midst of the sermon. This will not disturb the preacher at all, because the truth makes its application to the heart, to the mind, and to the conscience, and you will know that the word being spoken is inspired by the Spirit of God. Let every one take a firm hold upon God, and depart from iniquity, and the Lord will make your feet to stand upon high and holy ground.

Second Meeting

THE second meeting was called May 11, at 2:30 P. M., A. G. Daniells being in the chair.

Prayer was offered by G. A. Irwin.

The minutes of the previous meeting were read and approved.

Additional delegates had come since the roll-call, as follows: M. C. Wilcox, W. L. McNeely, H. C. Wilcox, O. O. Bernstein, C. M. Everest.

The president, A. G. Daniells, presented his address (published in last week's REVIEW), reviewing the progress and present outlook of the work.

An intermission of fifteen minutes was taken.

The hymn, "Watchman on the walls of Zion," was then sung, and prayer was offered by W. H. Wakeham.

I. H. Evans, treasurer of the General Conference, submitted the financial report which appeared in the last REVIEW, and which was unanimously adopted.

W. A. Spicer, secretary, presented a report on the general outlook in the mission fields which appears in another part of the paper.

Following the report, the meeting was opened for testimonies on the work before us. The keynote of the testimonies was as follows: —

G. A. Irwin: "My heart is cheered by the evidences of the progress of this message. Some suggested that I was too old to take my recent trip among the populous portions of Malaysia and Southeastern Asia, but I am not too old to want to be out on the extreme firing line. I have no desire, as much as I love the country of my birth, to return to it. I want to see this work closed up."

J. O. Corliss stated that his love for the message glows brighter than ever in these days when we begin to see the finishing of the work. He moved that portions of the reports of the President and Secretary be reprinted in leaflet form for use by laborers as they go among the churches.

O. A. Olsen seconded the motion to reprint the reports, and said that in the stirring situation before us he heard "the sound of a going in the tops of the mulberry trees."

D. T. Bourdeau: Entering upon his fiftieth year as a Sabbath-keeper, his word was, "Talk faith, let us venture as did ancient prophets and apostles, for God is the living God, and it is again the day of great things."

A. T. Robinson recounted the providential experience ten years ago in starting the Matabele Mission, and thanked God that now that mission is sending out trained workers.

W. J. Stone spoke of the hearty interest in the missionary advance in the home churches, and read a cheering paragraph from a letter from a sister in Ohio, reporting the determination that took possession of her church to work for missions more earnestly than ever as they heard of the death of Dr. Maude Miller in China.

S. N. Haskell: "From the beginning, the nature of this message has been to go into regions beyond. Whenever this forward policy has been halted, it has brought weakness. When Brethren White and Belden, in the early days, were mowing grass to get money for printing our first paper, the spirit of prophecy told them that they were to go ahead at once and prepare for publishing, for God would raise up friends, and this message would have its representatives in all the world. We see that fulfilled to-day.

"When, in the early days, believers in the Eastern States began to move westward, many felt troubled over the weakening of the forces in the East. But the spirit of prophecy then declared that this was of God; that these believers far witness to our efforts, and we must not be discouraged if there are others to mark our way among these unwarned millions. They are appeals, silent appeals, for more men and means to push and hasten on the work.

Needs

We have mentioned our need in Ceylon, and our duty to strengthen the forces there. We have also mentioned the need of men and means for the translation, publication, and circulation of literature in the vernacular. In fact, there is not a part or department of our work which does not need to be strengthened. While the work has widened out and taken a foothold in new places, the facts are, the number of foreign workers in India is less than it was two years ago. It would be difficult to express the feeling of joy and thanksgiving which came over the little band of workers met in council when the last workers reached India. It is expressed in the following resolution: —

"Whereas, Our people have nobly responded to our call for help from the home field, and have sent us seven workers in this hour of great need, therefore,—

"Resolved, That we express our united praise and thanksgiving to God, and extend to the General Conference and the Ohio Conference a vote of thanks and appreciation for this liberal donation of workers for the work in India."

At the same meeting another resolution was passed, which is as follows: —

"Whereas, We recognize the urgent call in Bombay, and the need of a minister to open up work in that great city,—

"Resolved, That we unite in an earnest appeal to the General Conference that such help be sent as soon as possible."

Bombay is waiting. For several years we have been hoping and praying that work might be opened up in this great city of nearly a million. With Madras, Lucknow, Lahore, and other cities of this mighty empire, she waits. The Hindu, the Parsee, the Mohammedan, the Buddhist, the Jain, are waiting, unknowing and unwarned. We may ask, How, by whom, and when shall these millions hear this last message? Some way, some how, and by some in this generation shall the final gospel call search out the honest hearted among these people.

This is the hour of opportunity in India. The hand of Providence has opened wide the door. While native rule prevailed, says Dufferin, "scarcely a twelvemonth passed without the fair fields of India being watered with the blood of thousands of her children." To-day India is in peace; from the Himalayas in the north to Cape Comorin in the south quiet reigns. Sixty million Moslems, more than three times the number under sultan rule, are at rest; and without fear and without government interference the gospel can now be carried to these people. Not necessarily need we go by the slow bullock cart of fifty years ago, but with railways running to every part may the final gospel call be carried.

Does not this make the present hour not only an hour of opportunity in India, but as well an hour of tremendous responsibility?

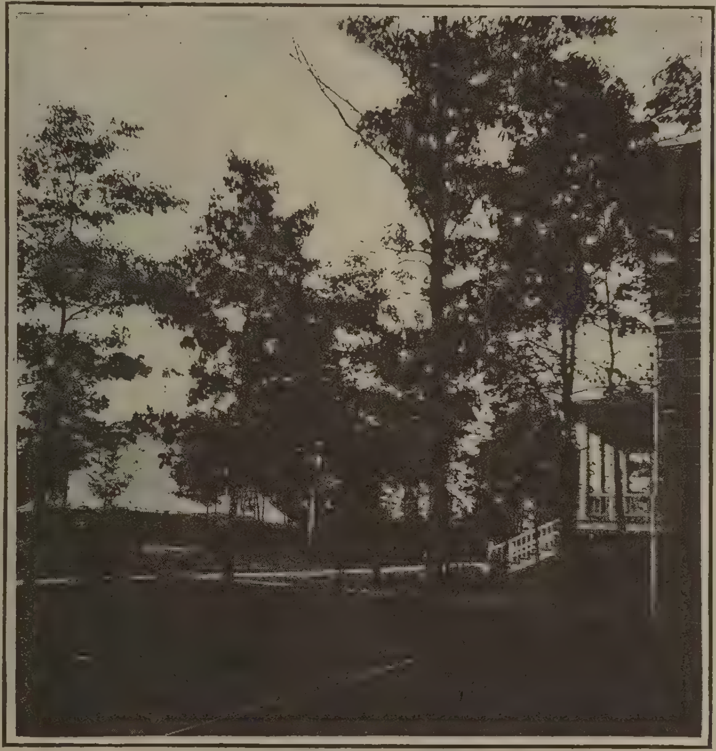
The Work for This Time

Development of the Interests at Washington

Address by Mrs. E. G. White before the Conference, Tuesday Afternoon, May 16

Our work for this time is a most solemn and important work. Let those who claim to believe the truth take into consideration the fact that unless the Holy Spirit is with them in the work which God has given them, they will lose a great blessing, and their efforts will be a failure. If there are those who think that it is their business to criticize the ones whom God has put in a certain place to open the way, that the truth shall be carried forward as it should be in the different places, let them know that they are doing a work which God has not appointed them. If there are those here who cherish the spirit of criticism, this meeting will be of very little advantage to them. What we need at this very time is that the Spirit of God shall be manifested among us.

Each one of us has all that he can do to overcome his own faults. Search out your own defects, and ask God to help you. Do not, for Christ's sake, excuse yourself from doing the very work that God has called you to do for yourself, and instead busy yourself trying to set some one else right. If each of you will take hold of Number One right at this meeting, the salvation of God will be revealed in a most marked manner. If this army of people would seek the Lord with heart and mind and soul, they would have something to say that would bring light and blessing and joy into the meeting.



A CONFERENCE IN THE WOODS

We are glad that we came to Washington a year ago, and spent some time here. We are thankful to the Lord that we know how the work started. I remember how, when we were living in the Carroll House, near the water-tower, the workmen would come over at half-past five every morning for a season of prayer. As often as I could, I met with this little company, speaking encouraging words to them. I felt so thankful that they would take the time every morning to seek the Lord. At these meetings we had singing and prayer, and a short Bible study. Sometimes several prayers would be offered, and earnest testimonies would be borne. We had evidence that the sweet Spirit of God came in among us. And the one who had charge of those working on the school land said that he had never had a company of workers who were more willing and ready to do all that it was possible for them to do. When I heard this, I thanked God.

How the Lord Has Led

It was with the greatest thankfulness that we watched the progress of the work; for we knew that the Lord had led us here. Do you not think that the building up of this work cost earnest thought? Do you not think that it meant diligent seeking of the Lord? If you have any inclination to pull the work here to pieces, and tell how it ought to have been done, I tell you that you should feel it your duty to see that you yourself are moving justly before God.

God has given to every man his work. He has given to every individual a certain work. If any of you have turned criticizer, you may be sure of one thing: that you will lose the blessing which you might have obtained had you rightly considered the work that your brethren have had to do in this new place. They have worked with all their strength to place things in such shape that the work could go forward. I have been given message after message for those who were standing at the head of the work here, for Elder Daniells and Elder Prescott, and for all connected with them in the work. The blessing of the Lord came upon me as I would write to them, saying, Be of good courage in the Lord. He is leading and guiding. He will bless you as you move forward. He will be your helper.

Suppose that our brethren had not come to Washington when they did. Suppose that they had dallied for six months or a year. What would have been the result? — The bill concerning Sunday legislation would have been slipped right in, and I do not know how long or how severe a battle we should have had to fight. But in the mercy of God our brethren were able to forestall this movement, although, in order to do this, they had to neglect other pressing work. I can assure you that their hands and hearts were full. They prayed, they reached out to God, and they sent out tracts and pamphlets everywhere. And wherever this reading-matter has gone, the light of the Sabbath truth has penetrated. Earnest work was done, and constantly our prayers ascended to God, that he would let his power rest upon every one engaged in the work.

A Burden for Souls

Those connected with the work labored in harmony. They did not stop to find fault with one another. Every one tried to press the battle to the gates. We were far away at the time, but every morning and evening our petitions ascended to God for the work in Washington, that from this important place the light of Sabbath truth might shine forth. We prayed that God would put upon men a burden to enter the other cities that have been so long neglected.

ENTRANCE TO THE ENCAMPMENT

God has men who understand the truth. If they would feel the burden of his work, and press forward, not waiting to have everything outlined before them, much more would be accomplished. If many of these gathered in Battle Creek, who have a knowledge of the truth, were scattered out into the different fields, and were working intelligently and earnestly for the Master in the neglected cities, many souls would be brought into the truth. I would give a great deal more for the education that is obtained through practical work than I would for that obtained by hearing, hearing, hearing, and doing nothing. There may be some who have done the work of the Lord in Battle Creek, but every time the matter is presented to me, the light given is that many should move out of Battle Creek, and out of other churches where large numbers of Sabbath-keepers are congregated, and go to work for the Master. (1)

There is a great work to be done, and we have felt so anxious, so full of hope and prayer, so full of earnest entreaty that the Lord would lead and guide. Night after night I have lain awake, unable to sleep, asking God for his mercy's sake to save those who are dying in their sins. The world is fast becoming as it was before the flood. My brethren and sisters, use your talent of speech, your influence, every jot of ability you have, in helping and strengthening others. Do not place your talents on the negative side, to discourage and dishearten others, but put your arms around those in need of help, and tell them that you will help them all you can. When the Holy Spirit rests upon you, you will understand what it means to have a burden for souls.

For many months I could not sleep past twelve o'clock. What was the matter? — The burden of the work in Washington was upon my mind. God had signified that the publishing work should be transferred from Battle Creek to Washington. He promised to demonstrate his power and grace, and this he has done. When the crisis regarding Sunday legislation came, our workers were right on the ground, prepared to act in a way that made them channels of light to others. If they had not been on the ground, the bill regarding Sunday legislation would have been pressed through, leaving our work in darkness and discouragement.

I want those present at this meeting to realize that it has meant a hard struggle to bring the work in this place to its present state of advancement. The Lord God has been at work. My brethren, instead of criticizing what has been done, save your speech for the great cities that have not yet been worked, such as New Orleans, Memphis, and St. Louis. Go to these places and labor for the people, but do not speak a word of censure regarding those who have tried so hard to do everything in their power for the advancement of the work. Sometimes these workers would be almost discouraged, but we kept praying for them. Wherever I was, I would ask the prayers of God's people in their behalf.

Let those who have any complaint to make, go right to the Lord, and ask him to give them a place where they can show what great things they can do, or else humble their hearts before God, and thank him for what he has done.

Erection of Buildings

I thank the Lord that I can meet you at this meeting. I am glad to see so many here. I know that the Lord is with those connected with this work. We were here when the buildings were first started, and we investigated everything as they went up. At the time, I was quite weak, but Brother Baird would take one of my arms and my son the other, and with their help I would walk up to where I could see what the foundation was, and how the walls were made. Again and again I went over the unfinished building, and as I now see some of them completed, I say, Thank the Lord with heart and soul and voice for what has been accomplished. I have felt almost afraid to touch this subject here, lest I should burst into tears before you all, I am so grateful to see so much done. I am glad to see such neat buildings. There is no extravagance, but everything has been done with thoroughness, as God has directed it to be. From the work on these buildings, the students have learned lessons which they can carry with them wherever they go. When I was here, I was so glad to see the workers, not discouraged, but thankful for an opportunity to work for the Lord. I looked with great satisfaction upon the work being done; for I knew that the blessing of God was resting upon the workers.

Opportunity after opportunity came to those in charge to gain advantage for the work. At one time they had a chance to buy lumber at so low a rate that thousands of dollars were saved. How was it that they were able to take advantage of this opportunity? — They had the money in their hands.

Yesterday I went for a short ride through the forest, and O, the trees — God's trees and God's forest — how beautiful they looked! The city is not the slightest temptation to me. And yet we must carry the truth to the cities. Tents are to be pitched in the most favorable places, and meetings held. (2) Let our workers pray the Lord to open the way that they may enter the large cities of the South, and labor as men taking down trees in the forest, as men earning a large amount of money. For they are. One soul saved is worth more than the whole world. If we can but take hold upon the arm of the Lord, success will attend our efforts. Christ gave his life on Calvary's cross to make it possible for human beings to be saved; and yet we are leaving the world without the knowledge of the truth that would make them wise unto salvation. What kind of an account will many have to settle with the Lord in the future?

I ask you never to find fault with what has been done here; for I have seen the angels of God working here, encouraging the workers, and leading them to lift their eyes to see their Redeemer and be strengthened. I have seen the angels of God on this ground with the youth and with the other workers. I have seen the power of God at work here, and I wish to tell you that I want this meeting to be an everlasting cure of your faultfinding and murmuring and trying to find some one to criticize. May God help us all to humble our hearts before him and be converted.

The Sanitarium and Educational Work

There is a great work to be done here. Brethren Daniells, Prescott, Washburn, Colcord, Warren, and others, but especially Brethren Daniells and Prescott,

(1) (2)

have worked amid difficulties in the (1) name of the Lord, and I know that the Spirit of God has been upon them. And though we have felt disappointed because means did not come in faster for the work in Washington, we have not complained, but have gone straight forward. The buildings have been put up as fast as possible. There is yet much to do. We must have a small sanitarium here, and we feel sure that the blessing of God will rest upon this branch of the work. The building will not be a large, expensive one, but just such as the Lord desires to see here.

It is the Lord's design that a training-school shall be conducted on these grounds. If there is a place anywhere in our world where there should be a school for the training of our youth to be efficient missionaries, it is here, where there is such an important field to be worked. We must make every effort to have a school of the highest order. Provision will have to be made for the very young, and also for intermediate students, in this vicinity. And we must reach the highest possible standard of perfection in the work of preparing students for the school above.

Let the complaints come if they will. Those who complain will find that this brings them nothing but barrenness of soul; for we are moving under the direction of the One who has given the gospel commission, and we intend to carry the work forward.

I call upon those who have been held at Battle Creek to gird on the armor. It is high time that they went forth into needy fields to labor for the Lord. It is not pleasing to God for them to stay in a place that has been worked over and over again, encouraging others to drift into Battle Creek to become unbelievers in the Testimonies God has given to his people, or perhaps infidels. Those who are fully established in the truth may gain a good education there, but there are others who go away infidels. By some, the truths that lie at the very foundation of our faith are being sacrificed.

Our Periodicals

God has given me light regarding our periodicals. What is it? — He has said that the dead are to speak. How? — Their works shall follow them. We are to repeat the words of the pioneers in our work, who knew what it cost to search for the truth as for hidden treasure, and who labored to lay the foundation of our work. They moved forward step by step under the influence of the Spirit of God. One by one these pioneers are passing away. The word given me is, Let that which these men have written in the past be reproduced. 1) And in The Signs of the Times let not the articles be long or the print fine. Do not try to crowd everything into one number of the paper. Let the print be good, and let earnest, living experiences be put into the paper.

Not long ago I took up a copy of the Bible Echo. As I looked it through, I saw an article by Elder Haskell and one by Elder Corliss. As I laid the paper down, I said, These articles must be reproduced. There is truth and power in them. Men spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit.

Let the truths that are the foundation of our faith be kept before the people. Some will depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. They talk science, and the enemy comes in and gives them an abundance of science; but it is not the science of salvation. It is not the science of humility, of consecration, or of the sanctification of the Spirit. We are now to understand what the pillars of our faith are,— the truths that have made us as a people what we are, leading us on step by step.

Early Experiences

After the passing of the time in 1844 we searched for the truth as for hidden treasure. I met with the brethren, and we studied and prayed earnestly. Often we remained together until late at night, and sometimes through the entire night, praying for light and studying the Word. Again and again these brethren came together to study the Bible, in order that they might know its meaning, and be prepared to teach it with power. When they came to the point in their study where they said, "We can do nothing more," the Spirit of the Lord would come upon me. I would be taken off in vision, and a clear explanation of the passages we had been studying would be given me, with instruction as to how we were to labor and teach effectively. Thus light was given that helped us to understand the scriptures in regard to Christ, his mission, and his priesthood. A line of truth extending from that time to the time when we shall enter the city of God, was made plain to me, and I gave to others the instruction that the Lord had given me.

During this whole time I could not understand the reasoning of the brethren. My mind was locked, as it were, and I could not comprehend the meaning of the scriptures we were studying. This was one of the greatest sorrows of my life. I was in this condition of mind until all the principal points of our faith were made clear to our minds, in harmony with the Word of God. The brethren knew that, when not in vision, I could not understand these matters, and they accepted, as light directly from heaven, the revelations given.

(2) Many errors arose, and though I was then little more than a child, I was sent by the Lord from place to place to rebuke those who were holding these false doctrines. There were those who were in danger of going into fanaticism, and I was bidden in the name of the Lord to give them a warning from heaven.

We shall have to meet these same false doctrines again. There will be those who will claim to have visions. When God gives you clear evidence that the vision is from him, you may accept it, but do not accept it on any other evidence; for people are going to be led more and more astray in foreign countries and in America. The Lord wants his people to act like men and women of sense.

Salvation in the Truth

(4) In the future, deception of every kind is to arise, and we want solid ground for our feet. We want solid pillars for the building. Not one pin is to be removed from that which the Lord has established. The enemy will bring in false theories, such as the doctrine that there is no sanctuary. This is one of the points on which there will be a departing from the faith. Where shall we find safety unless it be in the truths that the Lord has been giving for the last fifty years? (4)

I want to tell you that Christ lives. He makes intercession for us, and he will save every one who will come to him in faith and obey his directions. But remember that he does not want you to give your energies to criticism of your brethren. Attend to the salvation of your own soul. Do the work God has given you. You will find so much to do that you will have no inclination to criticize some one else. Use the talent of speech to help and bless. If you do the work God has given you, you will have a message to bear, and you will understand what is meant by the sanctification of the Spirit.

Do not think that Satan is not doing anything. Do not think that his army is passive. He and his agencies are on the ground to-day. We are to put on the whole armor of God. Having done all, we are to stand, meeting principalities and powers and spiritual wickedness in high places. And if we have on the heavenly armor, we shall find that the assaults of the enemy will not have (5) power over us. Angels of God will be round about us to protect us. I have the assurance of God that thus it will be. In the name of the Lord God of Israel I ask you to come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. If you do this, you will have on your side a strong helper, a personal Saviour. You will be covered with the shield of providence. God will make a way for you, so that you will never be overtaken by the enemy. I am praying that the power of the Saviour will be exerted in behalf of those who have entered into the temptations of the enemy. They are not standing under the broad shield of Omnipotence. My brethren, it is our privilege to stand under this shield.

Ninth Meeting

The ninth meeting was called at 4:30 p. m., May 16, the forenoon conference hour being taken up by the Review and Herald Publishing Association meeting, and the 2:30 hour being occupied by Sister White.

L. R. Conradi occupied the chair.

Prayer by J. W. Westphal. The minutes of the previous meeting were submitted.

(3) It was voted to waive consideration of recommendation 5, left pending at the last meeting, in order to listen to the reports of the Religious Liberty Department, which were interrupted by the heavy shower last Sunday. K. C. Russell, chairman, and W. A. Colcord, secretary, presented the reports (which appeared in the last issue). Live interest was manifested in the reports, and also in exhibits of petitions, letters, leaflets, newspapers, etc., dealing with the issues in Congress and elsewhere.

Before adjournment, it was announced that W. H. Wakeham, of Egypt, would report for the Oriental Mission at the 7:30 hour. (This report appears in this issue.)

Adjourned.

The Oriental Mission Field

THE field which I am supposed to represent is called the Oriental Mission Field; it consists of Turkey, including Asia Minor; Syria and Palestine; and Egypt — the historic field of the "king of the north" and the "king of the south." Practically, however, my field of labor is Egypt. And, though equally interested in all parts of this most needy field, I shall confine my report chiefly to the valley of the Nile, speaking only in general terms of other parts.

The Oriental Mission field has a population of about thirty million. The languages spoken are Turkish, Arabic, Greek, and Armenian — chiefly Turkish in the north and Arabic in the south. A very large majority of the people in all parts of this field are followers of the Arabian prophet. Since the subjugation of these countries by the Mohammedans in the seventh century, Christianity has made little progress there; and only in comparatively modern times has Protestantism obtained a foothold. The Armenians in Asia Minor, and the Copts in Egypt, are the remnants of the ancient Christian church; but how greatly they have fallen from the faith once delivered to the saints, their daily life, even more than their religious doctrines, sadly testifies. Roman and Greek Catholic churches are strongly entrenched in all the large cities, and in many of the smaller ones.

PANORAMIC VIEW OF THE CITY OF CAIRO, EGYPT

Protestant missions have made some progress in various parts of this field, and have done much in the way of education and civilization. The agents of the British and Foreign Bible Society have permeated all parts of this field, and report most gratifying results in the sale of Bibles and portions of the Word. Through all these agencies God is sowing the seed; and we have the assurance that his word will not return to him void.

For several years the truths of the third angel's message have been preached in various parts of this field, from Constantinople, through Asia Minor to Aleppo; in Beirut and vicinity; in Palestine, at Jaffa and Jerusalem; and in Egypt throughout its entire length, at different points. Two years ago, the total number of Sabbath-keepers in the entire field was two hundred and forty-six. At present there are two hundred and seventy, an increase of twenty-four. The tithe paid during the year 1904 was $1,327.54, or a little over five dollars per capita. When you remember that a very large majority of these Sabbath-keepers are of the tax-ridden, persecuted Armenians of Asia Minor, you will not wonder at the smallness of the amount.

I will now speak more particularly of Egypt. From ancient times, this country has been known as the "Land of Ham," as it was originally peopled by the descendants of the second son of Ham — Misraim — from which it takes its name, for the natives still call it Misr. This country consists of the valley of the Nile from the Mediterranean Sea on the north to the first cataract of the Nile, a distance of about one thousand kilometres, or six hundred and fifty miles. It is said to be the most densely populated country in the world, having ten million souls packed away in its numerous cities and villages.

Of this number, over nine million are Mohammedans, about seven hundred and twenty thousand Copts, and the remainder divided up among Protestants, Greeks, Roman Catholics, Armenians, and Jews. First among the Protestant churches in Egypt are the United Presbyterians, known there as the "American Mission." Their converts come almost entirely from the Copts, and number something over six thousand. Then there is the English Church; also a few companies of the Plymouth Brethren, and a few adherents of the Holiness Movement Church.

The fifty or sixty years of Protestant missionary work in Egypt have made but little impression on the Mohammedan, apparently, at least so far as converting him to Christianity is concerned. I have made some inquiry, and believe I am safe in saying that the genuine converts from Islamism to Christianity in Egypt can be counted on the fingers of one's hand. Very little real, aggressive missionary work is being done for them at present.

The average Egyptian is non-progressive. He has no enterprise. He acknowledges the fact, and while deploring it, makes no effort toward the betterment of his condition. He is a fatalist, has no ambition in the true sense, no independence. His highest goal is a government position, where he can draw a salary, and order about a servant. He does the least amount of work possible. The energetic business man of America will do more in a day than the average Egyptian will do in a week. In business his motto is, "The end justifies the means." His religion is Utilitarianism of a very low order. It is not wrong to steal from the government, nor from a rich man; because they can afford to lose what is taken. One quite intelligent native, a lawyer by profession, and for many years a member of the Protestant Church, expressed the general idea when he affirmed that it was not wrong to steal from God, as he could not be injured by anything that we could do. Of the people of Egypt, the Encyclopedia Britannica says: "Their vices are indolence, obstinacy, licentiousness, cupidity, envy, disregard for truth, and petty thieving, coupled with religious pride and hypocrisy." However, there are many bright exceptions to this dark picture; for the Egyptian has virtues as well as vices. But, on the whole, if judged by Western standards, the case seems almost hopeless. Were it not that God accepts the willing mind, according to that which a man hath, and not that which he hath not; that where little is given, little is required; above all, were it not that the gospel of Christ is a miracle-working, character-transforming power, we might well give up in despair. But we are assured that where sin abounds, grace doth much more abound. And so we still have hope for Egypt, the "basest of nations," and for the children of Misraim, for centuries groaning under the treble curse of Adam, Cain, and Canaan.

A beginning has been made. A little company of faithful souls at Alexandria, in charge of our Armenian worker, Brother G. K. Ouzonian, are doing what they can to let the light shine in that city, the second in size in Egypt. They are planning a general campaign, to scatter tracts all over the city, and they have promised to give liberally of their slender means in order to secure the necessary publications.

This little company has had some interesting experiences during the last two years. Satan has tried hard to destroy them, through outward persecutions and internal dissensions. But, through the blessing of God on the efforts put forth in their behalf, they are now in a good spiritual condition, are respected by those who before hated them, and are now ready to go to work for others. So there is now a pillar to the Lord in the border of Egypt.

In Cairo, where the most of our workers are located, a good impression has been made. Although prejudice was very marked and bitter when we went there, friendliness and some degree of interest are now manifested. A few, at least, are beginning to believe that we are in Egypt, not so much to start a new sect, as to help people to a higher plane of living — "to raise up the standard of many generations."

Cairo is the commercial, financial, religious, and educational center of this country. It is the heart, from which influences, like blood-currents, flow to every part, not only of Egypt, but of the of God," and that civil rulers are to be obeyed in all matters civil.

2. We are Protestants, taking the Bible as our only rule of faith and practise, and are generally acknowledged as such throughout the world, as is evidenced by the accompanying enclosures.

3. In view of the above, we respectfully request and petition your Excellency's government that our people throughout the Turkish empire be recognized as Protestants, and granted the same privileges as are accorded to other Protestant bodies in his Majesty's government.

Respectfully submitted,

The Work in Washington

A Talk by Mrs. E. G. White, Friday, May 19, at 10 A. M.

We feel very grateful to our Heavenly Father because he has moved by his Holy Spirit upon the minds of his people to give so liberally for the establishment of his work here in Washington. Every dollar of the money that has been sent in is needed. If God's people knew as I do the necessities of the cause in different parts of the great harvest-field, and if they felt as they should the urgency of the work, they would not permit of delay. I have seen workers on their knees, pleading with God to open the way for the truth to be proclaimed in places where souls, unwarned and unsaved, are perishing in their sins. There are houses of worship to be built, and in some places it is necessary that there be erected small sanitariums, that the higher classes may be reached.

There are those in the world upon whose hearts God is moving, and if they but knew the principles of present truth, they would heed the message for this time, and would go forth to give it to others.

The money that has been sent in for the work here is the Lord's. The gold and the silver are mine, he declares, and the cattle upon a thousand hills. God bids us deny ourselves in the expenditure of means, and put into his treasury the money thus saved.

I thank the Lord for these gifts. Those who have sent them are in so doing fastening themselves to God's work. As they give of their means, their interest in the progress of God's cause is deepened, and the act of giving thus becomes a double blessing. I feel so grateful for what has been done, because, in figures and representations, I have seen the necessity of help in foreign fields, and also in the Southern field; and I know that the Lord will move upon hearts in the large cities that have not yet been worked. We must not leave these cities unworked; but the very first necessity is right here in Washington. The work in this important place must be established. A publishing house must be erected here. God directed that the publishing work should be transferred from Battle Creek to this place. He will place his approval on the efforts made to carry forward his work on the lines that he has marked out.

The establishment of the work here in Washington is creating a wide-spread interest in other places. Tracts and pamphlets have been widely circulated, and when we begin to work in other cities, we shall find those who have been studying this literature. We shall find that they are not utterly ignorant of our truth, but that they have been studying the facts regarding the establishment of our work here. As people read of what has been done, they say, "That means work, and we must learn more of what this people is doing."

The work that has been done here would never have been accomplished had there not been a determined effort to press the battle to the gates.

I am thankful that the Lord has not left us in ignorance of how to gain his blessing. Read the eighth and ninth chapters of Second Corinthians, and you will find the whole matter outlined in a few words. Read how the believers came to the apostles, and laid their offerings at their feet, praying them with much entreaty that they would receive the gift. When God by his Spirit stirs the hearts of his people, leading them to see the necessities of his work, there will be a denying of self, and gifts will flow into the treasury for the proclamation of the truth for this time.

If there are those who think that they are making large sacrifices for the work, let them consider the sacrifice that Christ made in their behalf. The human race was under sentence of death, but the Son of God clothed his divinity with humanity, and came to this world to live and die in our behalf. He came to stand against the host of fallen angels. We must have a Defender, and when our Defender came, he was clothed with humanity; for he must be subject to all the temptations wherewith man is beset, that he might understand how to deliver the godly out of temptation. He took his stand at the head of the fallen race, that men and women might be enabled to stand on vantage-ground.

Christ did not come to this world with a legion of angels. Laying aside his royal robe and kingly crown, he stepped down from his high command, and for our sake became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. This was the plan laid in the heavenly courts. The Redeemer of mankind was to be born in poverty, and he was to be a worker with his hands. He labored with his father at the carpenter's trade, and into all that he did he brought perfection. His companions sometimes found fault with him because he was so thorough. What is the use of being so particular? they said. But he would work until he had brought what he was doing as near to perfection as he could, and then he would look up with the light of heaven shining from his face, and those who had criticized him would turn away ashamed of themselves. Instead of retaliating when found fault with, he would begin to sing one of the psalms, and before those who had found fault with him realized it, they, too, were singing.

Never should botch work of any kind be allowed in our institutions. Every student should be taught that in order to attain to perfection in character building, he must be faithful in the smallest duties appointed him. "Ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building," and your work is to be done as in the sight of a holy God. Do your best, and heavenly angels will help you to carry the work on to perfection.

Who was He who came to our world to redeem the fallen race? Isaiah tells us: "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

Let us make it known that provision has been made for our redemption. Christ left the heavenly courts, and came to this world to make an atonement for us. All who come to him in living faith will be enabled to stand on vantage-ground.

As God's servants proclaim these things, Satan steps up to some who have itching minds, and presents his scientific problems. Men will be tempted to place science above God. But who by searching can find out God? Men may put their own interpretation upon God, but no human mind can comprehend him. This problem has not been given us to solve. Let not finite man attempt to interpret Jehovah. Let none indulge in speculation regarding his nature. Here silence is eloquence. The omniscient One is above discussion.

[Christ is one with the Father, but Christ and God are two distinct personages. Read the prayer of Christ in the seventeenth chapter of John, and you will find this point clearly brought out. How earnestly the Saviour prayed that his disciples might be one with him as he is one with the Father. But the unity that is to exist between Christ and his followers does not destroy the personality of either. They are to be one with him as he is one with the Father.] (1) By this unity they are to make it plain to the world that God sent his Son to save sinners. The oneness of Christ's followers with him is to be the great, unmistakable proof that God did indeed send his Son into the world to save sinners. But a loose, lax religion leaves the world bewildered and confused.

My brethren and sisters, take your stand on an elevated platform, and work to the point to be one with Christ. The heart of the Saviour is set upon his followers' fulfilling God's purpose in all its height and depth. They are to be one with him, even though they are scattered the world over. But God can not make them one in Christ unless they are willing to give up their own way for his way.

In view of all that Christ has suffered for us, should we complain when we are called to endure self-denial and suffering? Would not this make God ashamed of us? Let us rejoice that it is our privilege to be partakers of Christ's suffering; for thus only can we be fitted to be partakers of his glory.

I thank God in behalf of those who have sent in their offerings to the work in Washington. I thank him for the privilege and satisfaction of knowing that there are hearts which are alive to the needs of the work of God, and are influenced by the Holy Spirit to give of their means for the advancement of this work. I thank God with heart and soul and voice. The work in this place is to be carried forward solidly. In the buildings that are put up, there is to be no extravagance, but the representation is to be such that those in the world will see that we understand what propriety is.

Brethren and sisters, let us have characters so pure and holy that Christ can with joy present us to the Father. Let us be filled with the living principles of the truth for this time. Let us live lives that will lead sinners to the Saviour. Christ carried his humanity with him into the heavenly courts, and all humanity can claim him as their representative. We may be made complete in him. How? — By becoming partakers of the divine nature. To be partakers of this nature means more than many of us realize. It means giving up one's own way, and following the path that Christ has marked out. As we become partakers of the divine nature, we escape the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Commentary, Vol. 5 (1) p. 1148

Twentieth Meeting

The twentieth meeting was called at 3:30 P. M., the first hour being taken by Sister White, who read from manuscript messages that had come when she was in Australia, bearing specially on the medical missionary work.

In closing, she urged house-to-house work by all the people. The Lord desires us to do a hundredfold more than is being done. Satan is much busier than the children of light. The Lord promises to lift up a standard against the enemy, and he calls on us now to come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

The minutes were called for and read. The unfinished partial report of the committee on plans was taken up and adopted as follows: —

27. Resolved, That the course of study, requirements for entering the schools and for graduation, be referred to a standing committee on training-schools for nurses, and we recommend that this committee consist of the General Conference medical missionary secretary and the superintendents of organized nurses' training-schools.

28. Whereas, The work of nursing is an important part of the great work of introducing and carrying forward the gospel of Christ, therefore,—

We recommend, That our nurses' training-schools seek a closer co-operation with their respective conferences with a view of enlisting as fully as possible the services of nurses in missionary work; and further,—

29. We recommend, To our union or local conferences the establishment of nurses' agencies for the purpose of securing suitable employment for all our graduate nurses.

On the latter recommendation it was explained that these agencies might be a bureau of information, a means of keeping in touch with trained nurses.

On Finances

Further reports being called for, the committee on finance made a partial report, which was read by its secretary, C. P. Bollman.

The first recommendation, with a series of sections on tithes and offerings, was considered, but not adopted, as the time for adjournment came while it was under consideration, the last section having been read, but not discussed. The entire recommendation will be incorporated in the minutes when disposed of.

There was earnest discussion of the tithe question in the consideration of this report. It was felt that there was need for crying aloud among all believers in view of the evident fact that we are far from reaching a full tithe. A. G. Daniells presented carefully prepared estimates showing that a full tithe would add a vast sum to the treasury of this cause. Some of the foreign field averages were cited as showing that with the same faithfulness among the believers in this country, hundreds of thousands of dollars more would be received, available for advanced missionary effort. It was evident that, for the sake of those who are shutting away God's blessing by neglect in this matter, and for the sake of the work of God, a great effort must be made throughout the conferences to arouse all to the solemn importance of this sacred obligation. This is a duty the ministry, as the Lord's watchmen, owe to the people. Many feel diffident about taking up the financial side of gospel truth. It was not so in former days. We need a revival on this matter; conference officers and ministers must labor earnestly to bring the ranks into line with gospel finance in this time when the work is closing, and when men's souls are being weighed in the balance of the judgment.

The meeting adjourned, it being stated that E. H. Gates would report for Polynesia at the evening service. (The report appeared in the last issue.)

H. W. Cottrell, Chairman,
W. A. Spicer, Secretary.

Twenty-First Meeting

The twenty-first meeting was called at 9:30 A. M., May 24, Elder J. N. Loughborough acting as chairman pro tem in the opening of the meeting.

Prayer was offered by M. C. Wilcox. It was then announced that the session would be devoted to the Publication Department, and W. C. White, chairman of the department, was given the chair. He called for the departmental secretary's report, which was presented by H. H. Hall, as follows: —

Publication Committee's Report for 1903-04

Through our publications every Seventh-day Adventist may assist in carrying the third angel's message to the world in this generation. To emphasize this truth has been the one great aim of your publication committee. Among the efforts put forth to accomplish this aim have been the following: —

Missionary Campaigns.—Three great missionary campaigns have been conducted during the past two years. At the beginning of 1903 four tracts were printed, and our people were encouraged to distribute them systematically. As the result, nearly a million copies were circulated. Near the close of that year the Capital and Labor number of The Signs of the Times was issued, and more than a half million were placed in the homes of the people. But the times demanded greater efforts, so when the campaign for the fall of 1904 was planned, the following clarion note was sounded: —

"We recommend that a mighty missionary campaign be inaugurated this fall which shall know no cessation until this gospel of the kingdom is carried to every nation, tongue, and people."

During the first battle of this campaign nearly a half million copies of the Gospel Series of The Signs of the Times, 120,000 of the Southern Watchman, 116,000 of the foreign papers, and 200,000 special tracts were circulated, and a large work done with forty-per-cent books. One of the most encouraging features of this battle is the fact that thousands of our people found that they could actually fight. Having scented the powder, and learned the need of soldiers, they have decided to remain on the fighting line until the close of the war.

Missionary Conventions.— At these conventions various topics of missionary interest are discussed. These topics are announced one or two weeks before the meeting, and different individuals are asked to lead in their discussion, after which all are invited to make suggestions and relate experiences. Our observations lead us to believe that these gatherings have been very helpful in suggesting definite plans for local work.

Meeting of the Publication Committee.— The General Conference Publication Committee held a meeting at Omaha, Neb., March 2-8, 1904. Not only were important actions taken, but a spirit of unity was brought into our publishing work. One very important recommendation looking toward the encouragement of an army of home workers was passed. This recommendation sets apart the following small books for their use: —

Education, Mount of Blessing, Steps to Christ, Cobblestones, Vegetarian Cook-Book, Little Folks' Bible Nature, Things Foretold, Power for Witnessing, Thoughts on Daniel (paper), Thoughts on Revelation (paper), Great Nations of To-day (paper).

A discount of fifty per cent is given on these books to those who canvass for them. If our home membership would make the most of this opportunity, the circulation of our books would soon be doubled.

Reduction in Bindings.— A recommendation favoring a reduction in bindings of our large subscription books was enthusiastically passed, and is being carefully considered by our various publishing houses at the present time.

Actions favoring (1) a net price on all books and pamphlets intended primarily for our own people, (2) a net price on all forty-per-cent books, except to those who canvass for them, (3) a twenty-five-per-cent discount to our people on all regular subscription books, were also taken, and are coming into general operation. This will solve many perplexing problems concerning discounts.

Bookmen's Convention.— A bookmen's convention was held at Mountain View, Cal., having for its primary purpose the upbuilding of the missionary work in the Pacific Union Conference. Practical suggestions were made concerning all lines of missionary work, and particular attention was given to our large subscription-book business. Brother E. R. Palmer gave a talk on "The State Agent and the Basic Principles of His Work," W. B. Scott sounded the call for the return of old canvassers, Brother James Cochran read a paper on "How to Secure and Retain Agents," Brother and Sister J. L. McGee, and W. R. Beatty told of their work in the cities with "Desire of Ages," and A. D. Guthrie gave an inspiring account of his two years' work in northern Utah and southern Idaho. Altogether, it was a meeting long to be remembered, and one that has given an impetus to the sale of large subscription books on the coast.

THIRTY-SIXTH SESSION MAY 11-30

Lessons From the Second Chapter of Philippians

Talk by Mrs. E. G. White, May 13, 1905

"If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind."

I address those who have the light of the knowledge of Bible truth. Are you obeying the instruction given in the words I have read? Are you of one mind and one heart in Christ?

There are many points that might be dwelt upon, but there is one that I wish to speak about especially. It is regarding the necessity of our working together in unity. One year ago I visited this ground. It was then a wilderness. You can all see what God has enabled the workers to accomplish because they were of one mind. Every one has done all in his power to lift. And our people in the different States have sent in their gifts for the establishment of the work in Washington.

I well remember how, when we were living in the Carroll House, near the water-tower, the young men working on the school land would meet together in a large room in this house at half-past five every morning for family worship. As we worshiped God together, we knew that the Holy Spirit was among us. We sought the Lord with the whole heart, and he came very near to us. We presented the promise, "Ask, and it shall be given unto you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Is not this assurance strong enough? We took this promise with us into the place of prayer, asking the Lord to lead and direct in the work to be done here. Only one year has passed since then, and much has been accomplished.

If there are any of you who have weak faith, remember that it is because you do not work on the affirmative side. It is of no use for us to think that we can carry forward the glorious work of God without strong, unfaltering faith. The world is fast becoming as it was in the days of Noah. Satan is working with intensity of effort, knowing that he has but a short time. Wickedness prevails to an appalling extent. God's people are but a handful, compared with the ungodly, and we can gain success only as we co-operate with the heavenly angels, who will go before all who press forward to do that which God has said should be done.

I thank the Lord for the privilege of speaking to so many at this meeting. When I think of all that God has done for us, I say, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." As the work is opened up in the various places, may we ever remember that we are to draw in even cords. Those who have educated themselves to stand on the negative side should without delay repent and be converted. Let this conversion take place right on this ground. Remember that when you stand on the negative side, accusing and condemning, you make room for the agencies of the power of darkness. Precious time has to be spent in waging war against these agencies, because there were those who refused to stand on the affirmative side.

Is it not best to be in harmony with the God of heaven? When you see your brethren striving to press the battle to the gates, is it not best to say, "Advance, advance. Carry the work forward with greater power than ever before"?

"Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory." Satan is behind all strife and vainglory. Let us get out of his company, and stand with those who say, "Victory is for us, and we will cling to the arm of infinite power."

"In lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves." If we would obey these words, we should find our work easier. We should find that we could accomplish very much more than we can when hindered by strife and discord.

"Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others." Do not try to gain every advantage for yourselves. I thank God for the evidence that our people are unselfishly trying to help in the establishment of the work in Washington. I am thankful that the school buildings are so nearly completed, and that we now have an institution in this place in which students may be trained for service. I pray that from this school young men and young women may be prepared to go forth into the world as consecrated missionaries.

"Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

[Laying aside his royal robe and kingly crown, Christ clothed his divinity with humanity, that human beings might be raised from their degradation, and placed on vantage-ground. (1) [Christ could not have come to this earth with the glory that he had in the heavenly courts. Sinful human beings could not have borne the sight. He veiled his divinity with the garb of humanity, but he did not part with his divinity. A divine-human Saviour, he came to stand at the head of the fallen race, to share in their experience from childhood to manhood.] (1) [That human beings might be partakers of the divine nature, he came to this earth, and lived a life of perfect obedience.] (2)

There is no need for the world to be as it is to-day — filled with war and bloodshed, violence and crime. Christ has made provision for the salvation of every soul. He gave his life for the life of the world, and John declares, "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God." This is the gift of heaven to all who truly believe. In view of these things, how can men and women choose to receive the father of lies, and to cherish his spirit?

It is because human beings have chosen to listen to the tempter that we see men and women partaking of that which robs them of their reason. In our large cities there are saloons on the right hand and on the left, tempting passers-by to indulge an appetite which, once established, is exceedingly hard to overcome. The youth should be trained never to touch tobacco or intoxicating drink. Alcohol robs men of their reasoning powers. Watch that man entering the saloon. His eye is bright, and his step steady. Watch him as he comes out. The brightness has gone from his eye, and as he walks, he staggers from side to side. He is drunk,— a specimen of the work done by the saloon.

The home of a drunkard tells the sad story of the evil wrought by the use of strong drink. Wretchedness and destitution reign, and often the wife and children suffer from cold and hunger. And yet the liquor traffic is legalized. Heaven sees it all. God keeps a record of the men robbed of their reason, and the homes made wretched, by the use of alcohol. In that great day when every man will be judged according to the deeds done in the body, what will those who have legalized the liquor traffic say in excuse for allowing these places of death to be kept open?

God grant that we may be wide-awake to this awful evil. May he help us to labor with all our power to save men and women and youth from this effort of the enemy to ensnare them. We do not take into the church those who use liquor or tobacco. We can not admit such ones. But we can try to help them to overcome. We can tell them that by giving up these harmful practises, they will make their families and themselves happier. Those whose hearts are filled with the Spirit of God will feel no need for stimulants. The Lord is high and lifted up, and his train fills the heavens. Those who are overcomers here will one day see him as he is; for we read, "We know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is." They will sing the song of redemption in the heavenly courts.

(2) Here in this world we are to gain a preparation for a life in the kingdom of God. Our youth must be trained to habits of strict temperance and self-denial. May God help us to stand in unity,

Commentary, Vol. 5 p.1128 (1)

Ques. on Doct., p. 649, 55 (2)

warring against the powers of darkness that are pressing in on every side.

Christ has done everything in his power to redeem human beings. In our behalf he made an infinite sacrifice. For our sake he became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich. Enduring riches, an eternal weight of glory, is the boon he offers to those who will accept him. Is it not a sufficient inducement? Will man strive against his Maker? (1)

May God help us at this meeting to be converted. You may say, If we are church-members, that does not belong to us. But does it not? What are you doing to lift up those who are fallen? There ought to be a thousand where now there is but one trying to prepare the way of the Lord, to make straight in the desert a highway for our God. We have great light. "Ye are the light of the world," Christ declared. It is by letting our light shine that we are to glorify God. Clear and distinct the light of present truth is to shine forth from God's people, piercing the darkness that envelops the world.

It is that light may shine forth that we are establishing institutions here. The school buildings are almost finished, and soon a sanitarium must be erected, to which we can bring the sick and afflicted, and tell them of Christ and his power to save. We should every one stand where we can uplift and bless. We are to speak words that will comfort and encourage. Brethren and sisters, train yourselves to speak in pleasant, agreeable tones. It does no harm, but good, to speak kindly, but to speak discourteously and roughly drives the holy angels away in sadness.

May God help us all to take a right position. May he help us not to spoil our lives and the lives of others by being unconsecrated. May he help us to conquer the inclination to follow the impulses of the unsanctified heart. We can not afford to follow these impulses. We are to be judged according to the deeds done in the body.

Being found in fashion as a man, Christ "humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name that is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

We are to confess Christ before the world because he gave his life for us. He died that we might receive strength to stand against the temptations by which we shall be beset. Those who receive Christ are made heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ to an immortal inheritance.

We have only a little while in which to prepare for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. We have not a moment to lose. We need to begin at once to gain a preparation to enter the courts above. God will help all who will help themselves. But if you sit down under Satan's shadow, and let him tempt you to look on the objectionable side, and to weaken the hands of those who are trying to carry forward the work of the Lord, how can you hope to gain the victory over temptation? You can not be a joint heir with Christ unless you have his spirit, and are determined to gain (2) heaven at any cost. Those who regardless of all else, place themselves in God's hands, to be and do all that he would have them, will see the King in his beauty. They will behold his matchless charms, and, touching their golden harps, they will fill all heaven with rich music and with songs to the Lamb.

I am glad to hear the musical instruments that you have here. God wants us to have them. He wants us to praise him with heart and soul and voice, magnifying his name before the world.

I thank God that there are those here who have had an experience in self-denial and sacrifice. They know what it means to be counted fools for Christ's sake. But in heaven their names are recorded as those who love God and keep his commandments.

"Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world; holding forth the word of life; that I may rejoice in the day of Christ, that I have not run in vain, neither labored in vain."

God would have us help one another to be of good cheer. Keep your eyes fixed on Jesus. By beholding, you will be changed into the same likeness, from character to character.

"Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy, and rejoice with you all. For the same cause also do ye joy, and rejoice with me."

God wants you to praise him far more than you do. Read the Psalms, and you will see that by offering praise you glorify God. Educate the voice to offer him thanksgiving. Thus you will bring strength and courage to those around you. I pray that at the very beginning of this meeting the salvation of God may be revealed. Brethren and sisters, open the door of the heart and let the Saviour in. Then you will praise God with heart and soul and voice. I thank God that it is our privilege to use our voices in this service, to speak words in season to those that are weary.

While on my way to this meeting, I had the privilege of speaking to some of the Saviour's love. I asked one young man to give up the use of tobacco. "I can not," he said; "it is so soothing." "But," I said, "it is robbing you of your sense of right and wrong. You say that you are teaching in a Sunday-school. What influence do you think your example of smoking has on the members of your class?" Before we left the car, he came to me, and told me that I must not be surprised to hear that he had given up the use of tobacco. I gave this young man a copy of "Steps to Christ," and he seemed much pleased with it.

God wants us to work for humanity. We have an onward work to do. Let us put on the whole armor of righteousness, revealing Christ in thought, word, and deed. Let us remember that we are laborers together with God. Brethren and sisters, let self be crucified, and let Christ live in you, the hope of glory. Keep reaching forward. Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. The work of righteousness is to be wrought in you through the mighty power that God has given. When in weakness and feebleness you say, "Lord, I lay hold upon thee," power from above will be given you.

"If ye then be risen with Christ, seek those things which are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God." What were the words spoken as you took part in the solemn rite of baptism? —"In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit." You were buried with Christ in baptism, and raised to newness of life. And the three great powers of heaven pledged themselves to co-operate with you in your efforts to live the new life in Christ. Then should we not praise him with every breath?

Let us cast aside all murmuring and repining, and be filled with the spirit of praise. Let us draw in even cords with Christ. He is coming soon, and we must be ready to meet him in peace. Let us repent and be converted. Let us place ourselves on the altar of service. I beg of you, my brethren and sisters, to bring Christ into your hearts and into these meetings. Then there will be rejoicing such as you have never before heard, and you will be gaining a fitness for the heavenly home, where God's redeemed ones will sing the song of victory.

Biennial Report of the Atlantic Union Conference

THE organization of what is now known as the Atlantic Union Conference was effected at the General Conference, April 16, 1901. It embraces the local conferences of Maine, Vermont, Central New England, Southern New England, Greater New York, New York, New Jersey, Eastern Pennsylvania, Western Pennsylvania, Chesapeake, Virginia, and West Virginia. Its area is 248,778 square miles; its population is 26,300,754; and its denominational constituency is 8,516.

Every phase of our work is supposed to be evangelical, and is prosecuted in various ways. The evangelical minister, with Bible in hand, takes his position on the frontier in the open field. The Bible worker goes from home to home, planting seeds of truth, which alone can endure the spiritual dearth of this age. Everywhere, like leaves of autumn, the canvasser and colporteur scatter the printed page containing the

THIRTY-SIXTH SESSION MAY 11-30

The Need of Home Religion[*]

"BEHOLD what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not. Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be: but we know that, when he shall appear, we shall be like him; for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. Whosoever committeth sin transgresseth also the law: for sin is the transgression of the law. And ye know that he was manifested to take away our sins; and in him is no sin. Whosoever abideth in him sinneth not: whosoever sinneth hath not seen him, neither known him." It is impossible for us to have Christ abiding in our hearts unless we constantly behold him.

"Little children, let no man deceive you: he that doeth righteousness is righteous, even as he is righteous. He that committeth sin is of the devil; for the devil sinneth from the beginning. For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil. Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin; for his seed remaineth in him; and he can not sin, because he is born of God."

In the second chapter of his epistle John says, "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world."

This means that we have a world on our hands. It is of no use for us to think that we can follow our preferences or natural tendencies. We have a world on our hands, and we are to make known the saving principles of our Lord Jesus Christ,— the principles that have been committed to us to impart to the world. God wants us to be faithful stewards of the grace of Christ.

"Therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew him not." It does not understand the principles that underlie our course of action. We must stand before God with a conscience void of offense. There are wonderful privileges for every one of us. God never places before us a requirement without giving us the power to perform it. He never asks us to take one step in advance of him. He leads the way, and we are to follow after. Following him, we are in no danger of going astray. Thus only can we perfect a Christian character as stewards of the grace of God.

To us has been entrusted the truth of the gospel for this time. It is a wonderful, wonderful treasure, and the Lord desires us to have our eyes enlightened and our hearts quickened. He desires us to be nerved and strengthened by the power that he will give us if we will only be true to him. He desires every one of us to perfect a character after the divine similitude. The Christian who does not do this casts reflection on God. He dishonors his Saviour. Those who have access to the words written in the Scripture are without excuse if they do not apply these words to themselves, if they do not thus cleanse their hearts from sin. By the light shining from the throne of God upon our pathway, we shall be judged at the last great day.

"Woe unto thee, Chorazin! woe unto thee, Bethsaida!" Christ said; "for if the mighty works, which were done in you, had been done in Tyre and Sidon, they would have repented long ago in sackcloth and ashes. But I say unto you, It shall be more tolerable for Tyre and Sidon at the day of judgment, than for you."

To have light shining upon the pathway in the clearness of the gospel of Christ, as it has shone upon our pathway, is a fearful responsibility. We are to follow on step by step, with our eyes fixed on our Leader. He will not lead us one step out of the right way.

God gave Christ to our world to save us from eternal death. Behold him, behold him! Keep looking upon him till you reflect his image. Do not accept the words of any man, unless you can see that he is conformed to the divine image, because if you do, you sustain him in doing wrong; you sustain him by asking his counsel and following his directions. What we need is the word pure from the holy Bible. Christ has bidden us conform our lives to his life. We are to know what it means to keep the commandments of God in truth and righteousness. The love that was in the heart of Christ is to be in our hearts, that we may reveal it to those around us. We need to be daily strengthened by the deep love of God, and to let this love shine forth to those around us.

Brethren and sisters, you are to reveal this love from the very beginning of the married life. It is to be the guiding principle in the family. Let your children see that you are controlled by the Spirit of God. Every member of the family is to be brought under subjection to the will and way of God.

I want you to think of the education that is to be given in the home. This education begins with the parents. They are to build the home after the pattern that Christ has given them. They are to teach what Christ taught, to bless what Christ blessed, and to correct what Christ corrected. Sin is not to dwell in the mortal bodies of those who have committed themselves, body and soul, to Christ.

There is no middle ground presented before us. The cross of Calvary is the great center of the plan of salvation; and we are to begin to crucify self at once, that we may be preparing for a place in the redeemed family in the heavenly courts. What we need is the saving power of the grace of Christ day by day. This saving grace is to begin its work in our homes. Not an angry word is to fall from the lips of parents. They are to be constantly under the influence of the Holy Spirit. They are to realize that they are the teachers of their children, and that they are to reveal the kindness, tenderness, and love of Christ. And yet they are not to overlook the faults of their children. They are not to gratify their wishes simply because they desire gratification. This is not the way to train children for God. Children are made happy by being brought under right control. The most unhappy children I have ever seen were those who had never been brought under control.

You may talk to your children about bringing them under the control of God, but it will not have any influence on them unless you first teach them to obey you, and unless they can see that you yourselves are under the control of God.

Parents, you have a church in your home, and God demands that you bring into this church the grace of heaven, which is beyond computation, and the power of heaven, which is without measure. You can have this grace and this power if you will. But you must educate yourselves in accordance with your baptismal vows. When you took these vows, you pledged yourself, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, that you would live unto God, and you have no right to break this pledge. The help of the three great powers is placed at your disposal. When in the name of Christ you ask for grace to overcome, it will be given you; for the promise is, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." Yes, seek God for aid. If you are in perplexity, do not go to your neighbors. Learn to carry your troubles to God. If you seek, you will find; if you knock, it will be opened unto you. But this means faith, faith, faith. Exercise living faith in Christ, and do not, I beg of you, step aside out of the right way.

Your home is to be an example of what a Christian home should be. You are to bring your children up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. You are to overcome the faults which wrestle for the victory, and which, unless overcome, will separate you from God.

[*] A talk by Mrs. E. G. White, May 27, 1905.

The father and mother are to be respected in the Christian home. The father is the priest and house-band of the home. The mother is the teacher of the little ones from their babyhood, and queen of the household. Never is she to be slighted. Never are careless, indifferent words to be spoken to her before the children. She is their teacher. In thought and word and deed the father is to reveal the religion of Christ, that his children may see plainly that he has a knowledge of what it means to be a Christian.

Brethren and sisters, are you doing your God-given work in the home? Are you allowing your sons and daughters to shun the responsibilities that properly belong to them? Does your daughter sit at a musical instrument, while the mother does the cooking? Do the little ones go to the mother for everything, when the older ones ought to be taught to share the burden of caring for them, that the mother may have time to rest? Many mothers die years before their time because they have had to carry the burdens that ought to have been willingly borne by younger shoulders.

(1) Children are to be educated to deny themselves. At one time, when I was speaking in Nashville, the Lord gave me light on this matter. It flashed upon me with great force that in every home there should be a self-denial box, and that into this box the children should be taught to put the pennies they would otherwise spend for candy and other unnecessary things. They are to be taught that there is a great work to be done for a needy, suffering people, even the colored people of the Southern States. To them we must present the truth for this time. We are to take up intelligently the work of helping them. A good work has already been done with these self-denial boxes, and let no one lift a finger to hinder this work. Let no one speak a discouraging word regarding it; for it is God's plan, and thus he has said that help should be sent to the work for the colored people.

(1) You will find that as the children place their pennies in these boxes, they will gain a great blessing. They will tell the children of neighboring families what they are doing, and the way will open for these boxes to be placed in other homes. We are not to do anything to discourage this work. Every member of the family, from the oldest to the youngest, should practise self-denial. As the children of such families grow up, they understand something about mission work, because they are taught what it means to deny self in order that souls may be brought into the truth. They are taught that the money which they save by denying themselves goes to relieve a race whom the great majority of people in this country seem largely to have forgotten. The colored people need help and education and training, and we are going to work to the point until a great work is accomplished. As long as God gives me breath, I shall bear my testimony regarding this matter. I thank God that he has means and ways by which self-denial can be taught in the family. Thus his people are to be taught how to do missionary work, how to go out and in simplicity open the Word of God to others. When questioned about their faith, they are able to state plainly and clearly the reasons of their faith. Such families bring into the church the influence of their home training.

Report of the Southwestern Union Conference

THE Southwestern Union Conference is composed of the following States and Territories: Texas, Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Indian Territory, and has an area of 382,089 square miles, and a population of 5,360,274, of which about 900,000 are colored. There are also hundreds of thousands of Mexicans who speak the Spanish language.

This union conference has a membership of 3,333, and a ministerial force of fifty-five, of which number three are colored. The most of this force of workers have been engaged in new fields, as the policy has been to push the work into new territory, where the message for this time has not been given. Good results have followed, and twenty-two churches and companies have been raised up, and thirteen church buildings have been erected; two of these are for the colored people, one in Arkansas and one in Texas.

Our academy, located at Keene, Tex., is under the management of the union conference. The last two years have been very encouraging and prosperous. During the year which has just closed the school has had an enrolment of one hundred and sixteen, with a corps of seven teachers.

A vigorous effort has been put forth to pay off all the indebtedness of the institution, so that it may be better able to carry out the purpose for which it was established. Oklahoma has done nobly, and has now paid up her apportionment in full. Arkansas and Texas are doing their utmost to meet their obligations, and are hopeful that they also will soon be free from debt.

Vigorous efforts have been put forth the last two years to make the academy true to its name — "Industrial Academy." The industrial department work has been revived, and good work is being done in the different industries carried on by the school.

The tract societies have, the last two years, sold books to the amount of $40,798.78, but we expect to do more in the future, as the canvassing work is reviving in all the three conferences, and the prospects are very promising. Organized efforts are being put forth to place a strong canvassing force in the field for our large denominational books.

Several young ladies who have taken up the sale of the Watchman and The Signs of the Times in our large cities and towns have been very successful. Others are preparing to engage in this work.

Last December a branch publishing house of Nashville, Tenn., was established in Fort Worth, which will be a great help in supplying our local societies with books promptly.

Our local tract societies have been doing well the last two years. The Texas Tract Society was heavily involved in debt about two years ago, but at the present time it does not owe the publishing houses a cent, having paid them up in full.

The Arkansas Tract Society has an old debt of about seven thousand dollars, but has, during the last two years, been able to settle for all books it has ordered, and also to pay for the stock of books on hand. This is indeed encouraging for Arkansas.

Another encouraging feature of our work is the success attending our union conference paper. When this union conference was organized, it was thought that one good-sized paper could better occupy and represent the field than three small ones. The three State papers were merged into one union conference organ. Its pages are filled each week with reports and articles from the workers, and it has seven hundred regular subscribers who watch eagerly for it. Except the first year, it has never been a great financial burden. During 1903 it lacked only fifty-four dollars of being self-supporting, and for 1904 it lacked only $14.75.

There are two sanitariums located in this union conference,— one in Little Rock, Ark., and the other in Keene, Tex. They are doing good work, and are in a prosperous condition. Treatment rooms are being fitted up in several of the large cities.

The mission work among the colored people has received special attention the last two years, and the prospects are very encouraging for a good work to be done for that people. We have several efficient colored workers who are pushing the evangelical work among their own race. Two large preaching tents, one for Arkansas and one for Texas, have been ordered for use among the colored people, and will be in the field this summer. It is hoped that these tents can be kept in the field every summer. They have been purchased by the union conference for the colored work, and will be used only by them.

An industrial school is being established in Arkansas. Forty acres of land has been purchased, and a small building erected; but more facilities must be provided as finances will permit. We must educate the colored people so that they will be able to labor intelligently for their own race.

We have a large population of Mexicans in Texas. We have been able to do but little for this people as we have no efficient workers who can speak the

THIRTY-SIXTH SESSION MAY 11-30

The Need of Home Religion *

(Concluded)

What we need is home religion,— the sanctification of the truth in the home life. We know in whom we have believed, but we do not half express it, and when we fail to give expression to our faith, we lose half the sense of what it means to give ourselves to God. To live for him means sacrifice at every step. It means self-denial in the matter of dress. Much money is spent in the adornment of the person that ought to be devoted to the proclamation of the truth for this time. A world has been committed to us, and in the name of Christ Jesus, I ask you, my sisters, to dress plainly and neatly, but not for display. Do not try to follow every fashion. Get a good fashion, and keep it. Let all see that you have a nobler aim in life than following the ever-changing fashions of the world, that you are preparing for the higher life in the kingdom of God.

My brethren, build plainly and solidly the houses that you put up. We have no fault to find with the buildings here. Our institutions are to be a representation of the characters that we are to form. Everything about them is to be solid. God will help us as we try to carry out his will in our character building.

Christ came to our world without display. But to-day great displays are made every now and then. Thousands of dollars are expended right among our people in such displays, and this God forbids. That is not the way to get the truth before the people. Christ could have come to this world accompanied by thousands of angels, but he did not not do this. He stepped down from his high command, and laying aside his royal robe and kingly crown, he came to this world in the garb of humanity, to live a life of perfect obedience, that human beings, receiving him as their Redeemer, might become partakers of the divine nature, and at last stand before God without spot or stain of sin. He died for us that we might be made worthy to enter through the gates of the holy city, and hear the welcome, "Well done, good and faithful servant; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

In our work we are not to strive to make an appearance. We are to look unto Christ, beholding what manner of love the Father has bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God. And what a joy, what a power, will be with us as we do this! It will not be merely the excitement of feeling, but a deep, abiding joy. We are to present the solid truths of the Word of God, that these truths may be impressed on the hearts of the people, and that men and women may be led to walk in the footsteps of the Redeemer.

When the Pharisees complained because Christ and his disciples ate with publicans and sinners, the Saviour said, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." He accepted the invitations given him to attend different gatherings, and every time he went to one of these places, he spoke words that reached forth to rescue the lost sheep.

May God help us so to act that his converting power may be seen among us. Parents and children are to act as if they were under God's discipline. In the home, under the direction of the great Counselor, they are to carry out the principles of heaven. God will be with them in their work, giving them victory after victory, if they will follow in the way of truth and righteousness.

O, how my soul longs after God,— to see him with his people, to see his power revealed in the heart, in the character, and in the home!

We need true religion in the church. It is God's purpose that we shall show that we are born again, and that we are working out in our lives the great, heaven-born principles of truth. Thus only can we gain eternal life in the kingdom of glory. But there are so few who are going out to proclaim the wonderful truth that we have received! Why do you not go out? Why do you not enter the different places that have not yet heard the truth? Do you say, I do not know how I should be supported? Christ told his disciples how they would be supported. He told them to go right into the homes of the people, and eat at their tables. He wants his workers to-day to come so close to the people that those for whom they are working will be bound to the one who speaks to them the word of life. There might be a thousand more laborers than there now are if God's people would deny themselves, and take up the cross and follow Jesus. What we need is the sanctification of the Holy Spirit, and we need it every day. What we need is men of prayer,— men who in quietness and humility, without any display or excitement, are overcoming self.

What we need at this meeting is to settle into the living principles of present truth. Satan is creeping in with his sophistry, to undermine the principles of our faith. You remember how, when Paul and Silas were teaching in a certain place, a woman met them, "and cried, saying, These men are the servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation." This woman was possessed with a spirit of divination, and by soothsaying brought her masters much gain. Her influence had helped to strengthen idolatry.

"But Paul, being grieved, turned and said to the spirit, I command thee in the name of Jesus Christ to come out of her. And he came out that same hour."

But, you say, she spoke good words, and why should Paul rebuke her? It was Satan speaking through her, hoping to mingle his sophistry with the truths taught by those who were proclaiming the word of God.

The same danger exists to-day. The enemy is trying to bring in his sophistry through those who ought to be on their knees before God, praying for an understanding of what saith the Scriptures, that they may stand against the evil influences that fill the world. God desires scientific sophistry to be purged from every heart. He desires us to rebuke every evil devising, every evil work. If we allow such devising to go unrebuked, we shall have to suffer the consequences.

After the woman had been freed from the evil spirit, she became a follower of Christ. Her masters saw that their hope of gain was gone, and taking Paul and Silas, they brought them before the rulers, charging them with troubling the city. This caused an uproar. The multitude rose against the disciples, and the magistrates commanded that the prisoners should be beaten. They were then taken to prison, and their feet were placed in the stocks.

Things looked very discouraging for the disciples, but angels of God were with them, and they sang the praises of God in the prison. Could we have sung under such circumstances? They did. While they were singing, "suddenly there was a great earthquake, so that the foundations of the prison were shaken: and immediately all the doors were opened, and every one's bands were loosed.

"And the keeper of the prison, awaking out of his sleep, and seeing the prison doors open, he drew out his sword, and would have killed himself, supposing that the prisoners had been fled. But Paul cried with a loud voice, saying, Do thyself no harm: for we are all here.

"Then he called for a light, and sprang in, and came trembling, and fell down before Paul and Silas, and brought them out, and said, Sirs, what must I do to be saved? And they said, Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and thou shalt be saved, and thy house. And they spake unto him the word of the Lord, and to all that were in his house.

"And he took them the same hour of the night, and washed their stripes; and was baptized, he and all his, straightway. And when he had brought them into his house, he set meat before them, and rejoiced, believing in God with all his house."

* A talk by Mrs. E. G. White, May 27, 1905.

It looked as if their effort had been a failure, when they were in jail, with their feet in the stocks. But their effort resulted in the conversion of the jailer and all his household. (1)

What we need is to hold fast to the living principles of the truth, whatever may be the consequences to us. We are not to accept one thread of sophistry from any doctor or minister or any one else. God is our teacher. And yet we are bound to unify. Christ has declared that we are to be one, even as he is one with the Father. But we are not to pick up sophistry from men whose lives are full of failures and mistakes and underhand working. God wants us to go to him for light, and to carry his presence with us wherever we go.

May the Lord impress his people that there is good religion in good management in the home. When this is done, we shall have men and women who understand the meaning of good management in the church. We shall have those who will stand as firm as a rock to principle. They will not try to gain all the advantages for a certain place, because they have an interest in that place. What God wants is men who are as true as steel to principle. Unless we have such men, we shall not know when the devising of the enemy comes. We shall not know when he speaks as he spoke through the woman in Paul's day.

We are to bring sound principles into the home, and into the church. Every member of the family is to exert a right influence in the home, in the church, and in the world. Parents, I ask you, in the name of Jesus Christ of Nazareth, to begin to work in God's lines in your home. We desire to see the salvation of the Lord revealed in every home. I desire your homes to be such that angels of God can enter them, and work with you and your children. But if by harsh words and angry blows you are constantly sinning against God, the angels can not enter your home. Sadly they turn away, grieved that those for whom Christ has done so much should thus dishonor their Redeemer.

If parents have not a reformation to make in their homes, God has never spoken by me. They need to be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

This is the last Sabbath that we shall be here together, and I want to know how many in this congregation are ready to take hold of the work of the Lord in advance lines, ready to spend their time hunting and fishing for souls. Christ did not place his fishermen-disciples in a school to be educated for his work. He took them to himself, bidding them follow him. They asked no questions, but followed him. To-day men will go straight from our churches to work in the harvest-field. They may never have laid on them the hands of ordination, but they will do a work for God, and none are to forbid them.

The time has come when the Jews are to be given light. (1) The Lord wants us to encourage and sustain men who shall labor in right lines for this people; for there are to be a multitude convinced of the truth, who will take their position for God. The time is coming when there will be as many converted in a day as there were on the day of Pentecost, after the disciples had received the Holy Spirit.

The Jews are to be a power to labor for the Jews; and we are to see the salvation of God. We are altogether too narrow. We need to be broader-minded. God wants us to carry out the principles of truth and righteousness. His work is to go forward in cities and towns and villages.

I wish to ask how many are willing to re-consecrate their hearts to God to-day. How many are willing to take the stand that they will no longer be lukewarm in their religious experience, neither cold nor hot? Christ wants you to be where the virtue of his life is taken into your life. How many during the meeting have been impressed by the truth, and are determined to obey it?

[The entire congregation arose.]

Will you in the name of the Lord take steps upward? Christ has placed one end of the ladder firmly on the earth. The ladder reaches to heaven, and you may climb round by round until at last you step off the topmost round into the kingdom of God.

I want you to remember that you have to-day pledged yourselves to live wholly for God. You have declared your determination to serve him. Let your lives be so pure and holy that Christ will not be ashamed to call you brethren. In such a day as ye think not, the Son of man cometh. Get ready to meet him in peace. Theories are being presented that say, My Lord delayeth his coming. But look at the world, at its wickedness. The life of no one is safe, except for God's protection. The world is fast becoming as Sodom and Gomorrah. It is fast becoming as it was in the days of Noah. We are to be as wholly consecrated to Christ and his service as the world is wholly given over to evil. The enemy will present his sophistries, with little fibers that would take hold of your experience and undermine your faith. I pray that your eyes may be anointed with the heavenly eye-salve, that you may discern what is truth and what is error. We need to put on the white garments of Christ's righteousness. We need to walk and talk with God.

NEVER trifle with one sin. It is like a little cloud which, as a poet has said, may hold a hurricane in its grasp. The next sin you commit may have a mighty effect in the blighting of your life. You do not know the streams that may flow from that fountain; for sin is a fountain — not a mere act, but a fountain of evil.— Andrew A. Bonar.

Biennial Report of the Pacific Union Conference

THE Pacific Union Conference, as its name implies, extends the length of the Pacific coast of North America, and includes, generally speaking, the territory west of the Rocky Mountains. It embraces the States of California, Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Montana, Utah, and Nevada, the Territories of Arizona, Hawaii, and Alaska, and the Canadian province of British Columbia. This vast region, reaching from Mexico on the south and extending far into the frigid zone on the north, contains 1,842,986 square miles, or, by comparison, has an area a little over half as large as that of the United States. It is a sparsely settled portion of the world, for in all this great territory there is a population of only 3,774,342, a trifle less than that contained in the State of Ohio, and only 140,000 more than in the city of New York alone.

In this union conference there are six self-supporting State conferences, namely, California-Nevada, Southern California, Western Oregon, Western Washington, Upper Columbia, and Montana,— and three mission conferences which receive annual appropriations from the union conference, namely,— Utah, Arizona, and British Columbia,— and two mission fields, Alaska and Hawaii, which are almost wholly supported from its treasury.

In these conferences and mission fields there are, according to our latest reports, 9,754 Seventh-day Adventists, of whom 8,940 enjoy the privileges of organized churches, 292 are in unorganized companies, and 552 are classed as isolated. Our roll of churches numbers 221. We have at present 341 Sabbath-schools with a membership of 9,447, a gain of 67 in schools and 1,114 in members for the biennial period.

In this union conference there are eighty-nine ordained ministers, twenty-eight licentiates, and fifty-four who hold missionary credentials.

Our finances show a total tithe (two years) of $230,180.15, being a per capita tithe of $11.54 annually. Our Sabbath-schools have contributed $16,643.49 in weekly offerings, of which $10,645.63 has gone to the foreign work; $6,874.59 has been given as First-day offerings, and $2,698.90 has been contributed from various other sources to the foreign field, making a total of $44,507.12 for foreign missions.

Before touching upon the several departments of our work on the coast, let me speak of the mission fields which are under the direct supervision of the union conference, namely, Alaska and Hawaii. The former field has had a laborer for the past three years, and work has been done at Skagway, Dawson, and other points on the southwestern coast. Some good fruit is already seen, and we hope for more. Hawaii has had the labors of an ordained minister during most of the biennial period. The Anglo-Chinese Academy at Hono-

THIRTY-SIXTH SESSION MAY 11-30

*The Ladder of Progress

I KNOW of nothing better to present to teachers and students than the instruction found in the first chapter of Second Peter.

“Simon Peter, a servant and an apostle of Jesus Christ, to them that have obtained like precious faith with us through the righteousness of God and our Saviour Jesus Christ: Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, according as his divine power hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.”

Let the young men and young women who come to our schools, and those who have been set as guardians over them, remember that God calls on them to move steadily forward, to advance step by step, because Christ is their Saviour. The youth are to be taught to consecrate themselves, body and soul, to the service of Christ. While in school they are to impart as well as receive. They will find that by imparting truth, they will increase in a knowledge of Christ. They can be channels of light. Said Christ, “Ye are the light of the world.” When you get a fresh thought from the Word of God or from your other studies, do not keep it to yourself. Give to some one else that which has helped you. Remember that as surely as you live out the principles of truth, you will help yourself, and in helping yourself to climb the ladder of progress, you will show others the way.

“And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue.” Your faith is worthless without the virtue. Faith of the right kind brings virtue that is more valuable than gold or silver or precious stones.

“And to virtue knowledge.” We have some knowledge of God, but not a hundredth part of what it is our privilege to have, because we do not walk in the light that, day by day, God is giving us.

You are to work on the plan of addition, and as you do this, the promise will be fulfilled. “Grace and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord.” As you live on the plan of addition, constantly adding to your fund of knowledge, and seeking to carry out the instruction you receive, you will gain strength to overcome temptation, and will be enabled to stand on vantage-ground. Draw nigh to God, and he will draw nigh unto you. He will lift up for you a standard against the enemy.

“And to knowledge temperance.” Each one must settle for himself the question of temperance. You are to put nothing into your lips that will overtax the digestive organs. This is necessary, if you would have a clear mind. Those who eat improper food are hindering themselves from making the advance steps that Christ expects them to make. Let not those who are older in years tempt the youth to eat anything but plain, simple food. When a great variety of rich food is eaten, a disturbance is created in the stomach, the thoughts are disturbed, and the intellect dulled. It is to be our study to make our eating and drinking such that we shall be enabled to offer to God the highest service.

“And to temperance patience.” Temperance always leads to patience. Students, if you will take yourselves in hand, if you will practise temperance in all things, you will find wonderful help in Christ. You will watch well your words. Speech is a precious talent. You can speak fretfully, or you can speak pleasantly. Remember that it will not hurt your influence to speak pleasantly, but that it will sweeten your influence. If provoking words are spoken to you, do not utter a word. The best rebuke you can give the one who has uttered the provoking words is to keep silent until you can speak in a calm, pleasant voice. Try to gain control over yourself. This will help you to stand on vantage-ground. Constantly keep God and his promises before your mind. Brace yourselves to habits of self-control.

“And to godliness brotherly kindness.” O how much we need to cultivate brotherly kindness!

“And to brotherly kindness charity. For if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins.” He can not see the influence of his harsh, angry words, and his unchristlike course of action.

If students would read the Word of God more, and pray over it, the light of heaven would shine upon them. The Lord God does not want them to go round with long faces, unable to speak pleasant words. He wants them to be full of pleasantness. The youth and those who have charge of them need to have such a power of self-control that they will exert a cheerful, uplifting influence upon all with whom they come in contact. Then the angels of God can give them success in their work.

There are those whose characters are so frivolous that it seems impossible for them to keep their tongues from speaking evil; but notwithstanding this, maintain your self-control, and then, wherever you are, those who have charge over you will not have to control you, for you will control yourselves. Climb steadily upward on the ladder of progress, round by round, and at last you will step off the topmost round into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

“Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fail.” Our eternal life insurance policy is found right in these words, and we want you to study them carefully. “Ye shall never fail.” Ought we not, then, to work right to the point?

“For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.” Will you not pledge yourselves to God to serve him, and him alone? I do not ask you to pledge your word to one another. Pledge yourselves to God. Let him be the one who will hear the promise that you will press steadily forward in the way to heaven. Holy angels will watch over you, and the golden oil, which the two olive branches empty through the two golden pipes, for the perfection of the characters of God’s people, will be imparted to you.

Those who have the guardianship of the youth need to cling to the mighty One. Those who will continue in the faith will obtain the eternal life insurance policy, which will give them a right to enter in through the gates into the city of God, and a right to eat of the fruit of the tree of life. Let us hold fast to God. Let us consecrate ourselves to the service of Christ. He will give us power to overcome. Of yourselves you can not create this power. Place yourselves as humble seekers at the feet of Jesus, and he will give you the strength you need.

I feel so glad that we could hold our meeting in a place where there are so many quiet retreats in which to pray. O, I have longed for this when I have been on camp-grounds where there was no such opportunity! Get together in companies of two or three, and go off into some quiet place to seek the Lord. His promise is that where two or three are agreed together as touching anything, their prayer will be answered. Our God is close beside us. “Lo,” he declares, “I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.” Yoke up with Christ. Do not yoke up with human beings, and then think that because they are not perfect, you need not be.

* A talk by Mrs. E. G. White, May 25, 1905.

Link up with the One who is perfect, and who has power to sanctify you and give you a fitness to receive the life that measures with the life of God.

"Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth. Yea, I think it meet, as long as I am in this tabernacle, to stir you up by putting you in remembrance; knowing that shortly I must put off this my tabernacle, even as our Lord Jesus Christ hath showed me. Moreover, I will endeavor that ye may be able after my decease to have these things always in remembrance. For we have not followed cunningly devised fables, when we made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, but were eye-witnesses of his majesty. For he received from God the Father honor and glory, when there came such a voice to him from the excellent glory, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased. And this voice, which came from heaven, we heard, when we were with him in the holy mount." To-day the voice of heaven will come to souls who are striving for the victory over sin.

"We have also a more sure word of prophecy; whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn, and the day-star arise in your hearts." God would have us take hold of the rich promises of his Word. Come to his feet, and plead with him for power.

A school has been established here in Takoma Park. The students who come to us are to receive a preparation for service that will be full of marrow and fatness. Angels of God will help every one who endeavors to conform his life to the life of Christ. Just as surely as the students grasp the hand of infinite power, that hand will lift them up.

We all need to gain greater victories than we have yet gained, and we may do this if we will reach high enough and cling close enough. You may say, "I do not feel as if God is blessing me." But what have your feelings to do with it? You have the promise. Move steadily forward, believing that God has heard your prayer, and that he will fulfil his word. Be determined that you will overcome, that you will not fail or be discouraged. Do not depend on feeling, but on God. Cast your helpless souls on Christ. Praise God with heart and voice, and glorify his name day by day.

Biennial Report of the Central Union Conference

THERE is embraced in the Central Union Conference the States of Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, and the Territory of New Mexico, also five counties of South Dakota which are located in what is known as the Black Hills country. It covers an area of 616,531 square miles of territory, and is located west of the Mississippi River, mostly in what is termed the Great Basin. It has a total population of 9,000,000. About one third of this territory is well adapted to agriculture; one third is semi-arid, and abounds in good grazing lands, and is therefore known as a cattle country. The remaining one third is mountainous, and is only valuable for agriculture in such places as are subject to irrigation. It is a land of mountains, rivers, and fertile plains. In many places the mountains are rich in mineral wealth. In both the mineral and agricultural sections the financial condition of this territory is excellent, and prices are good.

The following are its organized conferences: Iowa, Kansas, Nebraska, Missouri, and Colorado; the Wyoming Mission field is also in this territory.

Number of churches, three hundred and fifty-five. Total membership 12,042. Number of companies not organized into churches, ninety-six, with a total membership of 1,099. Number of isolated Sabbath-keepers, nine hundred and ninety-five. Total number of Sabbath-keepers, 14,136.

At the Oakland Conference the total number of Sabbath-keepers reported was 13,794, which shows an increase in the union conference from Dec. 31, 1902, to Dec. 31, 1904, of only three hundred and forty-two church-members. This small increase is owing to the fact that many names have been dropped from the church records. In nearly all the conferences in the Central Union there is an inflated membership. Many individuals that have made no profession of religion for years, but whose names were still retained on the church roll, have been dropped.

We felt that a reform should be carried forward in this respect, or else the Lord could not say, "Well and faithfully done," to us as churches and as conferences. One church alone during the past two years has dropped from its roll of membership one hundred and thirty-two names.

Since the last biennial report there have been organized forty-three new churches, and several have been dropped from the conference records. There are 427 Sabbath-schools, with a total membership of 11,799. There are seventy-six church-schools, with an enrolment of 1,107.

During the past two years three intermediate schools and two intermediate industrial schools have been established, and all are doing good work. We have two hundred and ten church buildings, seventy-five ordained ministers, sixty-two licentiates, one hundred missionary licentiates, and fifty-five canvassers. Total number of laborers, two hundred and ninety-two. Total amount of tithe paid in 1903, $114,523.19; in 1904, $112,242.98. Amount appropriated to fields outside the Central Union Conference, $29,804.71.

Annual offerings to foreign missions, $18,398.18. Weekly offerings to foreign missions, $12,017.54. Miscellaneous offerings to foreign missions, $27,533.09. Sabbath-school offerings, $18,356.77. Sabbath-school offerings to foreign missions, $12,486.31. Total amount of book sales, $78,708.82.

Union College

Union College is one of the most important institutions in the Central Union Conference. It is being recognized by leading educational institutions, and also by State educational societies, as an institution which requires of its students a high grade of work. It has connected with its faculty about twenty instructors, and has an average enrolment of from three hundred and fifty to four hundred students. It represents a total value of $163,834.36. Nearly all the industrial departments connected with the institution are more than self-supporting; thus it is enabled from its earnings to meet its operating expenses.

The college has enjoyed many tokens of the blessing of the Lord during the past year. The regular meetings have been well attended, and numbers of conversions have been witnessed. Twelve students have been baptized. Brother G. Phillips spent two weeks with the school at the close of the winter term, in behalf of the canvassing work, and was greatly encouraged by the interest which he found.

Elder R. D. Quinn held a series of meetings for the benefit of the students, which resulted in a great spiritual awakening. The exact results can not yet be told, but they expect a large baptism soon. The word of God was preached in demonstration of the Spirit and with power. On four or five different occasions the chapel exercises continued from 9:45 to 12:30, all recitations being suspended. The message was complete surrender to God, absolute deliverance from all known sin, and the reception of the Holy Spirit in preparation for service. One result is the desire of many to enter some branch of the work during the vacation. This has led to the organization of a labor bureau among the teachers to find places for those who want to work.

Industrial Intermediate Schools

The Iowa Conference has an industrial intermediate school located at Stuart, with an average attendance of sixty-five students. For the short period of time in which it has been in operation, much progress has been made in industrial lines.

At the opening of the school this year more than half of the pupils made no profession of religion, and it had more than the usual proportion of students of the so-called undesirable class. By the middle of the year, they did not have a single student who did not make a profession, and, with the exception of two, the professions made seemed genuine. It was amazing in some instances to see wild, reckless boys settling into quiet, God-fearing students in only a few weeks' time, and this without any revival effort. At the closing service of the year but three students failed to take part.

Jewels for My Crown

ELIZA H. MORTON

WHEN searching for God's jewels bright,
Mid rubbish of the years,
I often toil on bended knee,
And wet the soil with tears:
The gems are there though "in the rough,"
And some day they will shine,
Perfected by a hand of love —
The hand I feel on mine.

And so I'll work, and never think
Of recompense or gain;
'Tis sweet to feel the impulse come,
Though it is fraught with pain;
'Tis sweet to know the angels watch
And have a care for me.
The beauty of their shining wings
At times I almost see.

The veil is thin that hides the face
Of Jesus by my side;
He gives me strength to labor on
From morn till eventide.
And by and by he'll take the gems
He's polished with such care,
And place them in a diadem —
A crown for me to wear.

*Lessons From the First Epistle of John

"THAT which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled, of the Word of life (for the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bear witness, and show unto you that eternal life, which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us); that which we have seen and heard declare we unto you, that ye also may have fellowship with us: and truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ."

There are those who are always seeking for something new. If they understood aright, they would realize that the newness that they need is that which comes from a daily growth in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. Let us keep firm and unshaken our faith in the message that God has given us for these last days. The world is fast becoming as it was in the days of Noah. Christ declared that this would be the sign of the end,— men would be eating and drinking, planting and building, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day of the coming of the Son of man. His words mean far more than we have yet seen. Do not the events that have taken place show this?

"And truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ." All through the Scriptures, the Father and the Son are spoken of as two distinct personages. You will hear men endeavoring to make the Son of God a nonentity. He and the Father are one, but they are two personages. Wrong sentiments regarding this are coming in, and we shall all have to meet them.

"And these things write we unto you, that your joy may be full." If we would apply the precious truth of God to our own individual cases, we should find such blessing, such consolation, that we should be ashamed to murmur and complain. Some have educated their tongues to utter complaints, and thus they lose many precious blessings that come with the exercise of patience.

"This then is the message which we have heard of him, and declare unto you, that God is light, and in him is no darkness at all." "God is light." How are his disciples to declare it? — Not with their lips merely, but in their lives. They themselves are to be "the light of the world." "Let your light so shine before men," Christ said, "that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven."

"If we say that we have fellowship with him, and walk in darkness, we lie, and do not the truth." Every church-member is to walk worthily of the high calling to which he has been chosen, having gained a living experience in the things of God. There is no need for us always to be babes in religious things. We are to grow up to the full stature of men and women in Christ.

"If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us."

We may pray for sanctification, but whether or not we get it depends on whether we walk in the light, reflecting light to those around us. My brethren and sisters, the salvation of your souls depends on the course that you pursue. If you fail of gaining eternal life, it will be because you have failed to keep the commandments of God. From the Word of God there shines light sufficient to guide us along every step of the way to heaven, and those who lose the way will be without excuse.

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. If we say that we have not sinned, we make him a liar, and his word is not in us."

In this world we are exposed to the temptations of the enemy, and because we do not depend on God as we should, we are continually sinning. There are those who, when they make mistakes, stand out in stubbornness, saying that they have not sinned, and refusing to confess. Those who say, "I never confess," will never see the kingdom of heaven unless they do confess. Read the prayer of confession that Daniel offered. He was called a man greatly beloved by God, and yet he confessed that he as well as the people had sinned.

Those who make no acknowledgment of sin, those who refuse to confess because they think it would hurt their position and influence, will never be cleansed from unrighteousness unless they make a decided change in their attitude. We need the spirit of confession right here in this meeting. It would be surprising if none of those present had anything to confess. Brethren and sisters, will you not take the stumbling-blocks out of the way, and clear the King's highway, that he may enter in among us? Then we shall see of the salvation of God, and the glory of the Lord will be revealed.

"My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." When we thus unite with Christ, we are gaining an experience that will be of more value to us than gold or silver or precious stones.

"And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him. He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked."

[We are to lift the cross, and follow the steps of Christ. Those who lift the cross will find that as they do this, the cross lifts them, giving them fortitude and courage, and pointing them to the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world.] (1)

"Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning. The old commandment is the word which ye have heard from the beginning. Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth."

We can have something fresh to think of all the time. We have held communion with God as we have tried to understand the high privilege of being one with Christ. I am so thankful for the Word of God. I thank the Lord with heart and soul and voice. We have no need to be led astray. We have no need to seek for something new and strange from the lips of human beings. We have a science that is above all human science. Many will grasp false science, teaching it as truth. But we need not be led astray. God wants us to cherish the truth in the simplicity in which we have received it from Christ.

Then I Knew

J. N. LOUGHBOROUGH

Knew what?—"Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord." So said the prophet Jeremiah when a prediction which had been made through his testimony met its fulfilment. Of this we read, "Jeremiah said, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying, Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum thine uncle shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee my field that is in Anathoth: for the right of redemption is thine to buy it. So Hanameel mine uncle's son came to me in the court of the prison according to the word of the Lord, and said unto me, Buy my field, I pray thee, that is in Anathoth, which is in the country of Benjamin: for the right of inheritance is thine, and the redemption is thine; buy it for thyself. Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord." Jer. 32:6-8.

This conclusion made by the prophet is in harmony with what the Lord had given as the proof of a true prophet. In another place Jeremiah said, "The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known, that the Lord hath truly sent him." Jer. 28:9. Again, in the Lamentations of Jeremiah, we read, "Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commanded it not?" Lam. 3:37.

The test of a true prophet given through Moses was, "If thou say in thine heart, How shall we know the word which the Lord hath not spoken? When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: thou shalt not be afraid of him." Deut. 18:21, 22.

If we apply these rules to the gift of prophecy, which for the last sixty years has been manifest through Mrs. E. G. White, we find that predictions made are most accurately fulfilled, and it is right for us also to say of this gift, Now I know that this is the word of the Lord. In the pamphlet, "Prophetic Gift in the Gospel Church," and in the forthcoming book on "The Great Second Advent Movement," there will be found a record of more than a score of definite predictions accurately fulfilled.

We wish here to call attention to some late occurrences of the same nature. On March 18 and 19, 1902, several leading brethren were called together in Los Angeles, Cal., to consider matters relative to sanitarium work in that city. The proposition was urged upon us to purchase a site near the corner of Hill and Third Streets. To secure this site, erect the necessary buildings, and furnish them for sanitarium work, would require an outlay of about one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, and this money would have to be hired.

A Testimony came to that meeting from Mrs. White, not to build a sanitarium in Los Angeles; while it might be right to rent buildings in the city for a restaurant and treatment rooms, the sanitarium should be out in the country, away from the noise and bustle of city life. It should be where the patients would be in contact with nature—fields, trees, and flowers. A caution was given against any hasty moves in paying large sums for a sanitarium. She went on to state what had been shown to her, that buildings and property suitable for our work, on which much money had been expended by those who had the money to spend, but who, by death or by other reason, had failed to carry out their plans, would be offered to us at very low figures, and some of these we ought to secure.

Let us now consider some things which have happened in line with this Testimony since 1902. The readers of the Review are familiar with the special instruction which came from Mrs. White to the committee who were seeking a location for the Review and Herald, school buildings, and a sanitarium in the East, that they should "move carefully, and pray much," and that "the Lord would guide them." Again it was spoken in this particular case, that "property suitable for the work, and upon which much money had been expended, would be offered at low figures." The result was the securing of the beautiful site in Takoma Park for six thousand dollars, about one tenth of the price at one time placed upon it.

At Glendale, eight miles from Los Angeles, our people are now carrying on the sanitarium work in a building just adapted to the work. This building is two blocks from the post-office. An electric street-car line from Los Angeles runs past the door. The house has seventy-five rooms, and cost, a few years ago, forty thousand dollars. The grounds connected with the building cost about six thousand dollars. Abundance of fine mountain water is piped to the grounds and building. Our people purchased this property in 1904 for twelve thousand five hundred dollars, about one fourth of its original cost.

At Paradise Valley, some six miles from San Diego, is a sanitarium in operation. Of this, we learn that about twenty years ago a lady physician, possessed of considerable wealth and enterprise, selected this commanding site for a sanitarium home, and expended fully sixty thousand dollars on the building and grounds. The building contains fifty rooms, and on the grounds purchased, near to the main building, is a six-room cottage and a good barn. There are twenty acres of land. The purchase price, including all the cost of transfer of title, was five thousand dollars, about one twelfth of the original cost of the property. This place was secured in January, 1904.

Several dry seasons had reduced the water-supply, and the property had greatly decreased in value. Some of our people objected to the purchase because of the failure of the irrigating system, and their doubt of getting an ample supply of water on the place. After Mrs. White saw the place, she was confident that it was one of the places which had been shown her in vision. From the first, she declared, "The difficulty about the water can be overcome." The workmen began sinking a well upon the place. On Nov. 14, 1904, they struck such a flow of water that it rose fourteen feet in the well in one night. Of this success, Mrs. White, in an article in the Review of March 16, 1905, said, "From the beginning [meaning beginning of negotiation for the property], I had felt the assurance that the Lord would open the way for our work to advance."

In view of these facts, the question naturally arises, "How did Mrs. White know that such offers of property would be made?" Like Jeremiah, she made her statement from what the Lord had shown to her. We who see so clear a fulfilment of the word, do well to say, "Then I knew that this was the word of the Lord." Happy is it, and happy will it be, for those who acknowledge the instruction the Lord is giving his people through his humble instrument. This is one of the Lord's special agencies in this time, to draw the attention of his people to his Word, and so instruct them that they may escape the wiles of Satan, and be of those who shall be kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation, so soon to be revealed in this last time.

Mountain View, Cal.

Plowed Under

T. E. BOWEN

Christ often drew from the common experiences of every-day life of the common people lessons of deep spiritual meaning. One day as he was teaching, he drew this lesson from the sowing of grain: "Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit."

That the dying process is so hard for us, and so many are unwilling to pass through it, might be given as the cause for the small yield of fruit. The grain left unsown, abides alone. There can be no increase without an actual burial out of sight of the individual kernel of the grain, in the cold, unfeeling earth. It must die.

And thus it is in the Christian life. Christ died. That seed thus planted has yielded an abundant harvest. But the dying on that one day was not all there is to the dying of Christ. His was a constant yielding of himself, a continual self-sacrifice, a daily burial out of sight in the world's great need. He put himself under the furrow.

"With this truth Christ connects the lesson of self-sacrifice that all should learn. 'He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal.' All who would bring forth fruit as workers together with Christ, must first fall into the ground and die. The life must be cast into the furrow of the world's

I Know Him

FRANCIS MC LELLAN

I KNOW him as a Father kind,
His patient care, his tender love,
Supplying richly from above
My every need. In him I find
Fulness of joy and peace of mind.

I know him as a Saviour true —
A Saviour from great sin and wrong
The Author of a sweeter song
In my poor life than I or you
Could find in sin's long ages through.

I know him as a Brother dear,
Oft walks he closely by my side.
To him I safely may confide
My inmost self. Without a fear
I glory in his presence near.

I know him as a loving Friend,
One true and faithful, brave and strong;
And I can trust his friendship long
As life shall last. If I offend,
He still will prove my truest friend.

I know him as a faithful Guide,
His footsteps point the way to right;
From sin's dark night to heaven's light
He safely leads. No ills betide
The one who in him shall abide.

*Lessons From the First Epistle of John

(Concluded)

"HE that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes."

We are not to watch for an opportunity to find fault, if a brother does not speak exactly as we wish him to speak. Perhaps God does not want him to speak as you want him to. His words may cut you to the quick, but even then you are not at liberty to find fault. The talent of speech was given to us that we might speak, not words of fault-finding, but words of counsel, words of encouragement, words of reproof. Because we are not to find fault, this does not mean that we are to pass by things that are wrong, without saying a word. If you see one doing wrong, go right to him, and tell him his fault in the way outlined in the Scriptures. In the meekness of Christ tell him the truth, and you may save his soul from death. But if you gloss over the mistakes, leaving those who have made them to think that they have done nothing wrong, you must share in the punishment, because you were unfaithful to your trust.

If we desire to see the King in his beauty, we must here behave worthily. We must outgrow our childishness. When provocation comes, let us be silent. There are times when silence is eloquence. We are to reveal the patience and kindness and forbearance that will make us worthy of being called sons and daughters of God. We are to trust him, and believe on him, and rely upon him. We are to follow in Christ's steps. "If any man will come after me," he says, "let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." "So shall he be my disciple." It may be a heavy cross to keep silent when you ought to. It may be a painful discipline; but let me assure you that silence does much more to overcome evil than a storm of angry words.

Here in this world we are to learn what we must be in order to have a place in the heavenly courts. We are to learn the lessons that Christ desires to teach us, that we may be prepared to be taken to the higher school in the courts above, where the Saviour will lead us beside the river of life, explaining to us many things that here we could not comprehend, and teaching us of the mysteries of God. There we shall see the glory of God as we have never seen it here. We get but a glimpse of the glory now, because we do not follow on to know the Lord.

John writes, "And he showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and of the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielded her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations."

Talk it, pray it, sing it, and remember that you must eat of the leaves of the tree of life here in this world, if you would know the healing power of the grace of God. When words are spoken that tempt you to feel provoked, ask the Lord Jesus to give you a taste of the healing brought by the tree of life. Get your mind on some subject of eternal interest, and it will be easy for you to keep still when you ought to keep still, and to speak when you ought to speak.

"I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake. I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one."

Are you not glad, young men, that this word of encouragement has been spoken to you? O, what a grand work is this,— to overcome the folly and wickedness that prevails in our world! Young men, God will watch over you, and will give you strength, if you will put on every piece of the armor, and be ready to resist the tempter when he seeks to lead you astray. We are striving for heaven, for a life that measures with the life of God. Keep your eyes fixed on the Author and Finisher of your faith.

"I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one."

"Because ye are strong." Do not spend your time reading magazines and novels. Read your Bible. You have many temptations to meet and overcome. You have a great truth to proclaim. Only by a constant study of the Word of God can you gain the strength needed for this work. Put novel reading out of your lives. You have none too much time in which to gain an understanding of what saith the Scriptures. The Lord wants the young men in his cause to stand where they are worthy of being entrusted with sacred responsibilities.

Do not encourage any appetite for stimulants. Eat only plain, simple, wholesome food, and thank God constantly for the principles of health reform. In all things be true and upright, and you will gain precious victories.

Remember that you can not overcome the wicked one unless you have on every piece of the armor. Do not be turned away from the truth by supposition or sophistry. If you once allow Satan to tamper with your mind, you will find that it is not easy to break away from him. But if you confess your sins before God, and take hold of his power, sophistry will have no power over you.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." There is a great work before us. There are cities to be warned. If you go forth into the work accompanied by the grace of God, success will attend your efforts. The power of heaven will be with you. The righteousness of Christ will go before you, and the glory of God will be your rearward. Let us thank God that provision has been made for every emergency. We can take hold of Christ's righteousness, pleading with him to cleanse us from all iniquity.

"For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever." He has carried on a faithful warfare against the enemy. He has built himself up in the most holy faith.

"Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us: but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us."

Brethren and sisters, at all hazards we must hold fast to the truth. I am so glad that it is not yet too late for wrongs to be righted. I am so grateful for all the precious promises given us, that we may have courage and faith and hope, and that we may stand firm on the platform of eternal truth.

* A talk at the General Conference by Mrs. E. G. White, May 25, 1905.

There is one thing that I want to ask those assembled at this conference to do: pray earnestly for the blessing of the Lord. I am glad to know that you are having early morning meetings. These meetings are of the highest value. Every time you come together at one of these meetings, lay your hearts open before God, and do not be afraid that your experience will be spoiled if you make confession. Take the stumbling-blocks out of the way. May God give us light that will clear away everything which would prevent us from having that love for one another which we should have.

I want you to pray that God will give me strength; for I have received instruction from the Lord, and I want to give it to you. And pray also for yourselves. We want to see the glory of God at this meeting. May he help you to press to the light.

Our Message

A. T. ROBINSON

The fact can not be too strongly emphasized that our message is the "third angel's message." This is the center from which all our activities should radiate. The more closely we work from that center, the more speedily the work committed to this people will be accomplished. But what is the third angel's message?

Definition

The third angel's message is that which gathers up, into a glorious system of truth, every ray of gospel light that has ever shown upon this world, and focuses that light upon the last generation of mankind. Anything short of this falls short of being the message for the hour. Whatever portions of truth men may proclaim, nothing short of the truth, the whole truth, and NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH, will meet the specifications of the great threefold message outlined in the fourteenth chapter of Revelation.

Giving the Message

No man can give to another what he does not himself possess. Therefore the only one who can give this message is the one who can do so in a testimony backed up by an experience in the life, of all that is in the message itself. Anything short of this falls short of giving the third angel's message. There may be the correct form of the message, and it may be given in such clear lines as to convince multitudes of its truthfulness. But the only one who can give that heaven-sent message, with the authority that is back of the message, is the one whose testimony is backed up by an experience in his own life of all that is in the message.

Let me illustrate this point by a quotation from the greatest of all teachers, and a statement concerning his manner of teaching: "The scribes and Pharisees sit in Moses' seat: all therefore whatsoever they bid you observe, that observe and do; but do not ye after their works: for they say, and do not." Matt. 23:2, 3. Now what was wrong with the teaching of the scribes and Pharisees? We have the inspired testimony that they had the correct "form of the truth." But they were robbed of all the authority that belonged to the truth they were telling, because that truth was not an experience in the life of those who were telling it. "And it came to pass, when Jesus had ended these sayings, the people were astonished at his doctrine: for he taught them as one having authority, and not as the scribes." Matt. 7:28, 29. He not only taught the people concerning the way, the truth, and the life, but he could truthfully say, "I am the way, the truth, and the life." His word was with authority because it was backed up by an experience in his own life of all that he taught.

Let us see if we do not find this in the message itself — in the very words of the message. "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel." Ah, the people symbolized by those three angels have something. What is this thing which they have? —"Having the everlasting gospel." What do they have the everlasting gospel for? — "Having the everlasting gospel to preach unto them that dwell on the earth." That is the point. They must first have the message, it must be an experience in the life before they can preach it to others. The testimony of the great apostle is right to the point: "When it pleased God . . . to reveal his Son in me, that I might preach him among the heathen." Gal. 1:15, 16. He might have preached about Jesus, he might have shown the time, place, and manner of his coming, so clearly as to convince all who listened to him that every specification of the prophecy had been fully met. But to preach him fully — to preach Jesus — He who is "the power of God and the wisdom of God," must be fully revealed in his own life.

In order to give this message with a loud voice, which is to prepare a people for the coming of the Lord, like him who was the herald of his first advent, one must be the message himself. John, who gave that message "in the spirit and power of Elias," could say, "I am the voice of one crying in the wilderness, . . . as said the prophet Esaias." One of our ministers, in the western part of Nebraska, who preached this message in the demonstration of the Holy Spirit, was pointed to as he walked the streets, with such expressions as, "There goes the third angel's message," or, "There goes the signs of the times." The great outlines of prophecy may now be presented in such clear lines that it will convince the intellect; but we can never go forth proclaiming this message in all its Elijah spirit and power until everything in the message becomes an actual experience in the life.

The gospel is declared to be "the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth." Rom. 1:16. The gospel being the power of God unto salvation from sin, and the third angel's message being the everlasting gospel, what less than the everlasting power of God to save from sin can this message be? But how can any man give such a message as that, backed up by the authority which belongs to the message, unless he can present in his own life the evidence that there is power in the message to accomplish that thing? We must be able to say, like one of olden time, "Such as I have give I thee." But being thus delivered from all conscious sin is nothing more nor less than the "righteousness of God by faith." Then what is the third angel's message but righteousness by faith? No one need fear that this is getting away from the "old landmarks." The spirit of prophecy has told us that righteousness by faith is "the third angel's message in verity." I bless God that I am learning more and more that this grand old third angel's message, which has made us a people, is the everlasting power of God to save from sin now, and to deliver from the dominion of sin every day. That same power of God that will keep the one hundred and forty-four thousand from sin, for at least one whole year after the close of probation, is the power of God that is in the third angel's message now.

The Judgment Hour

In 1844 the hour of God's judgment was reached. There is no possible mistake about this great fact. The work of judgment is the final putting away of all sin. "Now once in the end of the world hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." Heb. 9:26. The sins of God's people can never be borne from the heavenly sanctuary and placed back upon the antitypical scapegoat so long as sins are going into the sanctuary, in other words, so long as sinning and repenting is continued. Therefore, until this great threefold message becomes an experience in the life of every believer, of the everlasting power of God to save from sin, and from sinning, this work can never be closed up. The cleansing of the soul temple must be an accomplished fact before the sanctuary in heaven can be cleansed. Before our High Priest gathers up the sins of the redeemed and bears them out from the sanctuary, your sins and mine will have ceased to go in there; and if our sins cease to go in there before the last one has been repented of, confessed, and forsaken, then we shall be left to perish in our own sins.

Perfect Obedience

Many people tell us that it is impossible for any one to keep the law of God. This is charging God with having given a law which it is not possible for man to keep. This is the same charge

The New Earth

J. EDGAR ROSS

THE glory of Lebanon shall be there,
The fir-tree, the box, and the pine;
With rushes and reeds in the dragon's lair,
Planted by hand divine.
Springs shall leap from the thirsty ground
To water the rose, while a gladsome song
Makes the desert place resound.

The people shall not sigh nor weep,
But in safety all shall dwell;
In the great wide woods if they choose to sleep,
They shall fear no evil spell;
For God himself shall be with them there,
To answer before they call,
To hear ere they breathe a prayer.

They'll fear no terror of the night,
No arrow that flies by day;
For in that mount of pure delight
They shall neither hurt nor slay.
But there will all the ransomed sing,
"O grave, where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?"

Holy and Without Blame

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be. For as in the days that were before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage, until the day that Noe entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came, and took them all away; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."

"Watch therefore: for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up. Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not, the Son of man cometh.

"Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord hath made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing. Verily, I say unto you, That he shall make him ruler over all his goods. But and if that evil servant shall say in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming; and shall begin to smite his fellow servants, and to eat and drink with the drunken; the lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of, and shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites: there shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Many professing Christians are cherishing the thought, "My lord delayeth his coming." They are becoming careless, and are following worldly policy. Eagerness to buy and sell and get gain is beclouding the spiritual vision.

Those whose business makes it necessary for them to come into contact with worldly men should stand constantly on guard, keeping strict watch over themselves, and praying always, lest the enemy take them unawares. To those of his followers who are of necessity compelled to deal with worldlings, God gives grace according to their need. If they stand ever on guard, special wisdom will be given them when they are obliged to be in the company of those who do not respect the Lord Jesus Christ. Their every transaction is to reveal the fact that they are Christians. They are to be kind and courteous, in all that they say and do, showing that they are under the control and discipline of God, that they are serving the Lord Jesus Christ. The followers of Christ are to be separate from the world in principles and interests; but they are not to isolate themselves from the world. "As thou hast sent me into the world," Christ said, "even so have I also sent them into the world." And he said again, "Ye are the light of the world." We are not to withdraw ourselves from the world in order to escape persecution. We are to abide among men, that the savor of divine love may be as salt to preserve the world from corruption.

Hearts that respond to the influence of the Holy Spirit are the channels through which God's blessings flow. Were those who serve God removed from the earth, and his Spirit withdrawn from among men, this earth would be left to desolation and destruction. Though the wicked know it not, they owe even the blessings of this life to the presence in this world of God's people, whom they despise and oppress. But if Christians are such in name only, they are as salt that has lost its savor. They are no influence for good in the world. Through their misrepresentation of God they are worse than unbelievers.

Without a living faith in Christ as a personal Saviour, it is impossible to make our influence felt in a skeptical world. We can not give to others that which we do not ourselves possess. It is in proportion to our own devotion and consecration to Christ that we exert an influence for the blessing and uplifting of mankind. If there is no actual service, no genuine love, no reality of experience, there is no power to help, no connection with heaven, no savor of Christ in the life. Unless the Holy Spirit can use us as agents through whom to communicate to the world the truth as it is in Jesus, we are as salt that has lost its savor. By our lack of the grace of Christ we testify to the world that the truth which we claim to believe has no sanctifying power, and thus, so far as our influence goes, we make of no effect the word of God.

Following the instruction of Christ brings the sanctification of the Holy Spirit, and this enables men and women to reveal in spirit and word and deed the fragrance and the saving grace of the truth. If this transformation is not seen in the life, the actions will certainly make of no effect the principles of truth, which, if practised, would exert a saving influence upon unbelievers.

Those who study the Word of God, and day by day receive instruction from Christ, bear the stamp of heaven's principles. A high, holy influence goes forth from them. A helpful atmosphere surrounds their souls. The pure, holy, elevated principles that they follow enable them to bear a living testimony to the power of divine grace.

In all ages the "Spirit of Christ which was in them" has made God's true children the light of the people of their generation. Joseph was a light-bearer in Egypt. In his purity and benevolence and filial love, he represented Christ in the midst of a nation of idolaters. While the Israelites were on their way from Egypt to the promised land, the true-hearted among them were a light to the surrounding nations. Through them God was revealed to the world. From Daniel and his companions in Babylon, and from Mordecai in Persia, bright beams of light shone out amid the darkness of the kingly courts. In like manner the disciples of Christ are set as light-bearers on the way to heaven; through them the Father's mercy and goodness are made manifest to a world enshrouded in the darkness of misapprehension of God. By seeing their good works, others are led to glorify the Father who is above; for it is made manifest that there is a God on the throne of the universe whose character is worthy of praise and imitation. The divine love glowing in the heart, the Christlike harmony manifested in the life, are as a glimpse of heaven granted to men of the world, that they may appreciate its excellence.

The world watches to see what fruit is borne by professed Christians. It has a right to look for self-denial and self-sacrifice from those who claim to believe advanced truth. The world is watching, ready to criticize with keenness and severity your words, your deportment, and your business transactions. Every one who acts a part in the work of God is watched, and is weighed in the scales of human discernment. Impressions favorable or unfavorable to Bible religion are constantly made on the minds of all with whom you have to do.

God has ordained that his work shall be presented to the world in distinct, holy lines. He desires his people to show by their lives the advantage of Christianity over worldliness. By his grace every provision has been made for us in all our transaction of business to demonstrate the superiority of heaven's principles over the principles of the world. We are to show that we are working upon a higher plane than that of worldliness. In all things we are to manifest purity of character, to show that the truth received and obeyed makes the receivers sons and daughters of God, children of the heavenly King, and that as such they are honest in their dealings, faithful, true, and upright in the small as well as the great things of life.

The 144,000

H. R. JOHNSON

1. Where are the 144,000 first spoken of? Rev. 7: 1-4.

2. How are they designated? — As "the servants of our God." Verse 3.

3. What is said of them? — They were sealed. Verses 3, 4.

4. With what were they sealed? — With "the seal of the living God." Verse 2.

5. What is the seal, or sign (see Rom. 4: 11), of God? — "The Sabbath of the fourth commandment is the seal of the living God." — "Great Controversy," page 640. Ex. 31: 13, 17.

6. What is inseparably connected with God's seal? — The Father's name. See Rev. 14: 1.

7. When did this sealing work begin? — When the angel came with the seal of God. Chapter 7: 2.

8. When did the angel come with the Sabbath seal? — At the time "the temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament" (chapter 11: 19), and the Sabbath reform began. After Oct. 22, 1844.

9. What other angels did John see at this same sealing time? Chapter 7: 1.

10. What did the angel with the seal command the four angels to do? Verses 2, 3.

11. When did this special command go forth? — As the nations became more angry, which is true since 1844. Chapter 11: 18, 19. See "Early Writings," pages 29-31.

12. Is the sealing work going on at the present time? — Yes. Chapter 7: 2, 3. "Satan is now using every device in this sealing time to keep the minds of God's people from present truth, and to cause them to waver." "The sealing time is very short, and soon will be over." — "Early Writings," pages 35, 49.

13. What does the prophet Isaiah say about this work? Isa. 8: 16.

14. Where is the sealed law to be put? Heb. 8: 10.

15. As long as impurity is cherished in the heart can the spiritual law of God be written there? — No! "If the mind is filled with other things, present truth is shut out, and there is no place in our foreheads for the seal of the living God." "Now is the time for the law of God to be in our minds, foreheads, and written in our hearts." — "Early Writings," pages 48, 49. Isa. 51: 7.

16. What is a reliable testimony of true sanctification? — Holy Sabbath keeping. Ex. 31: 13.

17. Are not they who are walking by the power of the Holy Spirit in all of God's commands, being sealed with the seal of the living God? — Yes. "They had upon their foreheads the seal of the living God, and he said: 'Here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus.'" — "Testimonies," Vol. VI, page 15. "Now is the time for the law of God to be in our minds, foreheads, and written in our hearts." "Satan is now using every device in this sealing time to keep the minds of God's people from the present truth." — "Early Writings," pages 48, 35.

18. How many will be sealed? Rev. 7: 4. "The 144,000 were all sealed and perfectly united." — Ibid, page 11.

19. To what are we called? — To be sealed with the seal of the living God, and be numbered with the 144,000.

20. In view of this fact what ought we to do? 2 Peter 1: 10. "Let us strive with all the power that God has given us to be among the hundred and forty-four thousand." — Mrs. E. G. White, in Review and Herald, March 9, 1905. "We may learn the song of victory that is to be sung on Mount Zion." "John saw a Lamb on Mount Zion, and with him 144,000, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. They bore the signet of heaven. They reflected the image of God. They were full of the light and the glory of the Holy One. If we would have the image and superscription of God upon us, we must separate ourselves from all iniquity. We must forsake every evil way, and then we must trust our cases in the hands of Christ." — Ibid., March 9, 1889. "In a little while every one who is a child of God will have his seal placed upon him. O that it may be placed upon our foreheads! Who can endure the thought of being passed by when the angel goes forth to seal the servants of God in their foreheads?" — Ibid., May 28, 1889.

21. Will all who have the sealed law, containing the Father's name, "in our minds, foreheads, and written in our hearts," live till Jesus comes? Rev. 14: 12, 13.

22. When and by whom will they be raised? Dan. 12: 1, 2 "But there was one clear place of settled glory, whence came the voice of God like many waters, shaking the heavens and the earth. There was a mighty earthquake. The graves were opened, and those who had died in faith under the third angel's message, keeping the Sabbath, came forth from their dusty beds, glorified, to hear the covenant of peace that God was to make with those who had kept his law. . . . And as God spoke the day and the hour of Jesus' coming, and delivered the everlasting covenant to his people, he spoke one sentence, and then paused, while the words were rolling through the earth." — "Early Writings," pages 145, 146.

23. Who understood the words of the voice of God? "The wicked could not understand the words of the voice of God." — Ibid., page 146. "Soon we heard the voice of God like many waters, which gave us the day and hour of Jesus' coming. The living saints, 144,000 in number, knew and understood the voice, while the wicked thought it was thunder and an earthquake." — Ibid., page 11.

(Bear in mind that the time of these words of the voice of God is after the special resurrection. All this special company of Sabbath-keepers are now "living.")

24. When the never-ending blessing was pronounced on "the Israel of God" (Ibid., page 146), what did they shout? — "And when the never-ending blessing was pronounced on those who had honored God, in keeping his Sabbath holy, there was a mighty shout of victory over the beast and over his image." — Ibid., page 146.

25. Where did John see this company? Rev. 15: 2, 3.

26. What does the testimony of Jesus say on this point? — "The 144,000 were all sealed and perfectly united." "Here on the sea of glass the 144,000 stood in a perfect square." — "Early Writings," pages 11, 12.

(Among those who shouted victory over the beast and over his image were those who had come forth from their graves in the special resurrection, and were seen on the sea of glass. They were "the living saints, 144,000 in number." — Ibid., page 11.)

27. "When God spoke the time," what did he pour upon them? and how did it effect them? — "When God spoke the time, he poured upon us the Holy Ghost, and our faces began to light up and shine with the glory of God, as Moses' did when he came down from Mount Sinai." — Ibid.

28. What did the synagogue of Satan now know? — "Then it was that the synagogue of Satan knew that God had loved us who could wash one another's feet, and salute the brethren with a holy kiss, and they worshiped at our feet." — Ibid.

29. What takes place soon after this? — "Soon our eyes were drawn to the east, for a small black cloud had appeared, about half as large as a man's hand, which we all knew was the sign of the Son of man. We all in solemn silence gazed on the cloud as it drew nearer, and became lighter, glorious, and still more glorious, till it was a great white cloud. The bottom appeared like fire; a rainbow was over the cloud, while around it were ten thousand angels, singing a most lovely song; and upon it sat the Son of man." — Ibid.

As the Dead Sea drinks in the River Jordan and is never the sweeter, and the ocean all other rivers and is never the fresher, so we are apt to receive daily mercies from God, and still remain insensible to them, and unthankful for them. — Bishop Reynolds.

My Comfort

God holds the key of all unknown,
And I am glad.
If other hands should hold the key,
Or if he trusted it to me,
I might be sad.

What if to-morrow's cares were here,
Without the rest?
'Tis better to unlock the day,
And as the hours swing open, say,
"Thy will be best."

The very dimness of my sight
Makes me secure;
For, groping in my misty way,
I feel his hand, I hear him say,
"My help is sure."

I can not read his future plan,
But this I know:
I have the smiling of his face,
And all the refuge of his grace,
While here below.

Enough! This covers all my want,
And so I rest.
For what I can not, he can see,
And in his care I sure shall be Forever blest.

A Call to Present Duty

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Christ intended that a greater work should be done in behalf of men than we have yet seen. He did not intend that such large numbers should choose to stand under the banner of Satan, and be enrolled as rebels against the government of God. The world's Redeemer did not design that his purchased inheritance should live and die in their sins. Why, then, are so few reached and saved? — It is because so many of those who profess to be Christians are neglecting their heaven-appointed mission. Thousands who know not God might to-day be rejoicing in his love if those who claim to serve him would work as Christ worked.

Read the instruction contained in Leviticus and Deuteronomy. There you will learn what kind of education was given to the families of Israel. While God's chosen people were to stand forth distinct and holy, separate from the nations that knew him not, they were to treat the stranger kindly. He was not to be looked down upon because he was not of Israel. The Israelites were to love the stranger, because Christ died as verily to save him as he did to save Israel. At their feasts of thanksgiving, when they recounted the mercies of God, the stranger was to be made welcome. At the time of harvest they were to leave in the field a portion for the stranger and the poor. So the strangers were to share also in God's spiritual blessings. The Lord God of Israel commanded that they should be received if they chose the society of those who knew and acknowledged him. In this way they would learn the law of Jehovah, and glorify him by their obedience.

So to-day God desires his children, both in spiritual and in temporal things, to impart blessings to the world. For every disciple of Christ in every age were spoken these precious words of the Saviour, "From within him shall flow rivers of living water."

Many of the youth, in the midst of churches, religious institutions, and professedly Christian homes, are choosing the path to destruction. Through intemperate habits, they bring upon themselves disease, and through greed to obtain money for sinful indulgences, they fall into dishonest practises. Health and character are ruined. Aliens from God, and outcasts from society, these poor souls feel that they are without hope either for this life or for the life to come. The hearts of the parents are broken. Men speak of these erring ones as hopeless; but God looks upon them with pitying tenderness. He understands all the circumstances that have led them to fall under temptation. This is a class that demands labor.

Not the youth only, but those of all ages who are in poverty and distress, sunken in sin, and weighed down with a sense of guilt, demand our assistance. It is the work of God's servants to seek for these souls, to pray for them and with them, and lead them step by step to the Saviour. What misery exists in the very heart of our so-called Christian countries! Think of the condition of the poor in our large cities. In these cities there are multitudes of human beings who do not receive as much care and consideration as are given to the brutes. There are thousands of wretched children, ragged and half-starved, with vice and depravity written on their faces. Families are herded together in miserable tenements, many of them in cellars reeking with dampness and filth. Children are born in these terrible places. Thus in years of infancy and youth, their eyes behold nothing attractive, nothing of the beauty of the natural things that God has created to delight the senses. These children are left to grow up molded and fashioned in character by the wretchedness and wickedness around them. They hear the name of God only in profanity. Impure words, the fumes of liquor and tobacco, moral degradation of every kind, meet the eye and pervert the senses. And from these abodes of wretchedness piteous cries for food and clothing are sent out by many who know nothing about prayer.

While working for the poor, we should give attention also to the rich, whose souls are equally precious in the sight of God. The wealthy man needs to be labored for in the love and fear of God. Too often he trusts in his riches, and feels not his danger. The worldly possessions which the Lord has entrusted to men are often a source of great temptation. Thousands are thus led into sinful indulgences that confirm them in habits of intemperance and vice. Among the wretched victims of want and sin are found many who were once in possession of wealth. Men of different vocations and different stations in life have been overcome by the pollutions of the world, by the use of strong drink, by indulgence of the lusts of the flesh, and have fallen under temptation. While these fallen ones excite our pity and demand our help, should not some attention also be given to those who have not yet descended to these depths, but who are setting their feet in the same path? There are thousands occupying positions of honor and usefulness who are indulging habits that mean ruin to soul and body. Should not the most earnest efforts be made to enlighten them?

Ministers of the gospel, statesmen, authors, men of wealth and talent, men of vast business capacity and power for usefulness, are in deadly peril because they do not see the necessity of strict temperance in all things. They need to have their attention called to the principles of temperance, not in a narrow or arbitrary way, but in the light of God's great purpose for humanity. Could the principles of true temperance thus be brought before them, there are very many of the higher classes who would recognize their value and give them a hearty acceptance.

There is another danger to which the wealthy classes are especially exposed, and here also is a field for the work of the medical missionary. Multitudes who are prosperous in the world, and who never stoop to the common forms of vice, are yet brought to destruction through the love of riches. Absorbed in their worldly treasures, they are insensible to the claims of God and the needs of their fellow men. Instead of regarding their wealth as a talent to be used for the glory of God and the uplifting of humanity, they look upon it as a means of indulging and glorifying themselves. They add house to house and land to land, and fill their homes with luxuries, while want stalks the streets, and all about them are human beings in misery and crime, disease and death. Those who thus give their lives to self-serving are developing in themselves, not the attributes of God, but the attributes of Satan.

These men are in need of the gospel. They need to have their eyes turned from the vanity of material things to behold the preciousness of the enduring riches. They need to learn the joy of giving, the blessedness of being coworkers with God.

Persons of this class are often the most difficult of access, but Christ will open ways whereby they may be reached. Let the wisest, the most trustful, the most hopeful laborers seek for these souls. With the wisdom and tact born of divine love, with the refinement and courtesy that result alone from the presence of Christ in the soul, let them work for those who, dazzled by the glitter of earthly riches, see not the glory of the heavenly treasure. Let the workers study the Bible with them, pressing truth home to their hearts.

Such an appeal, made in the spirit of Christ, will not be thought impertinent. It will impress the minds of many in the higher classes.

By efforts put forth in wisdom and love, many a rich man may be awakened to a sense of his responsibility and his accountability to God. When it is made plain that the Lord expects them as his representatives to relieve suffering humanity, many will respond, and will give of their means and their sympathy for the benefit of the poor. When their minds are thus drawn away from their own selfish interests, many will be led to surrender themselves to God. With their talents of influence and means they will gladly unite in the work of beneficence with the humble missionary who was God's agent in their conversion. By a right use of their earthly treasure they will lay up "a treasure in the heavens that faileth not, where no thief approacheth, neither moth corrupteth." They will secure for themselves the treasure that wisdom offers, even "durable riches and righteousness."

(1) [Many have lost the sense of eternal realities, lost the similitude of God, and they hardly know whether they have souls to be saved or not. They have neither faith in God nor confidence in man. As they see one with no inducement of earthly praise or compensation come into their wretched homes, ministering to the sick, feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, and tenderly pointing all to him of whose love and pity the human worker is but the messenger, — as they see this, their hearts are touched. Gratitude springs up. Faith is kindled. They see that God cares for them, and they are prepared to listen as his Word is opened.

As God's children devote themselves to this work, many will lay hold of the hand stretched out to save them. They are constrained to turn from their evil ways. Some of the rescued ones may, through faith in Christ, rise to high places of service, and be entrusted with responsibilities in the work of saving souls. They know by experience the necessities of those for whom they labor; and they know how to help them; they know what means can best be used to recover the perishing. They are filled with gratitude to God for the blessings they have received; their hearts are quickened by love, and their energies are strengthened to lift up others who can never rise without help.] Taking the Bible as their comforter, they find a new career opening before them. Every one of these souls that is added to the force of workers, provided with facilities for service and with instruction as to how to save souls for Christ, becomes a colaborer with those who brought him the light of truth. Thus God is honored, and his work advanced.

Why Not Be Glad?

There is a sad heart evermore
  For one that aye rejoices;
Yet let the people lift their hearts,
  And sing with merry voices —
Cares be forgotten, burdens down;
  Amidst this radiant weather
No one is wholly desolate;
  Let us be glad together.

No good we loved is really lost,
  Nor vain the least endeavor;
God's care encircles every one,
  And blesses him forever.
These truths gleam out in words of white
  From all the hawthorn hedges,
And smile in blue forget-me-nots
  From all the summer sedges.

Be good, be glad: your share of joy,
  Is it not in your keeping?
You might be glad for very love,
  Though all the world were weeping;
But now that all things wear a smile,
  Let faith keep pace with sorrow,
And praiseful song and trustful hope
  Be ready for to-morrow.

The 144,000

H. R. JOHNSON

(Concluded)

30. Who raises the righteous dead at the first general resurrection? —"The voice of the Son of God called forth the sleeping saints, clothed with a glorious immortality."—"Early Writings," page 28.

31. What change comes upon the 144,000, which includes those who are raised in the special resurrection, at this same time? — "The living saints were changed in a moment, and were caught up with them into the cloudy chariot." — Ibid. "The 144,000 shouted, Alleluia! as they recognized their friends who had been torn from them by death, and in the same moment we were changed and caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air."— Ibid., page 12. "The living righteous are changed 'in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.' At the voice of God they were glorified; now they are made immortal, and with the risen saints are caught up to meet their Lord in the air."—"Great Controversy," page 645.

32. Is this company of 144,000 different from the rest of the redeemed? Rev. 14:1-5. "And the remnant are not only pardoned and accepted, but honored. A 'fair miter' is set upon their heads. They are to be as kings and priests unto God. While Satan was urging his accusations, and seeking to destroy this company, holy angels, unseen, were passing to and fro, placing upon them the seal of the living God. These are they that stand upon Mount Zion with the Lamb, having the Father's name written in their forehead. They sing the new song before the throne, that song which no man can learn save the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. 'These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile; for they are without fault before the throne of God.'"— "Testimonies," Vol. V, pages 475, 476.

33. Where were they finally seen? — In the temple (Rev. 7:15); on Mount Zion (Chapter 14:1); on the sea of glass. Chapter 15:2. "Mount Zion was just before us, and on the mount was a glorious temple. . . . And as we were about to enter the holy temple, Jesus raised his lovely voice and said, Only the 144,000 enter this place."— "Early Writings," page 14. "On the sea of glass the 144,000 stood in a perfect square."—Ibid., page 12.

34. Being different from the rest of the blood-washed, what question did one of the elders, whom John saw in vision, ask? and what was the final answer? Rev. 7:13-17.

(As at least some of the plagues will be local, so the experience of each in this company can not be the same, but these, as "the faithful, tried company" — see "Early Writings," page 134 — will have the experience spoken of in Rev. 7:13-17,—"an experience such as no other company have ever had. . . . They have stood without an intercessor through the final outpouring of God's judgments." — "Great Controversy," page 649. "Some of them had very bright crowns, others not so bright. Some crowns appeared heavy with stars, while others had but few."—"Early Writings," page 12.

35. In emphasizing the question where this wonderful company had come from, what answer is given? — They "were redeemed from the earth."

(In fact, all who will be saved will be redeemed from this earth, out "of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues." Rev. 7:9; Matt. 24:14; Luke 21:35. All will readily see that there is something very significant in the answer: These "were redeemed from the earth.")

36. Now allowing that they "were redeemed from the earth," from what class of beings could they have come? — "These were redeemed from among men." Physically and morally these have once been among the weakest, for they have come out of all the last nations and tongues and peoples living on the earth. They have also come from all kinds of organizations, and from all classes of beliefs and unbeliefs. They have cheerfully accepted the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and through obedience thereto, by the power of the Spirit of God, have become so fully sanctified, settled and grounded in the truth, that they are "of the same mind in the Lord," and can stand without a mediator after probation has closed. (Read with care on page 11 of "Early Writings," and remember that this is speaking of things after the special resurrection, and before Jesus comes in glory.) Who has ever witnessed such a company? No wonder the question, "Whence came they?"

The Mercies of God

The mercies of God
  Are the theme of my song;
Like beneficent rivers
  Life's pathways among,
They flow full of blessing
  Through valley and plain,
As free as the sunshine,
  As rich as the rain.

The mercies of God
  Are as sure as the light;
They wait for our waking,
  They guard us at night,
They fail us not ever,
  But as day follows day,
They come from our Father
  To prosper our way.

O, mercies most wonderful!
  Who can declare
God's tender compassion
  And infinite care;
His love forgets nothing;
  He, Shepherd and Friend,
Is our joy through life's living,
  Our rest at its end.

O, corn that is golden,
  O, forests of green,
O, seas of blue beauty
  With white waves between,
You tell of his mercies,
  But I shall proclaim
Through ages eternal
  How great is his name.

A Message to the Church

MRS. E. G. WHITE

“These things saith he that hath the seven spirits of God and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent.”

1) Among the people to whom this message was sent, there were those who had heard and been convinced by the preaching of John the Baptist, but who had lost the faith in which they once rejoiced. There were others who had received the truth from Christ's teaching, and who were once ardent believers, but who had lost their first love, and were without spiritual strength. They had not held the beginning of their confidence firm unto the end. They had a name to live, but as far as exerting a saving influence is concerned, they were dead. They had a form of godliness without the power. They quibbled about matters of no special importance, not given by the Lord as tests, till these matters became as mountains, separating them from Christ and from one another.

“These things saith he that hath the seven stars.” These words show the origin of the message. Then a plain truth is stated: (2) “I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead.” With God outward show weighs nothing. The outward forms of religion, without the love of God in the soul, are utterly worthless.

“Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die.” This is our work. There are many ready to die spiritually, and the Lord calls upon us to strengthen them. God's people are to be firmly united in the bonds of Christian fellowship, and are to be strengthened in the faith by speaking often to one another about the precious truths entrusted to them. Never are they to spend their time in accusing and condemning one another.

“If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee.” There must be a waking up among our people. Those who do not abound in the love of God will go into apostasy. They will lose their faith in the truth.

“He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.”

There are to-day in the church of God those who do not discern their spiritual need, those who do not keep the pure principles of the truth uncontaminated by worldly influences. They are careless in regard to their spiritual standing. To them comes the urgent message, “Be watchful, and strengthen the things that remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God.” Receive the messages of warnings brought by the Lord's ambassadors. Let not these warnings become dim in your memory. “Hold fast, and repent.”

Divine grace can be forfeited by a misapplication of the rich treasure. Every minister, every teacher, every medical worker, is in positive need of the Holy Spirit. Let God's servants work in sincerity, with purity of motive. There is spiritual power for all who will seek for it with intensity of purpose. These will become partakers of the divine nature; for they have co-operated with God. Influence will be given them, to be increased by a right use. They will be given an enlargement of power proportionate to their desire to do the will of God. The influence given them will greatly increase their usefulness, unless they forfeit the blessing by selfishness, by a misuse of the entrusted gift.

Jesus declares that the Father is more willing to give the Holy Spirit to those who ask him than parents are to give good gifts to their children. The Holy Spirit understands man's every necessity. He will bestow upon the earnest seeker that for which he hungers and thirsts. The blessings that God has to bestow are unlimited. We can not comprehend their height and depth and breadth. All heaven is at the command of those who, realizing their lack of wisdom, come directly to the source of all wisdom. To such ones God gives liberally, and upbraids not. But let them ask in faith, nothing wavering. “He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea driven with the wind and tossed.” The one who receives wisdom from on high is the one who holds fast to the promise, the one who feels his need, and will not be turned aside.

The Lord is greatly dishonored when wrong practises are carried on by the members of his church. These wrong practises arouse a spirit of alienation and strife and faultfinding. God sees beneath the surface. He reads the heart of every one, and he knows those who are following in evil ways. He says to all, “I know thy works.” How many times those who are misusing the precious gifts of heaven, have read these words, and yet have made no change in the life. We must arouse from our spiritual slumber. We must be born again. There is a lamentable decay in Christian experience. A truly godly life is rarely seen.

(3) “Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy.” Because of their faith this honor is bestowed on them. In this life they did not boast, nor lift up their souls unto vanity. With intensity of desire, with a pure, holy faith, they grasped the promise of eternal riches. Their one desire was to be like Christ. Ever they kept the standard of righteousness uplifted. To them is given an eternal weight of glory, because on the earth they walked with God, keeping themselves unspotted from the world, revealing to their fellow beings the righteousness of Christ. Of them the Saviour declares, “They shall walk with me in white, in the world that I have prepared for them.” “He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels.”

“And I looked, and, lo, a Lamb stood on the mount Zion, and with him an hundred and forty and four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. And I heard a voice from heaven, as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of a great thunder; and I heard the voice of harpers harping with their harps. And they sang as it were a new song before the throne, . . . and no man could learn that song but the hundred and forty and four thousand, which were redeemed from the earth. . . . These are they which follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth. These were redeemed from among men, being the first-fruits unto God and to the Lamb. And in their mouth was found no guile; for they are without fault before the throne of God.

“After this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the Lamb,

Commentary, Vol. 7 p. 958(1); 958-959(2); 968(3) clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and about the elders and the four beasts, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshiped God, saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God forever and ever."

The Coming Kingdom

C. A. BURMAN

"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven." The subject "The Coming Kingdom" is one of great interest to every believer in this message. Jesus often spoke of it; it was the principal theme of John the revelator. The establishment of Christ's kingdom on this earth is the hope of God's people to-day. The preparation necessary for the realization of this hope is the question for our consideration.

By the first angel's message we are called upon to "fear God, and give glory to him." We were created for this purpose. Isa. 43:7. It now is, and always has been, a question of loyalty. Shall we serve God, or some other being?

It is evident to all that God's people to-day can not regain the kingdom while violating the same principle that caused our first parents to lose the kingdom. The standard is the same. Loyalty was the great question. Would they recognize God as the owner? or would they step over the bounds, and use for their own purposes that which belonged to God alone? In attempting to get possession of all, they lost all.

God's people are now passing through the same test of loyalty. The tithe is to us what the tree of knowledge was to them. It can readily be seen that they appropriated for their own use that which did not belong to them. In so doing, they transgressed the commandment which says, "Thou shalt not steal." The act of appropriating the tithe to one's own use is also called robbing God — stealing. Mal. 3:8. But will robbery be found among the people of God when Jesus comes? It is twice stated in the prophecies of Revelation that the last church will keep the commandments.

It was not because they were in need that they partook of the forbidden fruit, for they had been dominion over all. They ventured to risk the consequences of disobedience, that they might be like God. Self-exaltation was the motive that led to the sin. Many are now risking the loss of eternal life for the sake of a few dollars. Satan is, to-day, presenting the riches of this world before the people of God, as, in the wilderness, he presented the glory and honor of the world to Christ, saying, "All these things will I give thee, if thou wilt fall down and worship me." Christ overcame the tempter by a close adherence to the Word of God; so, "if ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land."

A Faithful Warrior *

MAX HILL

What honor shall be due to one
Who long has fought, and well,
Whose race has been so nobly run,
Whose greatest joy has been to tell
The matchless love of One who giveth peace,
Who lived for others, shared their grief,
Wept with the sad and burdened heart,
Gave to the tempted ones relief,
Gave balm to soothe the ache and smart
Of sin-sick souls who longed to find release?

The King delights to honor him
Who labors on unselfishly,
Till limbs grow weak, and eyes grow dim,
And toiling hands all tremblingly
Still nobly strive to do the Master's will;
His back stooped low with many years
Of toil and travel, care and pain,
His loving eyes, dimmed oft by tears
Brought forth by others' guilt and stain,—
And to the last all consecrated still.

Sadly we laid the warrior down,—
We linger still to work and weep,—
His labor done, he waits a crown,—
"God giveth his beloved sleep;"
It is his will who knows and loves his own.
How sweet to thus lie down to rest,
To take without a doubt or fear
The bed his Saviour's form has pressed
When His life-work was ended here;
He goes to rest, but goes not there alone.

Sleep on, dear brother! till the day
When on the clouds a shining band
Shall bear the ransomed ones away
To dwell forever in the land
Where saints shall reign throughout eternal days;
Where toil is over, trials past,
And sighs and tears are known no more,
Where faithful saints shall meet at last
To sing upon the golden shore
The songs of sounding victory and praise.

Where Are You Standing in the Contest?

H. W. MILLER, M. D.

The reports of the great battles in the far East have certainly called the attention of God's chosen people to the fact that we are nearing the climax, and that we are engaged in a warfare of far greater import, the ultimate object of which is to save our foe, and make him a loyal subject of Christ's kingdom.

"For the weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds." 2 Cor. 10:4. "Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace. Above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." Eph. 6:13-17.

By analogy we can learn much from the present war, when compared with the reform movement which we are waging against Babylon. We see in Japan a country that has developed during a period of years synchronic with that of the third angel's message, and a country that has become so powerful that it pulled down one of the world's greatest "strongholds." Some of the same problems with reference to enlisting soldiers, supporting them, transporting them to the field of action, have to be met in recruiting our mission stations and sending workers to new fields. While the present warfare is carried on in a limited area, our battle-field is the world. The enemy has planted fortresses in every inhabitable portion of the globe, and is re-enforcing them, so that they become more impregnable every day. Especially can we attest to the truth of this statement in China. The longer the workers are delayed from entering the fields, the greater the difficulty. Should we not learn the lesson from the Japanese, to strike when the blows will count? The enemy knows he has this message to meet in every human heart, and seeks to hold his captive as long as possible, as delay means so many more stored in his prison-house, the grave. And China stores one million away in his prison every month. His army numbers 426,000,000 strong here; in India, 300,000,000; in Japan, 46,000,000; in Africa, 200,000,000; which totals a little over half the population of the world. Against these vast armies there have only been skirmishes at the outposts.

While we shall not conquer by numbers, yet it is evident that every Seventh-day Adventist should enlist for service, if the work is to be carried on with the same rapidity with which the signs of the times are fulfilling. Our Captain is brave, and he will stand in the front rank. "For the Lord your God is he that goeth with you, to fight for you against your enemies, to save you." Deut. 20:4.

It is claimed that every family in Japan has performed some part in the great war, and shared in the victory, as well. Should not every one who loves his fellow men and the soon appearing of his Saviour, give till he feels it, either himself or of his treasure, however small or great? In the days of Moses and Joshua, all the children of Israel were soldiers. And God has appointed every man his work in the great battle of to-day.

If for love of country and corrupt

Thoughts of God

I THINK of thee, my God, by night,
And talk of thee by day;
Thy love my treasure and delight,
Thy truth my strength and stay.

The day is dark, the night is long,
Unblest with thoughts of thee,
And dull to me the sweetest song
Unless its theme thou be.

So all day long, and all the night,
Lord, let thy presence be
Mine air, my breath, my shade, my light,
Myself absorbed in thee.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 1

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I HAVE been instructed by the Lord to call the attention of our people to the history of Solomon. From the record of his reign we may learn many lessons helpful in avoiding the paths that led to Israel's downfall.

The early life of Solomon was bright with promise. He chose the wisdom of God, and the glory of his reign excited the wonder of the world. He might have gone on from strength to strength, from glory to glory, ever approaching nearer the similitude of the character of God.

The Kingdom of Israel in Solomon's Time

In the reigns of David and Solomon, Israel reached the height of her greatness. Solomon was anointed and proclaimed king in the closing years of his father David, who abdicated in his favor. After the death of David, "Solomon was king over all Israel." At this time "Judah and Israel were many, as the sand which is by the sea in multitude."

Extent of the Kingdom

"Solomon reigned over all kingdoms from the river [Euphrates] unto the land of the Philistines, and unto the border of Egypt: they brought presents, and served Solomon all the days of his life. . . . He had dominion . . . over all the kings on this side the river [Euphrates]: and he had peace on all sides round about him.

"And Judah and Israel dwelt safely, every man under his vine and under his fig-tree, from Dan even to Beersheba, all the days of Solomon."

"Hiram king of Tyre sent his servants unto Solomon; for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father: for Hiram was ever a lover of David."

"Solomon the son of David was strengthened in his kingdom, and the Lord his God was with him, and magnified him exceedingly."

The promise given to Abraham and repeated through Moses was fulfilled: "If ye shall diligently keep all these commandments which I command you, to do them, to love the Lord your God, to walk in all his ways, and to cleave unto him; then will the Lord drive out all these nations from before you, and ye shall possess greater nations and mightier than yourselves. Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours: from the wilderness and Lebanon, from the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the uttermost sea shall your coast be. There shall no man be able to stand before you."

Solomon's Opportunity

The last great work of David, in his official position, was to call the attention of the people once more to their solemn relation to God as subjects of his theocracy. Summoning the princes of Israel, with the representative men from all parts of the kingdom, he delivered, in their presence, an inspired charge to his son, vesting him with kingly authority, and bidding him perform faithfully the duties devolving upon him. "Know thou the God of thy father," the aged monarch pleaded, "and serve him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind; for the Lord searcheth all hearts, and understandeth all the imaginations of the thoughts: if thou seek him, he will be found of thee; but if thou forsake him, he will cast thee off forever. Take heed now; for the Lord hath chosen thee to build an house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it."

Through obedience the Israelites could have stood at the head of the nations of the earth. God would have made them "high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honor." "All the peoples of the earth," said Moses, "shall see that thou art called by the name of Jehovah; and they shall be afraid of thee." "The nations which shall hear all these statutes" shall say, "Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people."

None understood these promises better than David. By his own experience he had learned how hard is the path of him who departs from God. He had felt the condemnation of the broken law, and had reaped the fruits of transgression; and his whole soul was moved with solicitude that the leaders of Israel should be true to God, and that Solomon should obey God's law, shunning the sins that had weakened his father's authority, embittered his life, and dishonored God. David knew that it would require humility of heart, a constant trust in God, and unceasing watchfulness, to withstand the temptations that would surely beset Solomon in his exalted station; for such prominent characters are a special mark for the shafts of Satan.

When he felt that death was approaching, the burden of David's heart was still for Solomon and for the kingdom of Israel, whose prosperity must so largely depend upon the fidelity of her king. "And he charged Solomon his son, saying, I go the way of all the earth: be thou strong therefore, and show thyself a man; and keep the charge of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and his testimonies, . . . that thou mayest prosper in all that thou doest, and whithersoever thou turnest thyself: that the Lord may continue his word which he spake concerning me, saying, If thy children take heed to their way, to walk before me in truth with all their heart and with all their soul, there shall not fail thee (said he) a man on the throne of Israel."

O, what an opportunity was Solomon's! He was to be not merely a warrior, a statesman, and a sovereign, but a strong, good man, an example of fidelity, a teacher of righteousness. With tender earnestness David entreated Solomon to be manly and noble, and to show mercy and loving-kindness to his subjects. The many trying and remarkable experiences through which David had passed during his lifetime, had taught him the value of the nobler virtues, and led him to exclaim: "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of God. And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain."

Had Solomon followed the divinely inspired instruction of his aged father, his reign might have been indeed a reign of righteousness, so beautifully described in the seventy-second Psalm: —

A Reign of Righteousness

"Give the king thy judgments, O God,
And thy righteousness unto the king's son.
He will judge thy people with righteousness,
And thy poor with justice.
The mountains shall bring peace to the people,
And the hills, in righteousness.
He will judge the poor of the people,
He will save the children of the needy,
And will break in pieces the oppressor.
They shall fear thee while the sun endureth,
And so long as the moon, throughout all generations.
He will come down like rain upon the mown grass,
As showers that water the earth.
In his days shall the righteous flourish,
And abundance of peace, till the moon be no more.
He shall have dominion also from sea to sea,
And from the River unto the ends of the earth.
They that dwell in the wilderness shall bow before him;
And his enemies shall lick the dust.
The kings of Tarshish and of the isles shall render tribute:
The kings of Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts.
Yea, all kings shall fall down before him;
All nations shall serve him.

For he will deliver the needy when he crieth,
And the poor, that hath no helper.
He will have pity on the poor and needy,
And the souls of the needy he will save.
He will redeem their soul from oppression and violence;
And precious will their blood be in his sight:
And they shall live; and to him shall be given of the gold of Sheba:
And men shall pray for him continually;
They shall bless him all the day long.
There shall be abundance of grain in the earth upon the top of the mountains;
The fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon:
And they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth.
His name shall endure forever;
His name shall be continued as long as the sun:
And men shall be blessed in him;
All nations shall call him happy.

"Blessed be Jehovah God, the God of Israel,
Who only doeth wondrous things:
And blessed be his glorious name forever;
And let the whole earth be filled with his glory.
Amen, and Amen."

Solomon's entire history might have been in accordance with this inspired prophecy. Exalted to a position of sacred trust, he for a time heeded the wise counsels of David, and brought glory to the name of the God of Israel. But the later years of his reign were marred by pride, self-sufficiency, self-exaltation. Desire for political power and self-aggrandizement led him to form alliances with heathen nations. The silver of Tarshish and the gold of Ophir were procured at a terrible expense, even the sacrifice of integrity, the betrayal of sacred trust. Association with idolaters corrupted his faith. One false step led to another, until there was a breaking down of the barriers that God had erected for the safety of his people.

Gradually, yet surely, Solomon's life was corrupted by conformity to worldly customs. Looking to the standards of right followed by heathen nations, he began to lose sight of the standard of God's law. Uniting in marriage with worshipers of false gods, at last he gave himself up to idolatry. A character that had been pure and elevated, became marred and degraded. The mind that was once given to God, and inspired to write the precious words of wisdom found in the book of Proverbs,— that noble mind, through evil associations and constant indulgence, became weak in moral power. Solomon dishonored himself, dishonored Israel, and dishonored God.

Sad as is the story of Solomon's apostasy, it portrays the result of separation from God. One false step prepares the way for a second and a third, and every additional step is taken more easily than the last. It is our privilege to take heed to the God-given warning of Solomon's life. As followers of Christ, we are to honor our Master by studying and obeying his teachings. We are to manifest our love and fear of God by refusing to conform to the world's standard of right. Let us beware of departing from the simplicity of our faith. The Christian's standard of right must ever be the standard that is given in Holy Writ. Constantly we are to guard against every worldly influence that would weaken us in moral power.

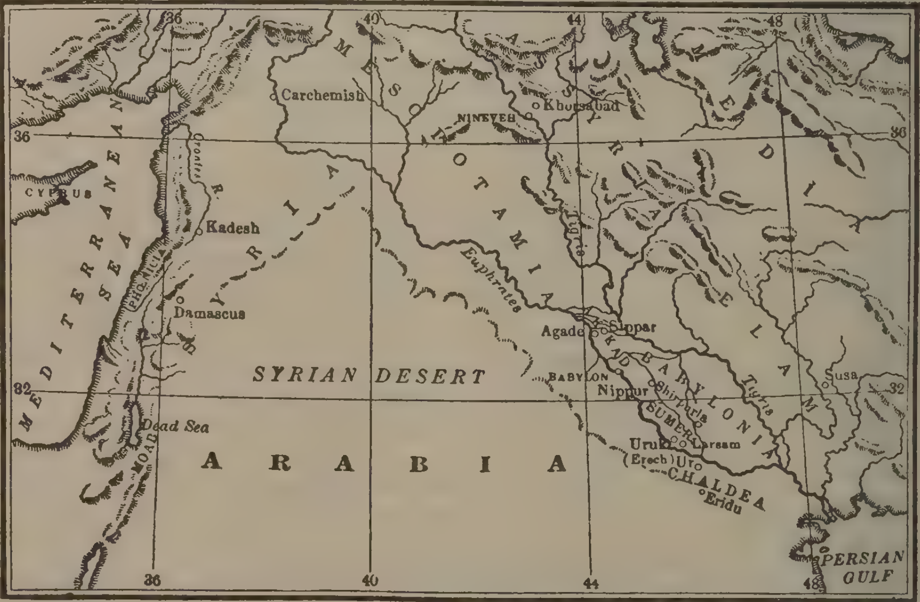
Introduction

M. E. KERN

THE Bible is the Book of books. Written by no less than thirty-five authors, extending over a period of a millennium and a half, yet it is the same sweet message of salvation in every part. It is the message of God to humanity. But the Bible has not always been received as the word of God. It has been the object of most powerful attacks; yet it has stood the storms of centuries, and, like the mighty rocks on the ocean's shore, is only polished by the waves that beat against it. In the last great conflict — the greatest spiritual battle of the ages — a conflict in which we all have a part — God's Word will be no less an object of attack. All the subtilty and power that the forces of darkness can command will be brought into operation to weaken the hold of God's Word upon the people. Through science, so called; through history and destructive criticism; through mystical philosophies; and in a multitude of ways, Satan will seek to overthrow the Word of God. Yet, while the forces of darkness have been gathering for the last conflict, God has prepared his witnesses. And it is our duty, who know God, to be ready always to give a reason for the hope that is within us. It is our duty to study to present the truth in such a way as to meet men under all conditions.

As an illustration of what I mean, I remember an instance where one of our ministers tried to talk with a man on present truth. The man stated at once that he did not believe the Bible; whereupon the minister said he had nothing more to say. In other words, the man must accept the Bible as the inspired word of God before the minister would proclaim to him the message. We shall pass a great many by in this world if we require that they first accept the Christian's Bible.

We judge men in two ways,— by what others say of them, and by what we ourselves find them to be. So with the Bible there are two lines of proof of its authenticity,— the outward proofs, such as miracles, prophecy, and history; and the internal proofs, or the demonstration of the soul. The first line of proof is good, but the second is better, and is all-sufficient. And it is this line of proof that is accessible to all, regardless of scholarship or learning. If this outward proof were absolutely necessary, the Bible would not be supreme, because dependent on authority outside of itself. It demands acceptance on its own merits, and contains within itself the assurance of its authenticity. External proofs, however, may serve as lights to direct to the Bible the feet of those who refuse at first to recognize the light of the Bible itself, but that is all.



A MAP OF BIBLE LANDS

It is to one of these side-lights that I wish to direct your attention. A recent writer says that "perhaps the most remarkable event in the history of modern Christianity is the unexpected confirmation of Bible truths from the hands of what seemed to be its arch-enemy, modern science."

The past century has been distinctively one of scientific investigation. Since the days of the Reformation man's mind has been freeing itself, and refusing to accept dogmas either in science or religion

1 Cor. 2:9, 10

MARY MARTIN MORSE

O THE spring-time in its newness sweeping, like an angel's wing,
Over hilltop, mount, and valley, like a high and holy thing!
O the summer's boundless beauty bursting on our raptured sight —
Morning, noontide, evening, symbols of a day that knows no night!

Autumn, with her liveried legions, thrills our heart's divinest strings;
Splendor felt, for aye unspoken, lifts the door for King of kings.
Winter, wrapped in ermine mantle, sparkling frost, and twinkling star,
Crowns the year with gleams of glory from the pearly gates ajar.

But the eye that can not measure sunbeam's length or eagle's flight,
Can not pierce the arching azure, boundary of our earth-born sight;
Can not pass celestial curtains that the keenest eye debar,
Can not see the home preparing, where the "many mansions" are.

And the ear that throbs ecstatic with the peal of plumed life,
Can not hear the song immortal out beyond Time's din and strife.
Though it master skill of masters in the royal realm of song,
Still unheard the rhyme and rhythm of that home we've loved so long.

But sometimes when souls are weary, heavy-laden, faint, and sore,
Like a far-off chime comes stealing all the angry billows o'er,
Sounds that soothe and sweeten sorrow, set to words, "Be brave and true,
For heaven's age of bliss is waiting just beyond the ether blue."

Faith that can not fear or falter, sees the future in the now;
No more waiting for the laurel — placed to-day upon your brow.
"All are yours," the blessed message, as o'er thorny heights you plod;
Then look up, and never murmur, 'tis the path the Sinless trod.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon—No. 2
Preparations for Building the Temple

MRS. E. G. WHITE

AT the time when David committed to Solomon the affairs of the kingdom and the great work of building the temple he "assembled all the princes of Israel, the princes of the tribes, and the captains of the companies that ministered to the king by course, and the captains over the thousands, and captains over the hundreds, and the stewards over all the substance and possession of the king, and of his sons, with the officers, and with the mighty men, and with all the valiant men, unto Jerusalem."

In the presence of the representative men bearing the responsibility of government throughout the kingdom of Israel, David delivered his dying charge. Sustained by the power that accompanies divine inspiration, he told them of his own desire to build the temple, and of the Lord's command that the work should be committed to Solomon his son. The divine assurance was, "Solomon thy son, he shall build my house and my courts: for I have chosen him to be my son, and I will be his father."

King David, in the years of his prosperity, had provided an abundance of the most costly material,— gold, silver, onyx stones, and stones of divers colors; marble, and the most precious woods,— to be used in the construction of the temple. These valuable treasures were committed by him to Solomon.

"Be Strong, and Do It"

David gave Solomon minute directions for building the temple, with patterns of every part, and of all its instruments of service, as had been revealed to him by divine inspiration. These directions, so precisely given, were not left to be recalled by treacherous memory, but were carefully and minutely written out, and preserved for the guidance of the builders.

Solomon was still young, and he shrank from the weighty responsibilities that would devolve upon him in the erection of the temple and in the government of God's people. But David said to him, "Be strong and of good courage, and do it: fear not, nor be dismayed [by the greatness of the plans]: for the Lord God, even my God, will be with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee." "The Lord hath chosen thee to build a house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it."

Free-Will Offerings

Again David appealed to the congregation: "Solomon my son, whom alone God hath chosen, is yet young and tender, and the work is great: for the palace is not for man, but for the Lord God." "I have prepared with all my might for the house of my God," he declared, and then he enumerated the materials he had gathered. More than this, he said, "I have set my affection to the house of my God, I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house, even three thousand talents of gold, of the gold of Ophir, and seven thousand talents of refined silver, to overlay the walls of the houses withal." "Who then," he asked of the assembled multitude that had brought their liberal gifts,— "who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?"

There was a ready response from the assembly. "The chief of the fathers and princes of the tribes of Israel, and the captains of thousands and of hundreds, with the rulers of the king's work, offered willingly, and gave for the service of the house of God of gold five thousand talents and ten thousand drams, and of silver ten thousand talents, and of brass eighteen thousand talents, and one hundred thousand talents of iron. And they with whom precious stones were found gave them to the treasure of the house of the Lord. . . . Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly, because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord: and David the king also rejoiced with great joy."

A Prayer of Thanksgiving

"Wherefore David blessed the Lord before all the congregation: and David said, Blessed be thou, Lord God of Israel our father, forever and ever. Thine, O Lord, is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and the victory, and the majesty: for all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; thine is the kingdom, O Lord, and thou art exalted as head above all. Both riches and honor come of thee, and thou reignest over all; and in thine hand is power and might; and in thine hand it is to make great, and to give strength unto all.

"Now therefore, our God, we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name. But who am I, and what is my people, that we should be able to offer so willingly after this sort? for all things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee. For we are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding. O Lord our God, all this store that we have prepared to build thee an house for thine holy name cometh of thine hand, and is all thine own. I know also, my God, that thou triest the heart, and hast pleasure in uprightness."

"As for me, in the uprightness of mine heart I have willingly offered all these things: and now have I seen with joy thy people, which are present here, to offer willingly unto thee. O Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, our fathers, keep this forever in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and prepare their heart unto thee: and give unto Solomon my son a perfect heart, to keep thy commandments, thy testimonies, and thy statutes, and to do all these things, and to build the palace, for the which I have made provision.

"And David said to all the congregation, Now bless the Lord your God. And all the congregation blessed the Lord God of their fathers, and bowed down their heads, and worshiped the Lord."

"Of Thine Own Have We Given Thee"

With deepest interest the king had gathered the rich material for building and beautifying the temple. He had composed the glorious anthems that in after-years should echo through its courts. Now his heart was made glad in God, as the chief of the fathers and the princes of Israel so nobly responded to his appeal, and offered themselves to the important work before them. And as they gave their service, they were disposed to do more. They swelled the offerings, giving of their own possessions unto the treasury.

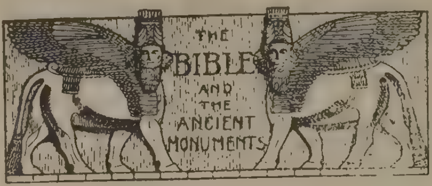
David had felt deeply his own unworthiness in gathering the material for the house of God; and the expression of loyalty in the ready response of the nobles of his kingdom, as with willing hearts they dedicated their treasures to Jehovah, and devoted themselves to his service, filled him with joy. But it was God alone who had imparted this disposition to his people. He, not man, must be glorified. It was he who had provided the people with the riches of earth, and his Spirit had made them willing to bring their precious things for the temple. It was all of the Lord; if his love had not moved upon the hearts of the people, the king's efforts would have been vain, and the temple would never have been erected.

All that man receives of God's bounty still belongs to God. Whatever God has bestowed in the valuable and beautiful things of earth, is placed in the hands of men to develop and to test character,— to sound the depths of their love for him and their appreciation of his favors. Whether it be the treasures of wealth or of intellect, they are to be laid, a willing offering, at the feet of Jesus; the giver saying, meanwhile, with David, "All things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee."

It is an honor bestowed upon man that God should entrust to his keeping the riches of earth, and it is done that he may co-operate with God by using these precious gifts in advancing the Lord's work in the earth. None of us can do without the blessing of God, but God could do his work without the aid of man, if he should so choose. But this is not his plan; he has given to every man his work, and he trusts men as his stewards with treasures of wealth and of intellect. Whatever you render to God is, through his mercy and generosity, placed to your account as a faithful steward. But ever bear in mind, "Of thine own have we given thee."

This is not a work of merit on man's part. However wonderful the powers and abilities of man, he possesses nothing which God did not give him, and which he can not withdraw if these precious tokens of his favor are not appreciated and rightly applied. Angels of God, with perceptions unclouded by sin, recognize the endowments of Heaven as bestowed in order that they may be returned in such a way as to add to the glory of the great Giver. For one to use these God-given capabilities for self-gratification or to promote his own glory, dishonors the Creator. Brethren and sisters in Christ, God calls for the consecration to his service of every faculty he has given you. He wants you to say with David, "All things come of thee, and of thine own have we given thee."

"ADVERSITY is the trial of principle."



THE BIBLE AND THE ANCIENT MONUMENTS

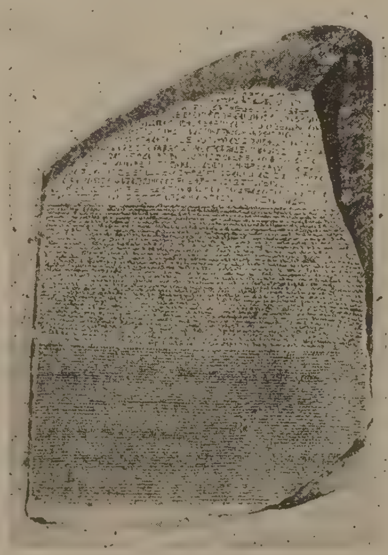
Egypt

M. E. KERN

THE story of the unearthing of these ancient civilizations is full of romance. Not only the sphinx, but the mighty pyramids and lofty obelisks of Egypt were a mystery. The obelisks, temples, and tombs were covered with strange characters. If they represented a language it was unknown.

The Rosetta Stone

In the year 1799,— the next year after the beginning of the time of the end, when many should run to and fro, and knowledge be increased,— one of Napoleon's generals in Egypt discovered at Rosetta, near Alexandria, a stone covered on one side with no less than three kinds of writing. This Rosetta stone proved to be the key to unlock the old Egyptian language. The writing at the top is the same as is everywhere seen on the temples and tombs, the middle is what is known as the Demotic text, and the bottom inscription is in Greek. The Greek, of course, could be read; from it the character of the inscription was learned, and there was strong evidence that the other inscriptions told the same story. With this as a clue, scholars set to work to decipher the long-forgotten hieroglyphics. The task was accomplished by Campollion, a French scholar, in 1818. Scholars now read the Egyptian language as readily as Greek or Latin, and wonderful indeed has been the revelation from the land of the Pharaohs.



THE ROSETTA STONE

Explorations

For the last fifty years Egypt has been the scene of busy activities of the excavators. Scholars from different nations have explored the long, narrow valley of the Nile, and studied its ruins. The pyramids have been entered. At the feet of the sphinx the sands of the desert have been cleared away, and a great temple unearthed. Not only have the buildings been found in Egypt, but the builders themselves. While in other countries, reliefs and statues of the kings have been found, in Egypt we have been permitted to look upon the very features of the Pharaohs. Perfectly preserved mummies by the hundred have been removed from the sacred tombs on the west side of the Nile.

PYRAMID, SPHINX, AND RUINS OF TEMPLE NEAR THE SPHINX

Rameses II

In the year 1881 there was found near Thebes in a rock cave, artificially constructed, a large number of royal mummies of the eighteenth to the twenty-first dynasties. Among them was Rameses, the Pharaoh of the Oppression, the king whose daughter adopted Moses. It seems wonderful indeed to be able to look upon the very face of him who talked with Moses. Being able to read the Egyptian, we are in many respects as familiar with his doings as with the conquest of Alexander the Great.

The eighteenth dynasty was the most glorious period of Egyptian history. The authority of Egypt extended to the Euphrates. Canaan was an Egyptian province. The kings married Asiatic wives, and the dynasty ended by an effort of Amenophis IV, the so-called "heretic" king, to supplant the Egyptian religion by an Asiatic form of faith. There was a national uprising, the Semites were driven out, and a new dynasty, or line of kings, set up, the nineteenth. Israel, who still lived on the outskirts of Egypt next to Asia, was a Semitic race, and as such was the object of greater hatred now perhaps than before. In this nineteenth dynasty we doubtless have the "king who knew not Joseph." Two short reigns were followed by that of Rameses II, the picture

A Heart Song

Out of my heart I sing a song,
  O world so great and grand!
But hearts are weak, and hands reach out
  For the touch of a kindly hand.

O song that I sing, I pray you bring
  To some sad soul its balm;
Fall soft, I pray, like the breath of May,
  Or the touch of a loving hand.

I sing for hearts that ache and break,
  I sing for the hearts that are true;
O world so vast, O world so wide,
  I sing my song for you.

"Hold Fast That Which Is Good"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

From Sinai, in awful grandeur, God proclaimed his law to Israel, that they might realize the high standard to which they were to attain. He presented to them the beauty and safety of obedience, declaring that only through obedience could they find peace and prosperity. He portrayed also the sure results of disobedience to his law. We who live in this period of the earth's history see the fulfilment of his warnings to Israel. In the stormy scenes taking place in our world, we see the result of the transgressions of God's law. (1)

"Now therefore harken, O Israel, unto the statutes and unto the judgments, which I teach you, for to do them, that ye may live, and go in and possess the land which the Lord God of your fathers giveth you. Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall ye diminish aught from it, that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you. Your eyes have seen what the Lord did because of Baal-peor: for all the men that followed Baal-peor, the Lord thy God hath destroyed them from among you. But ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God are alive every one of you this day."

It was in mercy that the Lord destroyed those who had been led away by Baal-peor. Had they been permitted to live, their influence would have corrupted the whole congregation of Israel. The judgment that came on them was a warning to others not to disregard the honor and glory of God. Often the Lord speaks in judgment to repress iniquity. He sees and rebukes the sins of those who disobey his laws, but he shows mercy to those who obey him. When their own inclinations would lead them into danger, he withholds from them that which they desire.

God chose Israel to be his own people, that, by adhering closely to his commandments, they might be to the world an illustration of the beauty of character, the moral power, and the virtue that might be attained through fearing and honoring him. He desired also to reveal through them the advantages that would come to those who, as his true sons and daughters, would walk in harmony with the principles of his law. In his dealing with men, God has often demonstrated that through the virtue obtained by obedience to the laws of heaven, human beings may gain a beauty of character that will fit them to be laborers together with him.

Purity of character will be distinctly revealed by all who truly follow Christ. In them will be seen the fulfilment of the promise, "I will be as the dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon." The psalmist thus describes the beauty and growth of the Christian: "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree: he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon. Those that be planted in the house of the Lord shall flourish in the courts of our God. They shall still bring forth fruit in old age; they shall be fat and flourishing; to show that the Lord is upright: he is my rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him."

Striking its roots deep down into the earth, the tree gains strength to withstand the tempest. So the Christian is to be "rooted and grounded" in the truth, that he may stand firm against the temptations of the enemy. He must have a continual renewal of strength, and he must hold firmly to Bible truth. Fables of every kind will be brought in to seduce the believer from his allegiance to God, but he is to look up, believe in God, and stand firmly rooted and grounded in the truth.

Keep a firm hold upon the Lord Jesus, and never let go. Have firm convictions as to what you believe. Let the truths of God's Word lead you to devote heart, mind, soul, and strength to the doing of his will. Lay hold resolutely upon a plain, "Thus saith the Lord." Let your only argument be, "It is written." Thus we are to contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. That faith has not lost any of its sacred, holy character, however objectionable its opposers may think it to be.

Those who follow their own mind and walk in their own way will form crooked characters. Vain doctrines and subtle sentiments will be introduced with plausible presentations, to deceive, if possible, the very elect. Are church-members building upon the Rock? The storm is coming, the storm that will try every man's faith, of what sort it is. Believers must now be firmly rooted in Christ, or else they will be led astray by some phase of error. Let your faith be substantiated by the Word of God. Grasp firmly the living testimony of truth. Have faith in Christ as a personal Saviour. He has been and ever will be our Rock of Ages. The testimony of the Spirit of God is true. Change not your faith for any phase of doctrine, however pleasing it may appear, that will seduce the soul.

The fallacies of Satan are now being multiplied, and those who swerve from the path of truth will lose their bearings. Having nothing to which to anchor, they will drift from one delusion to another, blown about by the winds of strange doctrines. Satan has come down with great power. Many will be deceived by his miracles. (1) Those who accept his science will be among those to whom Christ addresses the words: —

"These things saith he that hath the seven Spirits of God, and the seven stars; I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent."

I entreat every one to be clear and firm regarding the certain truths that we have heard and received and advocated. The statements of God's Word are plain. Plant your feet firmly on the platform of eternal truth. Reject every phase of error, even though it be covered with a semblance of reality, which denies the personality of God and of Christ. (2)

Of the Saviour, John says: "He was in the world, and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. . . . But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name: which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, . . . full of grace and truth."

Jesus Christ is the Son of God. He was manifest in the flesh. What was his work in this world? — To put away sin by the sacrifice of himself on the cross of Calvary. He was tempted in all points as we are, yet without sin. By his prayers and strong supplications, he overcame. In his human nature, he perfected a character after the divine similitude. By a life of perfect obedience to every requirement of God, he procured redemption for all who will be obedient. The divine nature is imparted to those who receive and acknowledge him as their Saviour. They become partakers of the divine nature, overcoming the assaults of Satan and escaping the corruption that is in the world through lust. Christ energizes by his Spirit those who seek him with the whole heart.

Those who truly receive Christ are given power to become the sons of God. As they look to Jesus, they catch the divine rays of light, and are attracted by the loveliness and purity and goodness of the Saviour. They seek to copy his pleasantness, rather than the harsh violence manifested by those who disregard the laws of God. And as they keep before them the fear of God, and walk as obedient children, others will mark their Christlikeness of character, and will be drawn to the Saviour by the revelation of their love, their justice, and their mercy. Yet some will refuse to come to the Saviour, choosing darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil.

(1) [Christ and his righteousness,— let this be our platform, the very life of our faith.] That which he taught, we are to teach. His commission to his followers is: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature;" "and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Menephtah's Hymn of Victory

Rameses was followed by his son Menephtah. At his accession the Libyans poured into Egypt, and the Greeks threatened the Delta. It seemed for a time that Egypt was lost, but a decisive battle nearly exterminated the invaders. To commemorate the king's victories a hymn was composed by the court poet. This hymn was discovered by Professor Petrie in 1896.

We would hardly expect to find the name of Israel in the Egyptian inscriptions. Nor would they be apt to record the escape of a whole race of slaves in such a miraculous manner as Israel escaped. But what was not expected has really happened. Israel's name is mentioned in Menephtah's hymn of victory. It is in the middle of the second line from the bottom. The inscription reads,—

"Wasted is the land of the Libyans; the land of the Hittites is tranquilized; captive is the land of Canaan and utterly miserable; carried away is the land of Askelon; overpowered is the land of Gezer; the land of Innuam is brought to naught. The Israelites are spoiled so that they have no seed."

MENEPHTAH'S HYMN OF VICTORY, IN WHICH THE NAME "ISRAEL" OCCURS

This hymn is supposed to have been written after the exodus, during the period of wandering. Every nation spoken of is localized but Israel. The author seems to know no land to which to assign them. An effort had been made, you will remember, to destroy all the male children of the Hebrews. The author of this hymn seems to boast that this has been accomplished. "The Israelites are spoiled so that they have no seed."

The Tel el-Amarna Letters

One of the most remarkable finds ever made in the East was the discovery in 1887, by a peasant woman at Tel el-Amarna, near Thebes, of over three hundred cuneiform tablets, or letters, written in the wedge-shaped characters of the Babylonian language. These are letters of correspondence between the Asiatic and Egyptian kings of the fifteenth century before Christ. Letters are here from Babylon and Assyria, from the states of western Asia, such as Ashkelon and Phenicia. These letters show that the Babylonian language was the language of diplomacy, just as the French is to-day. They bring to view a method of international correspondence which revolutionizes all our former ideas of this early period. There have been those who tried to prove that Moses could not have written the Pentateuch because the people of that time were illiterate and barbarous. But here is a whole volume of public and private correspondence written before a line of the Bible was composed. There are, among these tablets, letters from Abdi-Hiba, of Urasalim (or Jerusalem), and others which speak of a people called the Habiri, who are making inroads into the country, and imploring aid against them, saying, "If troops are not sent, the king's land will be lost to the Habiri." Some good authorities think these Habiri to be the Hebrews, and that the letters were written during the conquest of Joshua.

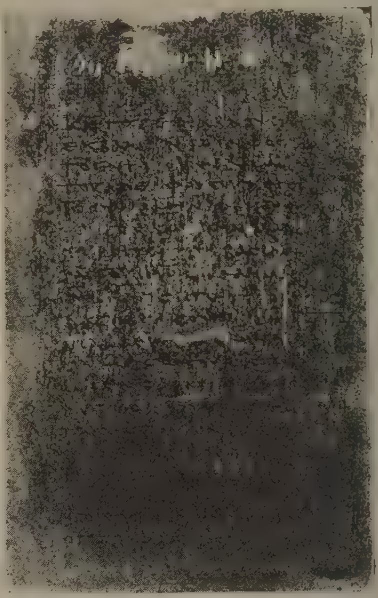
Sayings of Our Lord

Not only have the excavations in Egypt thrown light on the old empire of Egypt, but they have brought to light many things that have increased our knowledge of the history of the early church, as well as Greco-Roman history. Alexandria was one of the centers of the early church, and there has been considerable Christian literature found in the old libraries attached to the monasteries, in the tombs, and even in rubbish heaps. There has lately been discovered a papyrus containing the Sayings of Our Lord, a picture of one sheet of which is given here. In England when Wycliffe made his translation of the Bible, extracts were published containing sayings of Christ, and many made great sacrifices to purchase them. So it was, probably, in Egypt. The writing, as you see, is in Greek. Two of these sayings are as follows:—



SAYINGS OF OUR LORD. OBVERSE SIDE

"Jesus saith, I stood in the midst of the world, and in the flesh was I seen of them, and I found all men drunken, and none found I athirst among them, and my soul grieved over the sons of men, because they are blind in their hearts."

"Jesus saith, Except ye fast to the world, ye shall in no wise find the kingdom of God; and except ye keep the Sabbath, ye shall not see the Father."

The Judgment of the Righteous Dead

J. O. CORLISS

From previous Scripture references, it is clear that all the cases of the righteous are decided before the Lord comes to earth for them. It therefore follows that the tribunal at which their destiny is fixed is not located on earth. The prophet Daniel was favored with a distinct view of the judgment in session, from which we may draw a correct idea of its place of action. Thus he says: "I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judg-

"Whatsoever things are true whatsoever things are honest whatsoever things are just, whatsoever things are pure, whatsoever things are lovely, whatsoever things are of good report; if there be any virtue and if there be any praise, think on these things" Phil. 4:8.

The Higher Life

Walk in the light! In darkness there is fear,
The way is dim, and evil shapes appear;
Choose thou the sunshine, for it is thy right:
He knows no fear whose path is in the light.

Build on the heights! Below in every breath
Lurk germs of listlessness, disease, and death;
Life-giving air, bright days, and starlit nights —
These are for him whose home is on the heights.

Live near to God! In him is strength and peace,
Joy that abides, and life that will not cease;
Too long thy feet the path of doubt have trod;
Leave thy low life! Rise up and live with God!

The Work in Nashville; Its Encouragements and Needs

MRS. E. G. WHITE

My heart has been made glad by the encouraging advancement of the Lord's cause in Nashville, Tenn. As a few tried, faithful workers in this city have labored perseveringly, God has gone before them in a most wonderful manner, and has opened the way for a great work to be done. Those who have advanced in faith, now see so many opportunities for establishing the truth firmly in Nashville that they feel like making an effort to arouse every believer in the third angel's message to meet the emergency and help them take advantage of these opportunities. I have the same desire; and so confident have I been regarding the willingness of our brethren and sisters throughout the churches in America to meet the situation nobly, that I have encouraged our brethren in the South to arise in the strength of God, and with faith and courage enter his opening providences. (1)

The Lord has set the seal of his approval on the effort to establish memorials to his name in the city of Nashville. He has signified that from this important center, the light of the truth for this time shall radiate to every part of the Southern field. Nashville is a natural center for our work in the South. And the influence of the various educational and publishing institutions established there, makes the city a favorable place in which to carry on the various phases of our work.

In Nashville much interest is taken in the colored people. In and near the city are large schools for the colored people. The truth is to be brought before the white people of Nashville, including those who have given of their means and influence for the benefit of the colored race. They have taken a noble stand for the uplifting of this people. They should be given a representation of our work that will be an object-lesson in genuine Christian education and medical missionary training. We are to do all that we can to remove from the minds of the people the prejudice that exists against our work. If the efforts we put forth are in accordance with God's will, many will be converted.

For the accomplishment of the work that should be done in Nashville the best talent is needed. In so important a center of influence, we need men who talk courage and faith,— men who never become discouraged,— men who cling to the Mighty One, and in his strength make decided efforts to advance,— men who believe that the God of Israel still lives and reigns, and that he will surely fulfil his word. And how thankful we should be that at this time there are in Nashville tried soldiers of the cross,— laborers of long experience, who with voice and pen are effectively proclaiming the vital truths of the third angel's message. God desires the gray-haired pioneers, the men who acted a part in the work when the first, second, and third angels' messages were first given, to stand in their place in his work today.

The Nashville Meeting-House

For a long time the Sabbath-keepers in Nashville have met for worship in a room in the publishing house. But some have felt that in order to give a correct impression regarding the exalted character of our faith, we ought in some way to provide for a church building. But considering the lack of means, it seemed impossible to secure a suitable house of worship.

About the time that Elder Haskell and his wife united with Elder Butler in labor at Nashville, the Lord instructed me in the night season to bear to the brethren and sisters in the South the following message: —

[" God would have the standard lifted higher and still higher. The church can not abridge her task without denying her Master. Meeting-houses must be built in many places. Is it economy to fail to provide in our cities places of worship where the Redeemer may meet with his people? Let us not give the impression that we find it too great an expense to provide properly for the reception of the heavenly Guest.

" In laying plans for building, we need the wisdom of God. We should not needlessly incur debt, but I would say that in every case all the money required to complete a building need not be in hand before the work is begun. We must often move forward by faith, working as expeditiously as possible. It is through a lack of faith that we fail of receiving the fulfilment of God's promises. We must work and pray and believe. We are to move forward steadily and earnestly, trusting in the Lord, and saying, 'We will not fail nor become discouraged.'] (1)

" Let our brethren in Nashville and in all parts of the South lay aside their doubts, and come over to the side of faith. Let them say, 'We will do our best. No longer will we question the work and ways of the Lord. From this time we will believe the word of the Lord, and obey his command to " arise and build," whether all the money required is in sight or not.'

" The Lord has instructed me that in some places there are buildings suitable for our work, and that we can secure these buildings at reasonable cost."

In the providence of God, about a year after our brethren received this message, and after they had decided that they could not afford to buy land and build a meeting-house suitable for their needs, an opportunity came to them to purchase a good house of worship in a desirable location for five thousand dollars. The brethren made a careful examination of the property, and decided that it be purchased. The step required an exercise of faith; for no funds were in hand to make the first payment of one thousand dollars. Their great need led them to go forward, trusting in God for help.

The building is in need of some repairs, in order that it may correspond with the directions God has given regarding the places in which his people meet to worship him.

The opportunity to purchase this church property is one fulfilment of the light given me by the Lord that to our people would be offered at a price far below the original cost, properties that could be used in our work. It was in the providence of God that our brethren obtained possession of this house of worship in Nashville. We are confident the means to pay for it will come in, because we have asked for it, and God has signified that it will be received by the workers in Nashville.

The Nashville Mission and Bible Training-School

[Brother and Sister Haskell have rented a house in one of the best parts of the city, and have gathered round them a family of helpers, who day by day go out giving Bible readings, selling our papers, and doing medical missionary work. During the hour of worship, the workers relate their experiences. Bible studies are regularly conducted in the home, and the young men and young women connected with the mission receive a practical, thorough training in holding Bible readings and in selling our publications. The Lord has blessed their labors, a number have embraced the truth, and many others are deeply interested.] (2)

It was in this way that the fishermen who left their nets at the call of Christ were trained. [A similar work should be done in many cities. The young people (2)

(2) Evangelism p. 108

who go out to labor in these cities should (1) be under the direction of experienced, consecrated leaders. Let the workers be provided with a good home, in which they may receive thorough training. The Lord has a precious, sacred work of soul-saving to be done in the world, and it is to be done now. This work is to be carried forward on a higher plane of individual responsibility than ever before.

The Tent-Meeting

For a long time the workers in Nashville have been searching for a suitable place in which to pitch a tent for a series of tent-meetings. For months it seemed impossible for them to find a place, but recently the Lord opened the way for them to secure a good place, and the tent has been pitched, and the meetings opened.

The God of Israel has commanded that the work in the South shall go forward. How grateful we should be that he has placed in Nashville experienced workers who are determined to make a success of the work, surmounting all difficulties! So long as these workers keep their hands uplifted to heaven, the Lord will be their strength, their front guard and their rearward.

The Nashville Sanitarium

Medical missions must be opened as pioneer agencies to prepare the way for the proclamation of the third angel's message in the cities of the South. O how great is the need for means to do this work! Gospel medical missions can not be established without financial aid Every such mission calls for our sympathy, and for our means, that facilities may be provided to make the work successful. These institutions, conducted in accordance with the will of God, would remove prejudice, and call our work into favorable notice. The highest aim of the workers is to be the spiritual health of the patients. Medical missionary work gives opportunity for (2) carrying forward successful evangelistic work. It is as these lines of effort are united, that we may expect to gather the most precious fruit for the Lord.

For some time, Brethren Hayward and Hansen have been carrying on sanitarium work in a modest way in the heart of the city, and in a rented building a few miles out of the city. The difficulties and inconveniences against which they have had to contend have greatly retarded the work, making it doubly hard.

During my visit to the Southern field a year ago, we tried to find, near Nashville, a property suitable for a sanitarium. We examined several places, but arrived at no definite decision. Recently I have been rejoiced to learn that there has been found a desirable property four miles south of the city, and near the terminus of a street-car line. In this tract there are thirty-three acres of land. Our brethren regard the location as an ideal site for a sanitarium. An ample supply of water comes from a lithia spring, pure, and clear as crystal.

Our brethren were able to buy this property for eight thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars, by paying cash. The amount was loaned to them by a brother in Kentucky.

A sanitarium building should soon be erected on this property. Our brethren must have help in order to build up this much-needed institution. The establishment of medical institutions in the South will make the work more expensive; but the importance of this line of effort can not be overestimated.

Our Opportunity

And now, my dear brethren and sisters, how shall we relate ourselves, individually, to the work that is being carried forward in Nashville? My heart is stirred. I can not but feel the deepest sympathy for my brethren in the South, who have been laboring earnestly and untiringly to carry out the directions given that in Nashville the truth is to be proclaimed. Elder Haskell and his wife and Elder Butler have been and still are most earnest, self-denying workers in that field. They and their associates are advancing at the command of the Lord, in order that a knowledge of the truth for this time may be given to the people of Nashville and of the entire South. Shall not we encourage them to continue their aggressive work, by revealing our sympathy in a practical way?

In the name of the Lord, I now call upon the members of our churches in the North and the South, the East and the West, to contribute liberally for the work at Nashville. Let the children act their part. The Lord will greatly bless you as you help this needy field. He expects those for whom he has made so great a sacrifice, to show their appreciation of his love by denying self for the good of others.

God has bestowed gifts on man, not capriciously, but with equality. To every man God has given talents according to his ability to use them. And it is his purpose that the different parts of his field shall receive the help that their needs demand. When his stewards act unselfishly, his work is advanced, and rejoicing is the result.

True Christians, whose interests are bound up with the interests of Christ, are pained to the heart as they see that by man's cupidity the Saviour is dishonored in the person of his saints. They are cut to the quick as they see their fellow men perishing in their sins, and precious opportunities to save them passing by unimproved because means for the carrying forward of the work of soul-saving are not available.

The workers in Nashville have not received the help that they should have had; and we now entreat you, my brethren and sisters, to send of your means to the workers there; for they are greatly in need of help. This morning I have been asking the Lord to move upon your hearts to do this, that his work in Nashville may not be delayed. I have faith and hope to believe that you will respond with gladness of heart.

A Prayer for Help

We must all look to God. We must all present our necessities to Christ our Burden-bearer, the One who knows the great burdens that are borne by his servants in important centers, and who knows how greatly they need help.

I am pleading with God to enlighten our brethren in all matters, that they may understand the work that needs to be done just now in Nashville. My prayer is: "We come to thee, O thou Saviour of the world, pleading the promise, 'Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you.' I ask sincerely, earnestly, because I believe thy word. Help our faithful, aged workers in Nashville, Tenn. I, thy dependent, believing child, take thy words, and call upon thee to open the hearts of thy people throughout the United States, and lead them to send in their offerings to Nashville now, just now. Help Elder Butler and Elder Haskell in their tent effort. Help them to secure means to pay for the meeting-house and to set it in acceptable order, so that it will make a presentation corresponding with thy directions. Help thy servants to establish a sanitarium for the honor of thy name.

"In thy lessons to thy disciples thou didst say, 'What man is there of you, whom if his son ask bread, will he give him a stone? or if he ask a fish, will he give him a serpent?' Thou hast said, 'If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your Father which is in heaven give good things to them that ask him.'

"My Heavenly Father, we ask thee in Christ's name to give to the workers in Nashville the things they so much need to advance thy work. Encourage the hearts of thy servants to do this work, to look to thee, to ask of thee the things they need, to believe in thee. Sustain their faith and courage. O, sustain their courage, and indite their prayers! Keep them ever looking to thee, ever believing and receiving thy promised gifts. Keep them glad, hopeful, rejoicing, that their words may glorify thee.

"O Lord, I do believe. O Lord, thou wilt hear. Make thy servants strong in faith, strong in hope, strong in courage, mighty in word and deed to proclaim thy truth. Amen."

Closing Events of the Judgment

J. O. CORLISS

It seems quite evident that the book of life is kept for the purpose of retaining names in remembrance of those who are to be "caught up" to meet the Lord at his coming. The fact that the Saviour says that he will not "blot out" the name of the overcomer from that book, at the final examination of his life-work, shows this to be so. But the retention of one's name in that book as he who is accounted worthy to have part

Encouragement (1)

We have our days of darkest gloom,
  Our hours of grief and sadness,
With nothing bright to cheer our life,
  And give us joy and gladness.
But then we know the darkest time
  Is just before the dawning;
There may be "weeping for a night,
  But joy comes in the morning."
Thank God for this most blessed truth,
  That cheers us in our sorrow;
For hearts that mourn and weep to-day
  Shall thrill with joy to-morrow.

We pray and labor for the right,
  And often get discouraged,
For wrong holds sway and rules the day,
  And we're cast down and worried;
But we should never once lose heart, (2)
  Though burdened, sad, and weeping,
For if we "sow" the "precious seed,"
  With "joy" we'll do the "reaping."
Lord, help us, then, to labor on,
  And trouble never borrow;
The wrong, 'tis true, may rule to-day,
  But right shall win to-morrow.

But long we've suffered, toiled, and prayed,
  And for the right have striven;
And we've received no recompense
  For time and labors given.
O brothers, let us not forget
  Our deeds are all recorded;
And soon God's faithful ones shall be Abundantly rewarded.
O, then we'll trust and love him still,
  And where he leads we'll follow;
The toil and strife we'll have to-day,
  The crown of stars to-morrow.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon—No. 3

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The Responsibilities of Burden-Bearers

After King David, in the presence of the men in positions of responsibility in his kingdom, had outlined his plans regarding the building of the temple, he appealed to them to co-operate with Solomon in carrying forward this work. "Who," he asked of the assembled multitude, "is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?"

Willing Service

(1) The response came not only in liberal offerings of treasures to meet the expense of the building, but also in willing service in the various lines of God's work. Hearts were filled with a desire to return to the Lord his own, by consecrating to his service all the energies of mind and body. Those upon whom had been placed burdens of state, determined to labor heartily and unselfishly, using for God the skill and ability he had given them.

David's exhortation to Solomon, and his appeal to the burden-bearers of the nation, should be kept in mind by those who are in positions of trust in the Lord's cause to-day. In this our day God's people will prosper only so long as they keep his precepts; and those who bear responsibilities are called upon to consecrate their service to the Lord. Conference officers, church officers, managers and heads of departments in our institutions, laborers in the field at home and abroad,—all are to render faithful service by using their talents wholly for God. The Lord is not pleased with half-hearted service. To him we owe all that we have and are.

Implicit Obedience

To all engaged in his service, the Lord gives wisdom. The tabernacle to be borne from place to place in the wilderness, and the temple at Jerusalem, were built in accordance with special directions from God. Throughout the ages, God has been particular as to the design and the accomplishment of his work. In this age, he has given his people much light and instruction in regard to how his work is to be carried forward,—in an elevated, refined, conscientious manner; and he is pleased with those who in their service carry out his design. Only those who, feeling their own inefficiency, obey implicitly the Lord's commands, can be retained in his service.

Uzzah meddled with the ark, notwithstanding the plain command of the Lord to regard it with fear and trembling, and to keep it sacred. He had to be removed from the Lord's work. God changes not. To-day he is just as desirous as in the days of Uzzah that men shall know his ways, and that they shall reverence the methods he has outlined for their guidance. They are to carry out the plans he has devised. When men feel that it is unimportant to obey a "Thus saith the Lord" in carrying forward his work, but that their own plans should be followed, they thereby evidence unfitness for any position of trust in his cause. In every effort to advance the interests of his work, we must lose sight of self, and keep in view God's glory.

Satan's propositions appear to present great advantages, but they end in ruin. Over and over again men have found out by experience the result of choosing to follow the plans of men rather than the plans that God has made for us. Will not others gain wisdom from their experience? Let us be afraid of any plans that are not heaven-born.

Often the professed followers of Christ are found with hearts hardened and eyes blinded, because they do not obey the truth. Selfish motives and purposes take possession of the mind. In their self-confidence they suppose that their way is the way of wisdom. They are not particular to follow exactly the path that God has marked out. They declare that circumstances alter cases, and when Satan tempts them to follow worldly principles, they yield, and, making crooked paths for their feet, they lead others astray. The inexperienced follow where they go, supposing that the judgment of Christians so experienced must be wise.

Those in positions of responsibility who follow their own way are held responsible for the mistakes of those who are led astray by their example. "Shall I not judge for these things?" God asks.

There are those who think that they can improve upon the plan that the Lord has given; that they can mark out for themselves a course better than the course he has marked out for them. Such ones, choosing the things that be of men, harden their hearts against God's leading, and follow their own way. Unless they repent, the time will come when they will look upon the utter failure of their life-work. Man's wisdom, exercised without Christ's guidance, is a dangerous element.

Any recognition or exaltation gained apart from God is worthless; for it is not honored in heaven. To have the approval of men does not win God's approval. Those who would be acknowledged by God in the day of judgment, must here listen to his counsels and be governed by his will. Only thus can they receive the rich blessings that will fit them to receive his commendation. They must hold fast to the truth until the end, refusing to be drawn from their allegiance by any ambitious projects.

Stemming the Tide of Evil

We have not realized fully the importance of studying the counsel given by the Lord, through David, to Solomon, regarding those who are unworthy of confidence. Those who prove untrue are to be dealt with in accordance with the wisdom that God will impart. Never are God's servants to look upon disaffection, scheming, and deception as virtues; those in responsibility are to manifest their decided disapproval of all unfaithfulness in business and spiritual matters. And they are to choose as counselors in every line of work, only those men in whom they can repose the utmost confidence.

In the sixteenth chapter of First Corinthians we read: "Watch ye, stand fast in the faith, quit you like men, be strong." Those who are elevated to official positions in the Lord's work are ever to guard against incurring the guilt of rash speech, of unfaithfulness, of betrayal of sacred trusts. And only so long as they discharge aright their responsibilities, are they to be retained in office.

Those who bear responsibilities must be wide-awake. It is not the man who drifts with circumstances, and who in an emergency indorses questionable moves, who wins the respect of his fellow men and the approval of heaven. It is the man who, like a rock meeting the tide, stands firm against evil who commands respect. In a crisis, when many are not fully decided as to the right course, the one who moves steadfastly in the path that God has marked out, with unshaken determination carrying out God's plans, is the one who wins confidence as a man fit to command. Those who occupy positions of responsibility should know what saith the Lord, and they should then stand unflinchingly for the right, stemming the tide of evil.

Commentary, Vol. 3 p. 1129, 1130 (1)

Evangelism p. 67 (2)

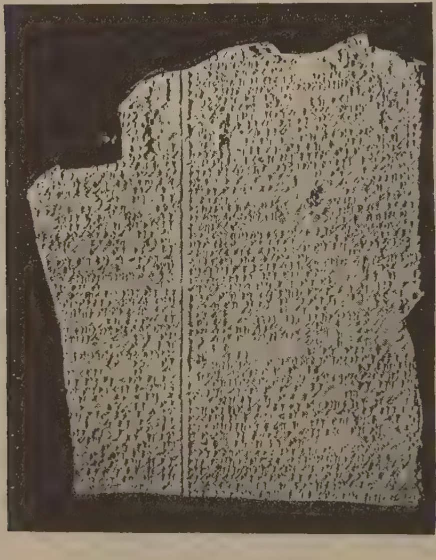
M. E. KERN

A little over thirty years ago George Smith found in the ruins of old Nineveh a great library of over thirty thousand clay books, the library of Assurbanipal king of Assyria, 668 to 626 B. C. There was evidence to show that they had been once arranged in order according to subjects. Among them he found an account of the flood in many respects like the Bible account. The deluge tablets tell how Bel commanded that a boat be built in which to preserve life. It tells of the storm, the landing of the ark on a mountain, the sending out of birds, and the offering of sacrifices on landing. But the Babylonian account shows plainly that the story has been handed down through minds that had chosen to forget God and corrupt themselves. The story is polytheistic. It says at the close that when the sacrifice was offered to the gods, they smelled the sweet savor, and swarmed around like flies.



A DELUGE TABLET

Present Excavations in the East

There has been quite a revival of Oriental study in the last few years. With much difficulty the work is carried on, because of the conservatism of the Turkish government, lack of funds to properly conduct the explorations, and because of danger from an unfriendly climate, and often hostile tribes. Wild beasts are sometimes also a menace, for the prophecy of Babylon has been literally fulfilled that the wild beasts should make their home there. Work is being carried on in Persia at Susa, or Shushan, by the French. The German Oriental Society is excavating in the ruins of old Babylon, on the tower-temple supposed to be the original "tower of Babel." The French are excavating at Tello, a city that flourished before the birth of Abraham; and a new society organized by the University of Chicago has lately received a firman, or permit, to excavate at Bismya, in central Babylonia. The University of Pennsylvania has been excavating at Nippur, about fifty miles from Babylon, and has brought to this country probably the most remarkable relics in existence. Nippur is supposed to be the Biblical Calneh, and is the oldest city yet investigated. The illustration shows the appearance of Nippur before the arrival of the expedition. The miniature mountains cover an area three fourths of a mile wide by one mile long. The highest mound is one hundred and ten feet, and the average height of the mounds is sixty feet. The ruins are about equally divided by the dry bed of an old navigable canal, of which I shall have more to say later. The earliest stratum found is thirty feet beneath the plain, the surrounding country having filled in by inundations and other causes to that amount.

THE NIPPUR MOUND

Results of Excavations

The history of early Babylon is being largely reconstructed as a result of the excavations at Nippur. Dr. Clay, of Philadelphia, says: —

"The antiquities of the earliest known period, instead of being rude, primitive, or aboriginal, are found to be very highly developed. The earliest known inscriptions show that the characters, instead of being pictorial outlines as they once were, have gone through a long development."

"The skill of the gem cutter and sculptor," he says, "surpass later periods." "In many respects," he further says, "The culture is not surpassed even at the present day."

These are remarkable statements, and these discoveries are revolutionizing men's ideas of antiquity. Here, too, lies the danger. Still wedded to their evolutionary theories, scholars take the unearthing of these advanced civilizations to mean that the world is thousands of years older than it was formerly believed to be. Thus the author just quoted says: "Several thousands of years at least must have passed before a people was advanced far enough to produce such masterpieces."

We do not know just how old the world is, and the Bible does not reveal it; but I believe that in history as well as in science there are wild speculations to be avoided. And one not to be led astray must study with the Bible in hand and the heart in touch with the Infinite One. We may sometimes have wrong ideas of what the Bible says, but the Bible is never wrong. And in all the efforts that have been made against it, not one demonstrated scientific truth nor one proven historical fact has ever contradicted the Bible. But in history as well as in science, men take the very witnesses that God has left to show the truthfulness of his Word and try to make them prove their preconceived ideas of evolution. These evidences of very early remarkable civilizations, comparable even with our own, do not prove that there were millenniums before that in which these people developed from savagery to civilization, but they prove, on the other hand, that there was no such long development, but that man made in the image of God possessed a powerful intellect and remarkable genius. And it stands us in hand to know these things, and to be able to combat infidelity hidden under the cloak of science and history.

The Wicked Watcheth the Righteous

T. E. BOWEN

That man, whoever he may be, who has a spirit of watching some one else to discover some mistake, some fault, some misstep, God calls a wicked man. Mark carefully what he says of him: "The wicked watcheth the righteous, and seeketh to slay him." Ps. 37:32.

This watching here mentioned is a far different watching than that about which the Lord instructs us. He commands us to watch, but it is not the other man, our neighbor, our brother, our sister, but it is our own hearts, our own identical selves the Master tells us to look out for, to watch.

How comfortable it is to be in the presence of noble-hearted brethren and sisters who you know will not pick up every little error or omission and comment upon it to others. It is restful. Well, why not be this way? Why let in this wicked spirit of watching for something to report? God calls the thing wickedness. The wicked watch; the righteous are watched. In which company are we? What a world of iniquity might be avoided in the church if the unholy watchers would go out of business forever.

Linger Not

The time is short!
If thou wouldst work for God, it must be now;
If thou wouldst win the garland for thy brow,
Redeem the time.

Shake off earth's sloth!
Go forth with staff in hand while yet 'tis day;
Set out with girded loins upon the way;
Up! linger not!

Fold not thy hands!
What has the pilgrim of the cross and crown
To do with luxury or couch of down?
On, pilgrim, on!

With His reward
He comes; he tarries not; his day is near;
When men least look for him he will be here;
Prepare for him!

Let not the flood
Sweep thy firm feet from the eternal Rock;
Face calmly, solemnly, the billows' shock;
Fear not the storm.

Withstand the foe;
Die daily, that forever thou mayest live:
Be faithful unto death; the Lord will give
The crown of life.

The Work Among the Colored People

Dear Brethren and Sisters: I greatly desire to impress your minds with the importance of doing what you can to help forward the work for the colored people in the Southern States. In this field there are thousands and thousands of negroes, many of whom are ignorant and in need of the gospel. Upon the white people of the United States the Lord has laid the burden of uplifting this race. But, as yet, Seventh-day Adventists have done comparatively little to help them.

There are many, many places in the South in which no earnest Christian effort has been made for the colored people. These unentered fields, in their unsightly barrenness, stand before heaven as a witness against the unfaithfulness of those who have had great light. When I think of the way in which this line of work has been treated, there comes over me an intensity of feeling that words can not express. Like the priest and the Levite, men have looked indifferently on a most pitiful picture, and have passed by on the other side. For years this has been the record. Our people have put forth only a hundredth part of the earnest effort that they should have put forth to warn the indifferent, to educate the ignorant, and to minister to the needy souls in this field.

A few faithful laborers have made beginnings here and there. And among our brethren and sisters in the more favored fields of America, there are warm hearts beating in sympathy with the hearts of those who, with integrity and faithfulness, have bravely borne a burden of labor for the colored people, laying a foundation that will be as enduring as eternity. The Lord has been working with and for the tried laborers in the South. Many are preparing to put their shoulders to the wheel, to help advance the work. The cloud of darkness and despondency is rolling back, and the sunshine of God's favor is shining upon the workers. The Lord is gracious. He will not leave the work in the South in its present condition. The people living in this great field will yet have the privilege of hearing the last message of mercy, warning them to prepare for the great day of God which is right upon us. Now, just now, is our time to proclaim the third angel's message to the millions living in the Southern States, who know not that the Saviour's coming is near at hand.

The Training of Workers

For the accomplishment of the Lord's work among the colored people in the South, we can not look wholly to white laborers. We need, O, so much! colored workers to labor for their own people, in places where it would not be safe for white people to labor. Without delay, most decided efforts should be made to educate and train colored men and women to labor as missionaries. We must provide means for the education and training of Christian colored students in the Southern States, who, being accustomed to the climate, can work there without endangering their lives. Promising young men and young women should be educated as teachers. They should have the very best advantages. Those who make the fear of the Lord the beginning of wisdom, and give heed to the counsel of men of experience, can be a blessing, by carrying to their own people the light of present truth. Every worker who labors in humility and in harmony with his brethren, will be a channel of light to many who are now in the darkness of ignorance and superstition.

It was for the education of Christian workers, that, in the providence of God, the General Conference purchased a beautiful farm of three hundred acres near Huntsville, Ala., and established an industrial training-school for colored students. During the past two or three years I have often received instruction in regard to this school, showing what manner of school it should be, and what those who go there as students are to become.

All that is done by those connected with the Huntsville school, whether they be teachers or students, is to be done with the realization that this is the Lord's institution, in which the students are to be taught how to cultivate the land, and how to labor for the uplifting of their own people. They are to work with such earnestness and perseverance that the farm will bear testimony to the world, to angels, and to men, regarding the fidelity with which this gift of land has been cared for. This is the Lord's farm, and it is to bear fruit to his glory. Heavenly angels will be able to read, in the thrift and painstaking effort revealed in the care of the farm, the story of the improvement made by the students themselves in character-building. On this farm the students are to learn how to earn their living by honest work. Such a knowledge will be of inestimable value to them when they go forth to teach others of their race.

The students of the Huntsville school are to be given a training in many lines of service. All are to be taught the importance of practical Christianity And they are to learn how to present the truth for this time to their own people. Not only are they to learn to do public work, but they should learn also the special value of house-to-house work in soul-saving. In carrying forward work among the colored people, it is not learned men, not eloquent men, who are now the most needed, but humble men who in the school of Christ have learned to be meek and lowly, and who will go forth into the highways and hedges to give the invitation, "Come; for all things are now ready." Those who beg at midnight for loaves for hungry souls, will be successful. It is a law of heaven that as we receive, we are to impart

In all the Lord's arrangements, there is nothing more beautiful than his plan of giving to men and women a diversity of gifts. The church of God is made up of many vessels, both large and small. The Lord works through the men and women who are willing to be used. He will bless them in doing the work that has brought blessing to many in the past,— the work of seeking to save souls ready to perish. There are many who have received but a limited religious and intellectual training, but God has a work for this class to do, if they will labor in humility, trusting in him.

The Lord says, I will take illiterate men, obscure men, and move upon them by my Spirit to carry out my purposes in the work of saving souls. The last message of mercy will be given by a people who love and fear me. "Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit." We should give willing, devoted men every possible encouragement to go forward and in their humble way reveal their loyalty to principle and their integrity to God. Let them visit the people at their homes, and talk and pray with the unwarned regarding the soon-coming Saviour. Let them take a personal interest in those whom they meet. Christ took a personal interest in men and women while he lived on this earth. He was a true missionary everywhere he went. His followers are to go about doing good, even as he did. By personal efforts to meet the people where they are, coarse and rough though some of these people may be, humble house-to-house missionaries and colporteurs may win the hearts of many to Christ. In their unpretentious way they can reach a class that ministers generally can not touch.

The Establishment of Schools

No line of work will be of more telling advantage to the colored people in the Southern field than the establishment of small schools. Hundreds of mission schools must be established; for there is no method of giving the truth to these people so effectual and economical as these small schools. This line of work has been specially presented before me. But the work is almost at a standstill for the lack of money to provide facilities for the training of teachers, and for the building of schoolhouses, and for paying the wages of the teachers.

There are many who can not even read the divine Word; many are slaves of superstition; and yet through divine power these poor, ignorant beings, degraded by sin, may be saved, elevated, sanctified, ennobled. And in the Lord's estimation every soul saved is worth more than the wealth of the whole world. Those who are ignorant must be educated; and this means much. Instead of making superabundant provision for educating a few, we should devise ways and means of helping the many who are neglected and oppressed.

So far as possible, these mission schools for colored people should be established outside the cities. But in the cities there are many children who could not attend the schools that will be established out of the cities; and schools should be opened for them.

The colored people need simple books. They have been left in ignorance when they should have been taught; left unconverted when every effort possible should have been put forth to rescue and save them.

This work will require talent, and, above everything else, the grace of God. The colored youth will be found to be far more difficult to manage than the white youth, because they have not been taught from their childhood to make the best use of their time. Many of them have had no opportunity to learn how to take care of themselves. Those who for years have been working to help the colored people, know their needs; and they are the best fitted to begin schools for them. Colored teachers must work for the colored people, under the supervision of well-qualified men who have the spirit of mercy and love. How important it is, then, that we place our training-school at Huntsville on vantage-ground, so that many may be educated to labor as teachers of their own race!

Medical Missionary Work

In no place is there greater need of genuine gospel medical missionary work than among the colored people in the South. Had such a work been done for them immediately after the proclamation of freedom, their condition to-day would have been very different. Medical missionary work must be carried forward for the colored people. Sanitariums and treatment rooms should be established in many places. These will open doors for the entrance of Bible truth.

This work will require devoted men and means, and much wise planning. Years ago we should have been training colored men and women to care for the sick. Plans should now be made to do a quick work. Let promising colored young men,— young men of good Christian character,— be given a thorough training for this line of service. Let them be imbued with the thought that in all their work they are to proclaim the third angel's message. Strong, intelligent, consecrated colored nurses will find a wide field of usefulness opening before them.

Christ, the great Medical Missionary, is our example. Of him it is written, that he " went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of disease among the people." He healed the sick, and preached the gospel. In his service, healing and teaching were linked closely together. To-day they are not to be separated. The nurses who are trained in our institutions, are to be fitted to go out as medical missionary evangelists, uniting the ministry of the Word with that of physical healing.

The Lord has instructed us that with our training-schools there should be connected small sanitariums, that the students may have opportunity to gain a knowledge of medical missionary work. This line of work is to be brought into our schools as part of the regular instruction. Huntsville has been especially pointed out as a school in connection with which there should be facilities for thoroughly training consecrated colored youth who desire to become competent nurses and hygienic cooks. We have delayed long enough the carrying out of this instruction.

Redeeming the Time

My brethren and sisters, let us look at the destitution of this field. Let us consider the ignorance, the poverty, the misery, the distress of many of the people. They know but little in regard to Bible truth. They are unacquainted with the Lord Jesus Christ. And yet this field lies at our door! How selfish and inattentive we have been to our neighbors! We have passed them by, doing little to relieve their suffering. The condition of this field is a condemnation of our professed Christianity.

Let us now arise, and redeem the time Everything in the universe calls upon those who know the truth to consecrate themselves unreservedly to the proclamation of the truth as it has been made known to them in the third angel's message. That which we see of the needs of the millions of colored people in the South, calls us to our duty. We are not to become dispirited and disheartened over the outlook. The Lord lives and reigns. And he expects us to do our part, by training for service and by sustaining in the field those who are best fitted to labor for the colored people. To our every effort he will add his blessing. His faithful servants in charge of the various lines of work, will be given wisdom to discern talent, and to train an army of workers to labor with courageous perseverance for their own race. There is work to be done in many hard places, and out of these places laborers are to come. The field is opening in the Southern States, and many wise, Christian colored men and women will be called to the work. The Lord now gives us the opportunity of searching out these men and women, and of teaching them how to engage in the work of saving souls. When they go forth into the field, God will co-operate with them, and give them the victory.

Babylon (Continued)

M. E. KERN

How do we know what kings built these ancient ruins? Inscriptions are usually found such as are often seen on buildings nowadays, telling who built them; but there is another thing that enables us to determine who built the ancient Babylonian structures. The kings usually put their name and title on every brick. The illustration shows a brick of Sargon I of Babylonia (not the Assyrian Sargon), and also the stamp with which the impressions were made. This practise enables us to tell also who repaired the buildings. Thus Nebuchadnezzar was a great builder, and boasts also of having repaired many buildings. This we know to be true; for his bricks are found everywhere. He repaired what is supposed to be the " tower of Babel," rearing it up, he says,

The Collection for the Colored Work

(To be Read in all the Churches on Sabbath, October 7)

Dear Brethren and Sisters: I am thankful that the General Conference has set apart the first Sabbath in October as a day upon which a general contribution will be taken up in all our churches for the advancement of the work among the colored people of the Southern States. I have great hope that this important work will receive substantial help as the result of this collection. I am working, praying, and hoping for this; and I shall leave the result with God.

Some may say that the work in the Southern States is already receiving from the General Conference more than its share of attention, more than its proportion of men and means. But if the South were not a neglected, needy field, if there were not a pressing necessity for more work to be done there in many different lines, why should the Lord keep the question constantly before his people as he has done for so many years?

Over and over again the Lord has presented before me the pioneer work that must be done in new territory. When a difficult field is presented before me as one that must receive special attention, I understand that it is my duty to make this field my special burden, until, before the earnest, continuous efforts put forth, the difficulties disappear, and the work is established.

The work among the colored people in the Southern field, with its encouraging and discouraging features, has been kept before me for many years. While in Australia, I earnestly called upon my brethren and sisters in America to awake to the responsibility resting upon them to carry the third angel's message to this neglected race. And since my return to this country, I have borne a similar message in every place where I have been. I have an intense interest in all that concerns the welfare of the work among the colored people.

Few realize the magnitude of the work that must be done among the colored people. In the South there are millions who have never heard the third angel's message. These must be given the light of present truth. And it is because of the neglect of our people to take hold of this work heartily, that the Lord has instructed me to continue making appeals in their behalf.

At one time I felt as if I could no longer bear the burden of this work. I thought that if men would continue to do as they have done, I would let matters drift, and let those who have so much confidence in their own plans go on as they chose to go. I intended merely to pray that the Lord would have mercy upon the ignorant and those who are out of the way. But I dared not lay down the burden; for in the visions of the night the Lord asked me the question: "Will you do that which many would be only too pleased to see you doing? Will you keep silent? Will your voice no longer be heard presenting clearly and distinctly the needs of this long-neglected field? If so, you yourself will share the reproach that rests on the ministers and people who have not done for the Southern field the work the Lord has given them to do, who have passed by on the other side those who are their neighbors, treating them with indifference and cruel neglect."

I know not how to describe the way in which the Southern field has been presented to me. In this field thousands and thousands of people are living in ignorance of the third angel's message, and they are right within the shadow of our doors. This field bears testimony to the neglect of a people who should have been wide-awake to work for the Master among all classes, but who have done very little for the colored people of the South. A little work has been done there, it is true; we have touched the field with the tips of our fingers; but not one hundredth part of the work has been done that should be done. God calls upon his people to stand in a right position before him, to heed the light given fifteen years ago — that the colored people be labored for and helped.

My brethren and sisters, I entreat you to arouse, and show a living interest in the unworked portions of the Lord's vineyard. Catch the spirit of the great Master Worker. His heart was ever touched with human woe. Why are we so cold and indifferent? Why are our hearts so unimpressionable? Christ placed himself on the altar of service, a living sacrifice. Why are we so unwilling to give ourselves to the work to which he consecrated his life? Something must be done to cure the terrible indifference that has taken hold upon us. Let us bow our heads in humiliation as we see how much less we have done than we might have done to sow the seeds of truth.

To the members of our churches I am instructed to say once more, Take hold of this work now, at once, and resolutely put away all compliance with selfish desires. Come right to the merits of the case. The work among the colored people must be helped with an earnestness that is proportionate to its discouraging features. Many excuses present themselves for our not taking up this work, but these excuses are not prompted by the Holy Spirit.

The sentiment prevails in some minds that when colored people are given an education, they are spoiled for practical work. Of the education given in some schools this may be true to a certain extent; but it will not be so in the schools where the Bible is made the foundation of all education, and where the students are taught to work in the fear and love of God, as their Master worked. It will not be so where students follow the example of the One who gave his life for the life of the world.

There are among the negro race those who have superior natural intelligence, and who, if converted to Christ, could do a good work for their own people. Many should be given the opportunity of learning trades. And others are to be trained to labor as evangelists, Bible workers, teachers, nurses, hygienic cooks, and colporteurs. Many can be taught to be home missionaries.

We ask our people to enlarge their gifts, that the training of workers may be hastened, and that the various lines of work so greatly needed may be established without further delay. Every church-member should awake to the responsibility resting upon him. The colored people are to be shown that God has not left them, but that he is working that they may receive an education that will enable them to read, believe, and do the words of Christ, catching his spirit, that in turn they may work for their own people.

Churches of believers are to be developed. Meeting-houses are to be built. Facilities for caring for the sick are to be provided. Small books specially prepared to meet the needs of the people, are to be given a wide circulation. In all the large cities of the South the light of present truth is to shine forth to the colored people. And in all parts of the field, the believers, by a wise use of the talent of speech and by practical Christian Help work, are to live out the truth before those who know it not.

The Lord has instructed me that those who are now carrying on work among the colored people can not remain in the field in a bare-handed condition, and do the work that is required. It will be necessary for them to receive help. The Lord has been calling upon his people in the stronger conferences of the North, the East, and the West to sustain the Huntsville school by liberal gifts. We pray that he will put it into their hearts to respond nobly. And the smaller mission schools must also be sustained. In past years this line of work has been approved and blessed of heaven, and it must now be developed and strengthened. Means must be raised for establishing the medical missionary work also, and for training and supporting ministers and house-to-house workers.

Will our brethren awake to a realization of their responsibility? Will they give liberally, that the work in the South may be so established that it may be self-supporting? This world was established and is supported by the charity of a benevolent Creator. We are sustained by God's compassionate love. God is the donor of all we have. He calls upon us to return to him a portion of the abundance he has bestowed upon us. Think of the care he gives the earth, sending the rain and the sunshine in their season, to cause vegetation to flourish. It is the great Husbandman who gives life to the seeds planted in the earth. He bestows his favors on the just and on the unjust. Shall not the recipients of his blessings show their gratitude to him by giving of their bounties to help suffering humanity?

Greater liberality must be shown toward the work among the colored people, than has yet been shown. The families among us who have every comfort and convenience of life are to work out plans by which, through self-denial and self-sacrifice, they may help to accomplish what God has said should be accomplished.

There is before us a long-neglected duty,— the practise of self-denial and economy. In every transaction of life, we are to follow the example and reveal the spirit of the greatest Teacher the world has ever seen. He is our example in all things. When we follow his example, we shall let our light shine forth in good works.

I call upon our people in America to come up to the help of the Lord. Let those who can not do more, bring their mites; and let those who have been entrusted with more, bring larger offerings. We ask fathers and mothers to make gifts for the advancement of the work in the South, and we ask them to tell their children of the blessing they will receive if they will give of their pennies and nickels and dimes.

I present this matter to you, my brethren and sisters, and I ask you to do your best on the day that the General Conference has set apart as the time when gifts are to be made for work among the colored people. By willing liberality let us prepare the way for the laborers in the South to do a work of mercy for this people. I urge you in the name of the Lord to do something, and do it now. I pray that God will open your hearts, and help you to do justice to the needs of the work for the colored people. ELLEN G. WHITE.

Palestine

M. E. KERN

THE land of Palestine has not yet revealed much archeological material. Doubtless it will reveal more as the Palestine exploration society and others proceed with their work. In 1880 two boys bathing in a conduit that empties into the Pool of Siloam found an inscription on the side of the conduit cut in the rock. The picture shows the old pool and the outlet of the conduit. The inscription refers to the digging of the conduit and its completion; how the workmen, working from both ends, heard each others' voices when three cubits distant from each other, and how they suddenly met. The conduit was probably built in the time of Hezekiah, and the inscription shows considerable skill in engineering.

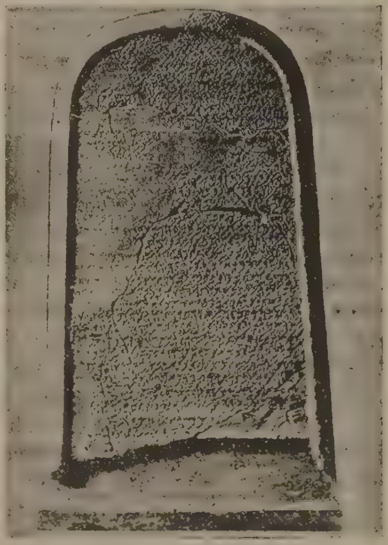
The Moabite Stone

In 1868 there was found at Dibon, in Moab, by a German missionary, a black stone two feet by four feet and fourteen inches thick, which contains the most ancient Hebrew writing known, and is a supplement to 2 Kings 3. After much negotiating, the missionary purchased the stone, but through interference of the French it was not delivered, but was broken into pieces by the Arabs and distributed among them, they thinking there was some charm about so valuable a stone. The pieces were afterward nearly all collected and put together, and the stone can be seen in the Louvre at Paris. It is an inscription of Mesha king of Moab to commemorate his deliverance from the yoke of Israel, 850 B. C. It is indeed a remarkable inscription.



THE MOABITE STONE

Conclusion

So we might go on. Enough has been said to show that Oriental archeology does indeed throw light upon the Old Testament. Day by day as the work proceeds, new light is thrown on the Sacred Word. The narrative of the Old Testament, whenever tested by contemporaneous documents, has been shown to agree in the minutest details. While inscriptions are found which supplement and illuminate the Bible, none are found which in any way seriously contradict it. On the other hand, apochryphal books like Tobit and Judith, or the histories of the East preserved in the classical writers, will not bear the test of appeal to the native inscriptions. But the Bible stands. In the words of Professor Sayce, "The long-forgotten empires of the ancient East have arisen out of the grave of centuries to testify to the truth of the oracles of God."

I hope that what I have written may increase the interest of the reader in these things, and lead him to a closer study of this subject, a subject not without difficulties, as I have pointed out, but one yielding rich returns. Every point of truth must be defended, and we need every ray of light that can be thrown upon the Sacred Word in this faithless generation.

Unload Your Cares

A VERY beautiful thought is brought out by the French translation of a verse in the first epistle of Peter. The words are: "Casting all your care upon Him; for he careth for you." Where our version reads "casting" the French translation is "unloading" (dechargeant). The difference of meaning is made plain by an illustration we have somewhere seen. The writer said: "The word 'cast' might seem to bring to our mind the action of taking up something and throwing it over on Jesus; but many times, dear friends, have you not found the cares too heavy to lift? Have you ever seen a coal cart unloaded? The man took out of the front of the heavy cart a little iron pin, and the cart was so balanced on the axle that then, with a slight pressure on the back of

Voiceless Prayers

E. H. MORTON

You ask my thoughts as gazing far
I look beyond.
My thoughts are mingled with God's thoughts,
O sacred bond!
'Tis prayer that brings the distant near,
The touch divine.
God's Spirit is the link that binds
His thoughts to mine.

I thank thee, Lord, for answered prayer,
For ripened sheaves,
And still I ask for more and more.
My spirit grieves
O'er those bowed down by worldly cares
Yet know the way,
And silently I breathe the prayer,
Help them obey.

And so I plead with heart and soul,
In house and street.
I smile, with prayer within my heart,
When friends I meet;
I clasp the hand, and upward send
A voiceless cry.
The answer comes, and well I know
Angels are nigh.

'Tis sweet to keep the chain complete,
The channel free,
To know that God is looking down
To strengthen me.
The life within no eye can see,
But O 'tis peace
And depths of joy when sinners find
From sin release!

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 4

"To Every Man His Work"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE student of sacred history will observe that throughout the ages God has distributed the responsibilities of the varied interests of his work in the earth among men whose talents fitted them for service, and who by training might become skilful in the service required.

During Jethro's visit to the camp of Israel, the Lord permitted him to see how heavy were the burdens that rested upon Moses. To maintain order and discipline among that vast, ignorant, and untrained multitude was indeed a stupendous task. Moses was their recognized leader and magistrate; and not only the general interests and duties of the people, but the controversies that arose among them, were referred to him. He had permitted this, for it gave him an opportunity to instruct them; as he said, "I do make them know the statutes of God, and his laws."

Jethro remonstrated against this, saying, "This thing is too heavy for thee; thou art not able to perform it thyself alone;" "thou wilt surely wear away;" and he counseled Moses to appoint proper persons as rulers of thousands, and rulers of hundreds, and rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens. They should be "able men, such as fear God, men of truth, hating covetousness." All matters of minor consequence were to be judged by the men placed over the smaller groups; matters of greater importance were to be carried to the higher officers; and the most difficult cases were still to be brought before Moses, who was to be to the people, said Jethro, "to God-ward, that thou mayest bring the causes unto God: and thou shalt teach them ordinances and laws, and shalt show them the way wherein they must walk, and the work that they must do." This counsel was accepted, and it not only brought relief to Moses, but resulted in establishing order and system among the people.

Chosen Men for Special Duties

Later, when the tabernacle was to be built in the wilderness, chosen men were specially endowed by God with skill and wisdom for the construction of the sacred building. And when it was completed, certain men were appointed to perform certain parts of the holy service. Moses, and Aaron and his sons, were to minister before the tabernacle of witness. "The Lord said unto Aaron, Thou and thy sons and thy father's house with thee shall bear the iniquity of the sanctuary: and thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity of your priesthood. . . . Ye shall keep the charge of the sanctuary, and the charge of the altar: that there be no wrath any more upon the children of Israel. . . . Thou and thy sons with thee shall keep your priest's office for everything of the altar, and within the veil; and ye shall serve: I have given your priest's office unto you as a service of gift."

So particular was the Lord that this sacred work should be performed only by those whom he had appointed, that he declared: "The stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death." Every worker was to know his place, and to perform faithfully the special duties committed to him; and he was to let alone that which another worker had been appointed to do.

To the Levites was committed the charge of the tabernacle and all that pertained thereto, both in the camp and on the journey. When the camp set forward, they were to strike the sacred tent; when a halting-place was reached, they were to set it up. No person of another tribe was allowed to come near, on pain of death. The Levites were separated into three divisions, the descendants of the three sons of Levi, and each was assigned its special position and work. In front of the tabernacle, and nearest to it, were the tents of Moses and Aaron. On the south were the Kohathites, whose duty it was to care for the ark and the other furniture; on the north the Merarites, who were placed in charge of the pillars, sockets, boards, etc.; in the rear the Gershonites, to whom the care of the curtains and hangings was committed.

This plan of carefully apportioning special duties to certain men who were best fitted for these duties, had been carefully studied by David, and followed in his administration of the government of Israel; and now that Solomon was placed upon the throne, David gave particular attention to the perfection of the organization of all branches of the ministration of the priests and Levites, of the civil officers, and of the army.

"When David was old and full of days, . . . he gathered together all the princes of Israel, with the priests and the Levites. Now the Levites were numbered from the age of thirty years and upward: and their number by their polls, man by man, was thirty and eight thousand. Of which, twenty and four thousand were to set forward the work of the house of the Lord; and six thousand were officers and judges: moreover four thousand were porters; and four thousand praised the Lord with the instruments."

The four thousand musicians, divided into twenty-four courses, were each led by twelve men especially instructed and skilful in the use of musical instruments. The work of the porters was also definitely arranged.

The priests were divided into twenty-four courses, and a full and accurate record was made regarding this division. Each course was thoroughly organized under its chief, and each was to come to Jerusalem twice a year, to attend for one week to the ministry of the sanctuary. (1)

The Levites, whose duty it was to assist in the sanctuary service, were organized and allotted their part with similar precision.

The care of the treasures was put into the hands of trusty men. "Of the Levites, Ahijah was over the treasures of the house of God, and over the treasures of the dedicated things. . . . All the treasures of the dedicated things, which David the king, and the chief fathers, the captains over thousands and hundreds, and the captains of the host, had dedicated; . . . and all that Samuel the seer, and Saul the son of Kish, and Abner the son of Ner, and Joab the son of Zeruiah, had dedicated; and whosoever had dedicated anything, it was under the hand of Shelomith, and of his brethren."

"And over the king's treasures was Azmaveth; . . . and over the storehouses in the fields, in the cities, and in the villages, and in the castles, was Jehonathan; . . . and over them that did the work of the field for tillage of the ground, . . . over the vineyards, . . . over the increase of the vineyards for the wine-cellars, . . . over the olive trees and the sycamore trees that were in the low plains, . . . over the herds that fed in Sharon, . . . over the herds that were in the valleys, . . . over the camels also, . . . over the asses, . . . and over the flocks," were placed men whose experience and training peculiarly fitted them for their respective duties. Thus many men of varied abilities were appointed "rulers of the substance which was King David's."

Diligence in Business

In his work to-day, the Lord would be pleased to have those who are engaged in any part of his service, guard against the tendency to take upon themselves responsibilities that they are not called upon to bear. Some of his servants are to direct the business matters connected with his work in the earth; others are to look after the spiritual matters. Every laborer is to strive to do well his part, leaving to others the duties entrusted to them.

For years the Lord has been instructing us to choose wise men,— men who are devoted to God,— men who know what the principles of heaven are, — men who have learned what it means to walk with God,— and to place upon them the responsibility of looking after the business affairs connected with our work. This is in accordance with the Bible plan as outlined in the sixth chapter of Acts. We need to study this plan; for it is approved of God. Let us follow the Word.

(1) [It is a great mistake to keep a minister who is gifted with power to preach the gospel, constantly at work in business matters. He who holds forth the Word of life is not to allow too many burdens to be placed upon him.] He must take time to study the Word and to examine self. If he closely searches his own heart, and gives himself to the Lord, he will better understand how to grasp the hidden things of God.

Let ministers and teachers remember that God holds them accountable to fill their office to the best of their ability, to bring into their work their very best powers. They are not to take up duties that conflict with the work that God has given them. It is time for our ministers to understand the responsibility and sacredness of their mission. There is a woe upon them, if they fail of performing the work which they themselves acknowledge that God has placed in their hands.

(2) [The finances of the cause are to be properly managed by business men of ability; but preachers and evangelists are set apart for another line of work. Let the management of financial matters rest on others than those set apart for the work of preaching the gospel. Our ministers are not to be heavily burdened with the business details of the evangelical work carried on in our large cities. Those in charge of our conferences should find business men to look after the financial details of city work. If such men can not be found, let facilities be provided for training men to bear these burdens.]

Men of experience in business lines, with a practical knowledge of bookkeeping, should be chosen to superintend the keeping of the accounts in our institutions at home and abroad. If such men had been appointed in years past to superintend the financial affairs of our conferences and institutions, thousands of dollars would have been saved, and the efficiency of the ministry would not have been so greatly weakened by the burden of financial cares and perplexities that has too often fallen where it does not belong.

Close investigation of the business transactions in various departments of the cause, are to be frequently made. This work must not be neglected. Never are we to sanction any transactions that imperil the purity of the Lord's church, and of his institutions, which are his appointed instrumentalities.

Those in charge of the work have erred sometimes in permitting the appointment of men devoid of business tact and ability to manage important financial interests. A man's fitness for one position does not always qualify him to fill another position. Experience is of great value. The Lord desires to have men of intelligence connected with his work, — men qualified for various positions of trust in our conferences and institutions. Especially are consecrated business men needed,— men who will carry the principles of truth into every business transaction. Those placed in charge of financial matters should not assume other burdens,— burdens that they are incapable of bearing; nor is the business management to be entrusted to incompetent men.

Men of promise in business lines should develop and perfect their talents by most thorough study and training. They should be encouraged to place themselves where, as students, they can rapidly gain a knowledge of right business principles and methods. All may improve; no one needs to remain a novice.

If men in any line of work ought to improve their opportunities to become wise and efficient, it is those who are using their ability in the work of building up the kingdom of God in our world. In view of the fact that we are living so near the close of this earth's history, there should be greater thoroughness in labor, more vigilant waiting, watching, praying, and working. All the religious service and every branch of business are to bear the signature of heaven.

"Holiness unto the Lord" is to be the motto of the laborers in every department. The human agent should strive to attain to perfection, that he may be an ideal Christian, complete in Christ Jesus.

"By Faith We Understand"

F. D. STARR

Life is full of mysterious problems; many things that we would like to know seem to be beyond our comprehension. We fail to understand God's dealings with us sometimes; we are puzzled to know why our fellow beings act as they do; we are tempted to look upon all things with which we have to do as a bundle of inconsistencies. Why is this? we inquire.

But let us be calm a moment. The multitude of things so mysterious to us may all be classified under two heads,— things that we do not need to understand, and things that by faith we can understand. As to the first class, the wise man himself confessed there were some things too wonderful for him, that he could not know (Prov. 30:18, 19), and David speaks of a knowledge that was too wonderful, too high, for him. Ps. 139:6. He says also that he refrained from exercising himself in matters beyond his reach, that were too high or too great for him. Ps. 131:1. Let us imitate this example, and thus free our minds from a multitude of queries with which we need not concern ourselves. We shall thus dispose of a large share of life's perplexing conundrums.

The other class of problems is just as thoroughly provided for; "through faith we understand." What a relief to troubled minds! "Through faith we understand that the worlds were framed by the word of God." To understand how the worlds came into existence is perhaps as great a feat as can be accomplished by our perceptive faculties. It is a matter over which scientists and geologists have puzzled their minds without arriving at any satisfactory understanding; but we understand it as fully as we need to understand it now, and we give ourselves no further trouble about that question. God by his infinite power spoke the worlds into existence. Faith teaches us this sufficient lesson.

"The Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding." 1 John 5:20. By the faith given through him we understand. By faith we have eternal life; by faith we are come to Mount Zion, the city of the living God; by faith we enter into rest; and by faith we understand.

But what is faith? — "Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." If some friend promises to give you a full explanation of a matter that you do not understand, your mind is quieted, and you are nearly as well satisfied as after the explanation is fully made. So by faith we understand,— by faith in Jesus Christ, who fully understands all things, and who is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption,— and it is only when we humble ourselves to be satisfied with his understanding of matters, and accept of that by faith as our understanding, that we get into that condition where he can teach us, and enlighten the eyes of our understanding also, so that our mental faculties can comprehend things otherwise mysterious to us.

"I Shall Be Satisfied"

NOT here! not here! not where the sparkling waters
Fade into mocking sands as we draw near,
Where in the wilderness each footstep falters:
I shall be satisfied — but O! not here.

Not here! where every dream of bliss deceives us,
Where the worn spirit never gains its goal,
Where, haunted ever by the thoughts that grieve us,
Across us floods of bitter memory roll.

There is a land where pulses will be thrilling
With rapture earth's sojourners may not know;
Where heaven's repose all hearts will then be stilling,
And peacefully life's time-tossed currents flow.

Far out of sight while yet the flesh enfolds us,
Lies the fair country where our hearts abide,
And of its bliss is naught more wondrous told us
Than these few words, "I shall be satisfied." (1)

Satisfied! satisfied! the spirit's yearning
For sweet companionship with kindred minds,
The silent love that here meets no returning,
The inspiration which no language finds,—

Shall they be satisfied? the soul's vague longing,
The aching void which nothing earthly fills?
O, what desires upon my soul are thronging
As I look upward to the heavenly hills!

Thither my weak and weary steps are tending.
Saviour and Lord! with thy frail child abide!
Guide me toward home, where, all my wanderings ended,
I shall see thee, and "shall be satisfied."

Order and Organization

MRS. E. G. WHITE

OUR God is a God of order. Everything connected with heaven is in perfect order; subjection and thorough discipline mark the movements of the angelic host.

The Jewish Economy

During the days of Moses, the government of Israel was characterized by the most thorough organization, wonderful alike for its completeness and its simplicity. The order so strikingly displayed in the perfection and arrangement of all God's created works was manifest in the Hebrew economy. God was the center of authority and government, the sovereign of Israel. Moses stood as their visible leader, by God's appointment, to administer the laws in his name. From the elders of the tribes a council of seventy was afterward chosen to assist Moses in the general affairs of the nation. Next came the priests, who consulted the Lord in the sanctuary. Chiefs, or princes, ruled over the tribes. Under these were "captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens;" and, lastly, officers who might be employed for special duties.

Reorganization at the Beginning of Solomon's Reign

[In planning for the administration of the affairs of the kingdom, after David abdicated in favor of Solomon, the aged king and his son and their counselors regarded it as essential that everything be done with regularity, propriety, fidelity, and dispatch. So far as possible, they followed the system of organization given Israel soon after the deliverance from Egypt. The Levites were assigned the work connected with the temple service, including the ministry of song and instrumental music, and the keeping of the treasures.

The men capable of bearing arms and of serving the king were divided into twelve courses of twenty-four thousand each. Over every course was a captain. "The general of the king's army was Joab." "The courses . . . came in and went out month by month throughout all the months of the year." Thus every group of twenty-four thousand served the king one month during each year.

David appointed Jonathan, his uncle, as "a counselor, a wise man, and a scribe;" Ahithophel also was "the king's counselor. . . . And after Ahithophel was Johoiada . . . and Abiathar." Hushai was "the king's friend." By his prudent example, the aged king taught Solomon that "in the multitude of counselors there is safety."

The thoroughness and completeness of the organization perfected at the beginning of Solomon's reign; the comprehensiveness of the plans for bringing the largest number possible of all the people into active service; the wide distribution of responsibility, so that the service of God and of the king should not be unduly burdensome to any individual or class,— these are lessons which all may study with profit, and which the leaders of the Christian church should understand and follow.

This picture of a great and mighty nation living in simplicity and comfort in rural homes, every person rendering willing and unsalaried service to God and the king for a portion of each year, is one from which we may gather many helpful suggestions.]

Order in the Christian Church

There was order in the church when Christ was upon the earth, and after his departure, order was strictly observed among his apostles. And now in these last days, while God is bringing his children into the unity of the faith, there is more real need of order than ever before; for, as the Lord unites his people, Satan and his evil angels are very busy to undo this unity and to destroy it.

It is Satan's studied effort to lead professed Christians just as far from heaven's arrangement as he can; therefore he sometimes deceives even the professed people of God, and makes them believe that order and discipline are enemies to spirituality; that the only safety for them is to let each pursue his own course. But if we see no necessity for harmonious action, and are disorderly, undisciplined, and disorganized in our course of action, angels, who are thoroughly organized and move in perfect order, can not work for us successfully. They turn away in grief; for they are not authorized to bless confusion, distraction, and disorganization.

All who desire the co-operation of the heavenly messengers, must work in unison with them. Those who have the unction from on high, will in all their efforts encourage order, discipline, and unity of action, and then the angels of God can co-operate with them. But never, never will these heavenly messengers place their indorsement upon irregularity, disorganization, and disorder. All such evils are the result of Satan's studied effort to weaken our forces, to destroy courage, and to prevent successful action. God desires that his work shall be done with system and exactness, in order that he may place upon it the seal of his approval.

The Result of Organized Effort

It is nearly half a century since order and organization were established among us as a people. I was one of the number who had an experience in laboring for their establishment. I know of the difficulties that had to be met, the evils that organization was designed to correct, and I have watched its influence in connection with the growth of the cause. At an early stage in the work, God gave us special light upon this point; and this light, together with the lessons that experience has taught us, should be carefully considered.

From the first our work was aggressive. Our numbers were few, and mostly from the poorer classes. Our views were almost unknown to the world. We had no houses of worship, but few publications, and very limited facilities for carrying forward our work. The sheep were scattered in the highways and byways, in cities, in towns, in forests. The commandments of God and the faith of Jesus was our message.

"Ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh,

(1) Commentary, Vol. 3 p. 1128

not many mighty, not many noble, are called: but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are: that no flesh shall glory in his presence. But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption: that, according as it is written, He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord."

Our numbers gradually increased. The seed that was sown was watered of God, and he gave the increase. At first we assembled for worship, and presented the truth to those who would come to hear, in private houses, in large kitchens, in barns, in groves, and in schoolhouses; but it was not long before we were able to build humble houses of worship. As our numbers increased, it was evident that without some form of organization, there would be great confusion, and the work could not be carried forward successfully. To provide for the support of the ministry, for carrying the work in new fields, for protecting both the churches and the ministry from unworthy members, for holding church property, for the publication of the truth through the press, and for many other objects, organization was indispensable.

Yet the feeling against organization was very strong among our people. The Adventists generally, who had withdrawn from the churches of the various denominations under the call of the second angel's message to come out of Babylon, opposed organization, and many Seventh-day Adventists were fearful that church organization would bring us under condemnation. We sought the Lord with earnest prayer that we might understand his will, and light was given to us by his Spirit, that there must be order and thorough discipline in the church,— that organization was essential. System and order are manifest in all the works of God throughout the universe. Order is the law of heaven, and it should be the law among God's people on the earth.

We had a hard struggle in establishing organization. Notwithstanding that the Lord gave Testimony after Testimony upon this point, the opposition was strong, and it had to be met again and again. But we knew that the Lord God of Israel was leading us, and guiding us by his providence. We engaged in the work of organization, and marked prosperity attended this advance movement.

As the development of the work called us to engage in new enterprises, we were prepared to enter upon them. The Lord directed our minds to the importance of educational work. We saw the need of schools, that our children might receive instruction free from the errors of false philosophy, that their training might be in harmony with the principles of the Word of God. The need of a health institution had been urged upon us, both for the help and instruction of our own people and as a means of blessing and enlightenment to others. This enterprise also was carried forward. All this was missionary work of the highest order. Our work was not sustained by large gifts and legacies; for we have few wealthy men among us.

Our work has steadily advanced. What is the secret of our prosperity?— We have moved under the orders of the Captain of our salvation. God has blessed our united efforts. The truth has spread and flourished. Institutions have multiplied. The mustard seed has grown to a great tree. The system of organization has proved a grand success. Systematic benevolence was entered into according to the Bible plan. The body has been "compacted by that which every joint supplieth." As we have advanced, our system of organization has still proved effectual.

In some parts of the work, it is true, the machinery has been made too complicated; especially has this been the case in former years in the tract and missionary work; the multiplication of rules and regulations made it needlessly burdensome. An effort has been made to simplify the work, so as to avoid all needless labor and perplexity.

The business of our conference session has sometimes been burdened with propositions and resolutions that were not at all essential, and that would never have been presented if the sons and daughters of God had been walking carefully and prayerfully before him. The fewer rules and regulations that we can have, the better will be the effect in the end. When they are made, let them be carefully considered, and, if wise, let it be seen that they mean something, and are not to become a dead letter. Do not, however, encumber any branch of the work with unnecessary, burdensome restrictions and inventions of men. In this period of the world's history, with the vast work that is before us, we need to observe the greatest simplicity, and the work will be stronger for its simplicity.

Let none entertain the thought, however, that we can dispense with organization. It has cost us much study, and many prayers for wisdom that we know God has answered, to erect this structure. It has been built up by his direction, through much sacrifice and conflict. Let none of our brethren be so deceived as to attempt to tear it down, for you will thus bring in a condition of things that you do not dream of. In the name of the Lord, I declare to you that it is to stand, strengthened, established, and settled. At God's command, "Go forward," we advanced when the difficulties to be surmounted made the advance seem impossible. We know how much it has cost to work out God's plans in the past, which has made us as a people what we are. Then let every one be exceedingly careful not to unsettle minds in regard to those things that God has ordained for our prosperity and success in advancing his cause.

The work is soon to close. The members of the church militant who have proved faithful will become the church triumphant. In reviewing our past history, having traveled over every step of advance to our present standing, I can say, Praise God! As I see what God has wrought, I am filled with astonishment and with confidence in Christ as leader. We have nothing to fear for the future, except as we shall forget the way the Lord has led us, and his teaching in our past history.

The Law and the Sabbath

C. E. RENTFRO

In a work loaned me by a friend here in Lisbon, I found some interesting statements which I wish to pass along. The title of the book is "Elements of Christian Theology," by George Tomline, D. D., F. R. S., Lord Bishop of Lincoln,— Volume II, edition of 1815,— printed by Luke Housard and Sons, on the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England's creed.

The comment on Article VII is: "No man whatsoever is free from the commandments which are called moral."— Page 216. On the other hand, the moral precepts resting upon fixed and immutable principles, being founded in the essential difference between right and wrong, and being equally applicable to all persons at all times, will be binding upon every man to all eternity. And this, which appears from the whole tenor of the New Testament, is expressly asserted by Christ himself, in his sermon on the mount (Matt. 5:17, 18), in which declaration our Saviour evidently refers to the moral law; and all the moral precepts contained in the Old Testament are not only separately confirmed and enforced in the New, but many are extended to a greater degree of strictness and purity.

Another book loaned me, containing an exposition of the catechism, gives a few good statements. The title is, "A Practical Exposition of the Assembly's Shorter Catechism," by Henry Belfrage, D. D., minister in Falkirk, published by Wm. Oliphant, 1832, Edinburgh.

"Question 40: What did God at first reveal to man for the rule of his obedience?

"Answer: The rule which God at first revealed to man for the rule of his obedience, was the moral law."

Comment: "When it is said, in the answer to this question, that this was the rule which God at first revealed to man as the rule of his obedience, we must not suppose that it was either set aside afterward or is superseded by any other. The righteousness of God's testimonies is everlasting. It was the vain boast of the laws of the Medes and Persians that they were unalterable, but they have passed away, as well as the thrones from which they issued, but no vicissitude can change Jehovah's will, or modify or set aside the standard of

Unto the Desired Haven

WHAT matter how the winds may blow,
Or blow they east, or blow they west;
What reck I how the tides may flow,
Since ebb or flood alike is best?
No summer calm, nor winter gale,
Impedes or drives me from my way;
I steadfast toward the haven sail
That lies, perhaps, not far away.

I mind the weary days of old,
When motionless I seemed to lie;
The night when fierce the billows rolled,
And changed my course, I knew not why.
I feared the calm, I feared the gale,
Foreboding danger and delay,
Forgetting I was thus to sail
To reach what seemed so far away.

I measured not the loss and fret
Which through those years of doubt I bore;
I keep the memory fresh, and yet
Would hold God's patient mercy more.
What wrecks have passed me in the gale,
What ships gone down on summer day;
While I, with furled or spreading sail,
Stood for the haven far away.

What matter how the winds may blow,
Since fair or foul, alike is best;
God holds them in his hand, I know,
And I may leave to him the rest,
Assured that neither calm nor gale (1)
Can bring me danger or delay,
As still I toward the haven sail
That lies, I know, not far away.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 6

The Gift of Wisdom

MRS. E. G. WHITE

SOLOMON, in his youth, made David's choice his own. Pure and noble in character, he was named Jedidah, the beloved of the Lord. Above every earthly good he desired a wise and understanding heart. Upon him there rested great burdens of state, which he felt unable to bear alone. Not only was he to strive to be a just ruler, but he was also to carry out the long-cherished plan of his father, by building a temple at Jerusalem. As he began to comprehend the magnitude of this special work, and of the duties connected with his kingly office, he sought the great Source of wisdom for divine guidance.

An Offering at Gibeon

Early in his reign, King Solomon went with his chief counselors to Gibeon to offer sacrifices to God, and to reconsecrate himself to the Lord's service. In the time of Moses the Israelites were commanded to bring their sacrifices to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. During David's reign the ark of the covenant had been brought to Jerusalem, and set "in the midst of the tent that David had pitched for it;" and there he "offered burnt offerings and peace-offerings before the Lord." The old tabernacle of the congregation was still at Gibeon. David left "Zadok the priest, and his brethren the priests, before the tabernacle of the Lord in the high place that was at Gibeon, to offer burnt offerings unto the Lord upon the altar of the burnt offering continually morning and evening, and to do according to all that is written in the law of the Lord, which he commanded Israel."

With "the captains of thousands and of hundreds," "the judges," and "every governor in all Israel, the chief of the fathers," Solomon "went to the high place that was at Gibeon; for there was the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses the servant of the Lord had made in the wilderness. But the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim to the place which David had prepared for it: for he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem. Moreover the brazen altar, that Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur had made, he put before the tabernacle of the Lord: and Solomon and the congregation sought unto it. And Solomon went up thither to the brazen altar before the Lord, which was at the tabernacle of the congregation, and offered a thousand burnt offerings upon it."

[These sacrifices were offered by Solomon and his men in positions of trust, not as a formal ceremony, but as a token of their earnest desire for special help. They knew that they were insufficient, in their own strength, for the responsibilities entrusted to them. Solomon and his associates longed for quickness of mind, for largeness of heart, for tenderness of spirit.

A Noble Choice

"In that night" "in Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream; . . . and God said, Ask what I shall give thee."]

Solomon answered the Lord with these words: "Thou hast showed unto thy servant David my father great mercy, according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee; and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day.

"And now, O Lord my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David my father: and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in. And thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people, that can not be numbered nor counted for multitude. Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?

"And the speech pleased the Lord, that Solomon had asked this thing.

"And God said to Solomon, Because this was in thine heart, and thou hast not asked riches, wealth, or honor, nor the life of thine enemies, neither yet hast asked long life; but hast asked wisdom and knowledge for thyself, that thou mayest judge my people, over whom I have made thee king;" "behold, I have done according to thy words: lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee. And I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both riches, and honor," "such as none of the kings have had that have been before thee, neither shall there any after thee have the like."

"And if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, as thy father David did walk, then I will lengthen thy days."

God promised that as he had been with David, he would be with Solomon. If the king would walk before the Lord in uprightness, and if he would do all that God commanded him, his throne would be established, and his reign would be the means of exalting Israel as the light of the surrounding nations,— as "a wise and understanding people."

"And Solomon awoke; and, behold, it was a dream."

"Then Solomon came from his journey to the high place that was at Gibeon," "to Jerusalem, and stood before the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and offered up burnt offerings, and offered peace-offerings, and made a feast to all his servants." And Solomon "reigned over Israel."

An Understanding Heart

The Lord imparted to Solomon the wisdom that he desired above earthly riches, honor, or long life. His petition for a quick mind, a large heart, and a tender spirit, was granted. He became the wisest of earthly monarchs, because God gave him superior wisdom and an understanding heart.

"And all Israel . . . feared the king: for they saw that the wisdom of God was in him, to do judgment." The hearts of the people were turned toward Solomon, as they had been to David, and they obeyed him in all things. Solomon "was strengthened in his kingdom, and the Lord his God was with him, and magnified him exceedingly."

For many years Solomon's life was marked with devotion to God, with uprightness and firm principle, and with strict obedience to God's commands. He directed in every important enterprise, and managed wisely the business matters connected with the kingdom. His faithfulness in carrying out the directions of God regarding the construction of the temple, resulted in the erection of the most magnificent building the world has ever seen,— a building that could not be excelled for richness, beauty, and costly design; and this caused his fame to spread among the nations everywhere.

"God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart, even as the sand that is on the seashore. And Solomon's wisdom excelled the wisdom of all the children of the east country, and all the wisdom of Egypt. For he was wiser than all men; than Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman, and Chalcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol: and his fame was in all nations round about.

Commentary, Vol. 2, p. 1025 (1)

"And he spake three thousand proverbs: and his songs were a thousand and five. And he spake of trees, from the cedar tree that is in Lebanon even unto the hyssop that springeth out of the wall: he spake also of beasts, and of fowl, and of creeping things, and of fishes.

"And there came of all people to hear the wisdom of Solomon, from all kings of the earth, which had heard of his wisdom."

All nations acknowledged, and marveled at, Solomon's superior knowledge and wisdom, the excellence of his character, and the greatness of his power. Many came to him from distant parts of the world to see the manner of his government, and to receive instruction regarding the conduct of difficult affairs. The power of his understanding, the extent of his knowledge, the glory of his reign, commanded the wonder and admiration of the world.

Buddhism and Romanism

H. H. VOTAW

To even the most casual observer, the great similarity between Romanism and Buddhism, in outward form at least, must be apparent. So striking is the likeness that one man said to me recently, "I am sure Rome has borrowed her forms." Both Rome and Buddhism have their celibate priesthood, everywhere present, and always recognizable by their distinctive dress, the Buddhist priest wearing yellow, while the Roman is attired in black. In much that a Buddhist priest does he is attended by small boys, robed as he is. The same is true of a Catholic priest.

Devout Romanists leave the education of their sons and daughters to the clergy, and devout Buddhists do the same. In each case the teaching consists principally in indoctrination.

Each of these great systems has also its priestesses, distinguishable also from the common rabble by peculiarity of garb. Monasteries, where righteousness may be attained by separation from the world and its temptations, and the mind may spend all its power in uplifting meditation, are supported by each of these religions.

Again, the likeness is to be seen in the almost worshipful adoration with which the laity regard the clergy, as if they composed some entirely superior order of beings.

When we come to the temples, the parallel is fully as striking. Each has its idols. I hear some devotee denying the charge, as the educated from either sect would say that the idols are not worshiped, but simply form a concrete thought for the simple-minded folk who need something beside an abstract conception of a deity. What difference is it that the one image has a decidedly Mongolian feature, while the other bears the impress of an Aryan workman and his conception of a god? The burning of candles is equally in evidence, whichever way you turn.

Perhaps this is enough to be convincing. But the most striking thing is to come yet. This brand, when fully placed upon Buddhism, will mark it, beyond doubt, as a product of the same nefarious mind that conceived the papacy. The following extracts from Rangoon papers of recent dates will scarcely need any comment. To the student of prophecy they will indicate that God is giving warning upon warning before the fury of the storm breaks; that he is anxious that we discern the signs of the times: —

"The members of the Upathika Society intend forming a Sunday Union Society in Rangoon, the object of which will be to observe in a special manner the Sabbath."— Rangoon Gazette, May 26.

"I read an article in the Rangoon Gazette of the twenty-sixth, relating to a society that has been formed, called the Sunday Union Society. Probably many of the Buddhists do not know the object and aim of this society.

"Seeing that many of the Buddhists are becoming indifferent to their religious duties, the society was formed, consisting of a large and influential body of laymen, who have banded together to rouse the energy and zeal of their brethren, and bring them to a sense of their duties to their religion.

"The society selected Sunday as a very convenient day to observe as a sabbath, owing to the day being a general holiday. Many are unable to attend to the rites of their religion during the week, owing to their daily avocations, as merchants, officials, and clerks in different offices, but they could very well observe the sabbath on a Sunday as it should be observed. . . .

"All persons who are Buddhists are eligible for membership.

"The society will be registered, and the income is to be applied solely toward the promotion of the object of the society."— A Buddhist, in the Times.

The Buddhists have been guided heretofore in the observance of "holy days" by the moon's phases. The agricultural classes can still be, but it is not "convenient" for the townspeople.

The beginning that has been made toward adopting Sunday is like the Sunday law of Constantine, and I fancy the adoption of a uniform plan by all the people will be soon urged. God alone knows what may occur. But it is not likely that Rome will fail to make some concession to Buddhism, in return for such recognition of the "mark of her power." We understand from the Word that the image of the beast is to be made and given life in the United States. But the same Word declares, "And all the world wondered after the beast."

The Word of God

R. C. PORTER

How expressive, how all-embracing, is the Word of God! It is so comprehensive in its relation to affairs in this world that when Christ came to live as man on earth, and also to reveal God to humanity, the greatest thing that could be said of him by inspiration was that "in the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth."

Every utterance of that Word is worthy of the God who gave it, yet it is so simple, plain, and practical that the thoughtful child, guided by that Spirit by which it is given, may be able so fully to comprehend it as to be led into all truth.

Its own utterances, both prophetic and practical, are so heavenly that to read them understandingly is the strongest evidence that one is born of the Spirit from which they came. If one lacks faith, the practical appeal of that Word to the heart of the hearer is so direct that "faith cometh by hearing" it. It has been so fully revealed that "if any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book." Not a word of that revelation can be spared, so perfect is it in every part. "And if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."

None of it was given as a mere theory, but every word was so adapted to practical life that Christ said, "Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God."

In giving the commission to his disciples, he promised that "all power . . . in heaven and in earth" should accompany those who would proclaim it according to the commission. What is the commission? — "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature," "baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world. Amen."

This commission embraces a willingness on the part of those commissioned to carry it, to go with it into all the world. It insists that all things commanded be taught. It assures us that when this is done, all power in heaven and earth shall accompany the teaching, and these signs shall follow the believers. When thus carried, God has pledged, "My word . . . shall not return unto me void."

This is our firm foundation. Do we want the promised power? Each of us possesses the key that unlocks God's

The Secret

MEN wondered why, in August heat,
The little brook with music sweet
Could glide along the dusty way,
When all else parched and silent lay.

Few stopped to think how, every morn,
The sparkling stream anew was born
In some moss-circled mountain pool,
Forever sweet and clear and cool.

A life that, ever calm and glad,
One melody and message had —
"How keeps it so," men asked, "when I Must change with every changing sky?"

Ah! if men knew the secret power
That gladdens every day and hour,
Would they not change to song life's care,
By drinking at the fount of prayer?

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 7

Counselors in Need of Wise Discernment

AT the beginning of his reign, when King Solomon was entrusted with many responsibilities connected with the Lord's work, his prayer was: "Give therefore thy servant an understanding heart to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad."

Here is a lesson for those occupying positions of responsibility in God's cause to-day,— not only those in charge of large and varied interests, but those also who are entrusted with the lesser responsibilities. Officers of churches and Sabbath-schools, leaders of small companies, laborers engaged in evangelistic work,— these are as verily in need of divine discernment as are officers of large conferences and institutions.

God is no respecter of persons. He who gave to Solomon the spirit of wise discernment, is willing to-day to impart wisdom to his children. The apostle James writes: "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering." And Paul refers to teachers of truth who have faithfully studied the Scriptures, as "those who by reason of use have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil."

Solomon realized that he lacked discernment. It was his great need that led him to seek God for wisdom. In his heart there was no selfish aspiration for a knowledge that would exalt him above his brethren. He desired to do faithfully the work that had been committed to him, and he chose the gift that would be the means of causing his reign to redound to God's glory.

Receiving to Impart

The Lord provides men and women with all that they need. And his gifts are bestowed upon those only who can make a proper use of them. To some he can grant greater discernment than to others, because he sees that they will use this gift to his glory. When a laborer desires heavenly wisdom more than he desires wealth, power, or fame, God will not disappoint him. Such a worker will learn from the Great Teacher not only what to do, but how to do it in a way that will meet the divine approval.

The man upon whom the Lord has bestowed special wisdom, will be enabled, by God's blessing, to train those with whom he is associated in labor to be quick of understanding, trustworthy, and true to principle. His consecrated zeal, his wise counsel, his piety, will be an inspiration to his fellow workers. They will be led, not to praise and exalt the human agent, nor to become dependent on him, but to go themselves to the Source of all true wisdom for the help they need. God has been greatly dishonored by those who lean upon human beings. He who has said to all who believe on him as a personal Saviour, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world," will guide and teach those who recognize him as their leader and instructor.

Guarding the Purity of the Church

As the work of God advances in our time, there is an increasing need of men of keen discernment,— men who know God and trust in him for their understanding,— men who are working for his name's glory. In the days of Israel men were set apart as judges, to decide regarding what was right, and what was wrong. Surrounded by corrupting influences, they endeavored faithfully to warn the people against the things that were wrong, and to exalt righteous principles, and thus to keep the cause of God from contamination with evil. His cause is just as sacred now as it was in ancient times. To-day men in positions of trust, in every place, should be faithful guardians of the purity of the church and everything connected with it. We need, O so greatly! keen discernment and clear spiritual eyesight. In this day of sin and abounding iniquity, our eyes need to be anointed with the heavenly eyesalve, that we may see all things clearly. The great and solemn truths for this time, as outlined in the book of Revelation, are to be proclaimed to the world. Into the very designs and principles of the church these truths are to enter.

The interests of God's cause are sometimes imperiled by the unadvised movements of those who, cherishing self-esteem and seeking for self-glorification, lose sight of the object for which our institutions are established. Failing to realize the importance of bringing men and women to a knowledge of the truth for this time, they allow to enter these institutions wrong influences, which tend to disparage present truth, and to retard greatly the spiritual growth of the workers. Institutions that were established for the specific purpose of extending the knowledge of the last message of mercy to be given in our world, should be kept free from every worldly, commercial influence. With sanctified judgment our brethren in responsibility must discern between good and evil, and be faithful to their God-given trust.

So long as he remains consecrated, a man whom God has endowed with wise discernment and unusual ability, will not manifest an eagerness to obtain high positions, to guide, to control, to rule. None upon whom have been placed sacred responsibilities, are to grasp at power as did Satan in the heavenly courts. Of necessity men must bear responsibilities; but instead of striving to gain the supremacy, every true laborer will pray for an understanding heart, that he may glorify God by discerning between good and evil.

The man at the head of any work in God's cause is to be a man of intelligence, a man capable of managing large interests successfully, a man of even temper, Christlike forbearance, and perfect self-control. He only whose heart is transformed by the grace of Christ, can be a proper leader.

The path of men in positions of trust is not a path free from all obstruction. In the place of becoming faint-hearted and discouraged, those to whom God has entrusted responsibilities are to see in every difficulty a call to prayer. They are to consult, not unconsecrated men who are boastful and who show a masterly independence, but the great Source of all wisdom. They are to be faithful workers, always laboring in copartnership with the Master Worker. Strengthened and enlightened by him, they will stand firm against every unholy influence, and will discern the right from the wrong, the good from the evil. They will approve that which God approves. With earnestness they will strive to guard against the introduction or the maintenance of wrong principles in households, churches, institutions, and conferences. By maintaining a vital connection with heaven, they will ever be wise to discern between good and evil.

Prayer

W. A. SPICER

MEN of God in the Bible story prayed because communion with God was a necessity of spiritual existence. The view we get of their lives shows conflict and trial. Sin was a reality. They knew that only by God's help could they keep the way of righteousness. "Then they cried unto the Lord." The psalmist said, "My soul thirsteth for God, for the living God." And of sinners in the depth, or of saints in trial and distress, it is written that "He heard them."

Life is the same conflict with us, and we need to form the habit of prayer. It is easy to be busy doing things — to make activity the sum of Christian living. Yet activity means nothing without the presence of the Holy Spirit. There is the power which vitalizes and makes effective human effort, and it comes only to those who daily "seek" and "ask." Let every young convert study that chapter, "The Privilege of Prayer," in "Steps to Christ."

Learn the blessedness of praying aloud in private at the very beginning of the Christian walk. Some of us missed much for years by whispering our prayers or thinking them. The Lord can hear the faintest whisper, it is true, and read the thought of the heart; but there is very much in letting the ears hear one's own voice pleading the soul's needs and speaking the praise and devotion of the heart to the Lord Jesus.

Too often prayer is made to deal with far-off experiences, and is devoted to spiritual commonplaces. The Lord would have us spread before him the actual needs of the daily life. Take to him the trials and the lessons of the day. Go where one will, he will find that discouragement and backsliding are associated with neglect of prayer. Talk with God aloud concerning the experiences that tend to discourage, and deliverance will come.

We are to become acquainted with God. When we pray, we talk with him. When we read his Word, he talks to us. And prayer on earth means something in heaven. In the vision of the sanctuary, in Revelation 8, John saw the prayers of God's children on earth ascending before the throne. They came up, not in their imperfection, but mingled with the incense, which represents the merits and the intercession of Jesus. He prays for us. Rom. 8:34. And the Spirit "maketh intercession for us." Verse 26. There is praying for us in heaven. Surely, then, we ourselves, in the midst of the conflict on earth, may have all courage to pray.

We all know this, that the more we seek God in prayer, the greater the blessedness of prayer and the fresher and stronger the experience. As Jesus, our Model, found strength for his daily work only as he sought the Father for renewal of his soul, so we shall find in prayer the only means of keeping our souls in confidence, unwavering to the end. Impatience, irritability, hardness of heart, discouragement, and all that would destroy our peace of mind and spoil the life are vanquished by communion with God. Archbishop Trench wrote a true word beautifully when he said of prayer: —

"Lord, what a change within us one short hour
  Spent in thy presence will prevail to make;
  What heavy burdens from our bosom take,
What parched grounds refresh as with a shower!
We kneel, and all around us seems to lower;
  We rise, and all the distant and the near
  Stands forth in sunny outline, brave and clear;
We kneel, how weak! We rise, how full of power!
  Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
  Or others, that we are not always strong;
That we are ever overborne with care,
  That we should ever weak or heartless be,
Anxious or troubled, when with us is prayer,
  And joy and strength and courage are with thee?"

"Present Truth"

S. N. HASKELL

THE term "present truth" is used by the apostle Peter when, after speaking of certain general duties, he said, "Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth." God has ever had a present truth since he first announced that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head. Present truth is a further revelation of the gospel. Every succeeding generation has received fresh light on the truths already revealed, and this has become a test to the people of God.

Not one Israelitish family who did not have the blood of the pascal lamb sprinkled on the lintel of the door-post escaped when the destroying angel passed through the land of Egypt on the night of their deliverance. Not a single Israelite was saved who remained in Egypt when the great host passed out, led by the pillar of fire by night, and the cloud by day. When Sinai was sanctified for God to proclaim his holy law, he said, "Whosoever toucheth the mount shall be surely put to death: there shall not an hand touch it, but he shall surely be stoned, or shot through; whether it be beast or man, it shall not live." So in the building of the sanctuary. Those who had no interest in it were heathen; but those who walked in the light, and built the sanctuary, and let that light shine out to the heathen, were saved. The building of Solomon's temple was another illustration. The leaving of Babylon and the rebuilding of the temple by Zerubbabel is also illustrative of this truth. Their entire history was one of advancing light, and demonstrated the fulfilment of the words, "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Prov. 4:18.

Each event pointed forward to the birth of Christ. This period was finally reached; the time was fulfilled; Christ was born in a stable and cradled in a manger, surrounded by the beasts of the stall. The Majesty of glory, who filled all heaven with admiration, is humiliated to a bed in a manger. In heaven, he was surrounded by holy angels; but now, his companions are the beasts of the stall. What humiliation is this! Wonder, O heavens! and be astonished, O earth! From the throne of the Highest the word went forth, "Let all the angels of God worship him." A multitude praised God, saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will toward men." Simeon and Anna discerned him to be the Son of God, and uttered remarkable prophecies when Christ was brought to the temple. This was present truth. From the day of his birth salvation depended upon believing this truth. The dividing line began to be drawn between believers and unbelievers.

We pass down to his death. Here is another unfolding of the plan of salvation, another present truth, another dividing line. It was the emptying of all heaven in giving him who was next to the Father to die for a lost race. His death was a triumph amid the darkness of this world. The thief on the cross cried out, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." The Roman centurion glorified God by saying, "Certainly this was a righteous man." Simon the Cyrenian bore for the first time the saving cross of Christ. Thus Europe, Asia, and Africa were represented at the cross of Christ. The inhabitants of heaven sang with great joy and triumph, "Thou hast vanquished Satan and the powers of darkness! Thou hast swallowed up death in victory!" "And I heard a loud voice saying in heaven, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ: for the accuser of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night." The casting down of Satan as an accuser of the brethren in heaven was accomplished when Christ died. Satan now knew that his doom was sealed. The kingdom he had usurped would one day be wrested from him, and returned to its lawful owner. When Christ cried, "It is finished," the price was paid; salvation was purchased. There is none other name under heaven than that of our Lord Jesus Christ whereby man can be saved.

The third day from this event occurs another event more wonderful still, and not fully comprehended by the disciples at the time; but when it took place, the echo of praise and thanksgiving rang from world to world; for life and immortality was brought to light through the gospel. Christ arose from the dead as the first-fruits of those that slept. He was the antitype of the wave sheaf, and his resurrection took place on the very day when the wave sheaf was to be presented before the Lord. He brought forth from the grave a multitude of captives. They were a few chosen ones taken from every age from creation down to the days of Christ. It was a sample company. They varied in stature and form as disease and death had marred the human frame. Those who came from the generations of earlier times were more noble than those of later years. This company was taken to heaven with Christ, and presented to the Father as a sample of the general resurrection of the dead. All heaven

"Go, Tell Thy Friends"

O Saviour, who has healed me,
Let me stay!
I would sit beside thy feet
All the day.
The sunshine is the shining
Of thy face,
Life has nothing best to offer
But thy grace;
If I leave thee, what can ever
Make amends!
But the Master only answers,
Go, tell thy friends.

Lord, I am weak and frail,
Passing out.
Can I say that I am healed
When they doubt?
I could tell thy love to others;
But my own?
And I have a crop to reap
I have sown!
They will watch, and they will judge
Aims and ends.
It is good to stay with thee —
Go, tell thy friends.

So I go, and he goes with me
All the way.
And I simply tell the story
Day by day.
They seem very glad to hear it,
Whom I love,
For their hearts desire him greatly
From above.
So when faith is growing weak,
Through lower ends,
I speak about my Saviour
To my friends.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 8

The Building of the Temple

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The long-cherished plan of David to erect a temple to the Lord was wisely carried out by Solomon, who "determined to build an house for the name of the Lord."

Solomon's Letter to Hiram

"Solomon sent to Hiram the king of Tyre," saying, "Thou knowest how that David my father could not build an house unto the name of the Lord his God for the wars which were about him on every side, until the Lord put them under the soles of his feet. But now the Lord my God hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent. And, behold, I purpose to build an house unto the name of the Lord my God, as the Lord spake unto David my father, saying, Thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy room, he shall build an house unto my name."

"Behold, I build an house to the name of the Lord my God, to dedicate it to him, and to burn before him sweet incense, and for the continual showbread, and for the burnt offerings morning and evening, on the Sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts of the Lord our God. This is an ordinance forever to Israel. And the house which I build is great: for great is our God above all gods. But who is able to build him an house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens can not contain him? who am I then, that I should build him an house, save only to burn sacrifice before him?

"Send me now therefore a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and crimson, and blue, and that can skill to grave with the cunning men that are with me in Judah and in Jerusalem, whom David my father did provide.

"Send me also cedar trees, fir-trees, and algum trees, out of Lebanon: for I know that thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon; and, behold, my servants shall be with thy servants, even to prepare me timber in abundance: for the house which I am about to build shall be wonderful great." "Thou knowest that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the Sidonians." "And, behold, I will give to thy servants, the hewers that cut timber, twenty thousand measures of beaten wheat, and twenty thousand measures of barley, and twenty thousand baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil."

Hiram's Reply

"It came to pass, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, that he rejoiced greatly, and said, Blessed be the Lord this day, which hath given unto David a wise son over this great people. And Hiram" "answered in writing, which he sent to Solomon," saying: —

"Because the Lord hath loved his people, he hath made thee king over them. . . . Blessed be the Lord God of Israel, that made heaven and earth, who hath given to David the king a wise son, endued with prudence and understanding, that might build an house for the Lord."

"I have considered the things which thou sentest to me for:" "and now I have sent a cunning man, endued with understanding, of Hiram my father's, the son of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his father was a man of Tyre, skilful to work in gold, and in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone, and in timber, in purple, in blue, and in fine linen, and in crimson; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him, with thy cunning men, and with the cunning men of my lord David thy father.

"Now therefore the wheat, and the barley, the oil, and the wine, which my lord hath spoken of, let him send unto his servants: and we will cut wood out of Lebanon, as much as thou shalt need: and we will bring it to thee in floats by sea to Joppa; and thou shalt carry it up to Jerusalem."

The Gathering of Material

"So Hiram gave Solomon cedar trees and fir-trees according to all his desire.

"And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand measures of wheat for food to his household, and twenty measures of pure oil: thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.

"And the Lord gave Solomon wisdom, as he promised him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon; and they two made a league together.

"And King Solomon raised a levy out of all Israel; and the levy was thirty thousand men. And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand a month by courses: a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home: and Adoniram was over the levy. And Solomon had threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens, and fourscore thousand hewers in the mountains; beside the chief of Solomon's officers which were over the work, three thousand and three hundred, which ruled over the people that wrought in the work.

"And the king commanded, and they brought great stones, costly stones, and hewed stones, to lay the foundation of the house. And Solomon's builders and Hiram's builders did hew them, and the stone squarers: so they prepared timber and stones to build the house."

The Building Erected

"It came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel," "in the second day of the second month," that "Solomon began to build the house of the Lord at Jerusalem in Mount Moriah, where the Lord appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the thrashing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite."

Of the inner temple,— the building containing the holy place and the most holy place,— we read: "The length thereof was threescore cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits."

"The house, when it was in building, was built of stone made ready before it was brought thither: so that there was neither hammer nor ax nor any tool of iron heard in the house, while it was in building."

"He built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar, both the floor of the house, and the walls of the ceiling: and he covered them on the inside with wood, and covered the floor of the house with planks of fir." "The cedar of the house within was carved with knops and open flowers: all was cedar; there was no stone seen."

The Most Holy Place

"The oracle he prepared in the house within, to set there the ark of the covenant of the Lord. And the oracle in the forepart was twenty cubits in length, and twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof: and he overlaid it with pure gold; and so covered the altar which was of cedar.

"So Solomon overlaid the house within with pure gold: and he made a partition by the chains of gold before the oracle; and he overlaid it with gold. And the whole house he overlaid with gold, until he had finished all the house: also the whole altar that was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.

"And within the oracle he made two cherubims of olive tree, each ten cubits high. And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, and five cubits the other wing of the cherub: from the uttermost part of the one wing unto the uttermost part of the other were ten cubits. And the other cherub was ten cubits: both the cherubims were of one measure and one size. The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and so was it of the other cherub. And he set the cherubims within the inner house: and they stretched forth the wings of the cherubims, so that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; and their wings touched one another in the midst of the house. And he overlaid the cherubims with gold. And he carved all the walls of the house round about with carved figures of cherubims and palm-trees and open flowers, within and without. And the floor of the house he overlaid with gold, within and without." "He garnished the house with precious stones for beauty."

"For the entering of the oracle he made doors of olive tree: the lintel and side-posts were a fifth part of the wall. The two doors also were olive tree; and he carved upon them carvings of cherubims and palm-trees and open flowers, and overlaid them with gold, and spread gold upon the cherubims, and upon the palm-trees. So also made he for the door of the temple posts of olive tree, a fourth part of the wall. And the two doors were of fir-tree: the two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding. And he carved thereon cherubims and palm-trees and open flowers: and covered them with gold fitted upon the carved work."

"He made the veil of blue, and purple, and crimson, and fine linen, and wrought cherubims thereon."

The Furniture of the Holy Place

"Solomon made all the vessels that were for the house of God, the golden altar also, and the tables whereon the showbread was set; moreover the candlesticks with their lamps, that they should burn after the manner before the oracle, of pure gold; and the flowers, and the lamps, and the tongs, made he of gold, and that perfect gold; and the snuffers, and the basons, and the spoons, and the censers, of pure gold: and the entry of the house, the inner doors thereof for the most holy place, and the doors of the house of the temple, were of gold."

The Courts

"He made before the house two pillars of thirty and five cubits high, and the chapiter that was on the top of each of them was five cubits. And he made chains, as in the oracle, and put them on the heads of the pillars; and made an hundred pomegranates, and put them on the chains. And he reared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and called the name of that on the right Jachin, and the name of that on the left Boaz."

"The porch before the temple of the house, twenty cubits was the length thereof, according to the breadth of the house; and ten cubits was the breadth thereof before the house."

"He built the inner court with three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams."

"Furthermore he made the court of the priests, and the great court, and doors for the court, and overlaid the doors of them with brass."

The Furniture of the Courts

"Moreover he made an altar of brass, twenty cubits the length thereof, and twenty cubits the breadth thereof, and ten cubits the height thereof." This stood in the court of the priests.

"The pots also, and the shovels, and the flesh-hooks, and all their instruments," he made "of bright brass."

"Also he made a molten sea of ten cubits from brim to brim, round in compass, and five cubits the height thereof; and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about." "It stood upon twelve oxen" cast of brass; "three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east." "And the thickness of it was an handbreadth, and the brim of it like the work of the brim of a cup, with flowers of lilies; and it received and held three thousand baths. . . . And he set the sea on the right side of the east end" of the court of the priests, "over against the south."

"He made also ten lavers, and put five on the right hand, and five on the left, to wash in them: such things as they offered for the burnt offering they washed in them; but the sea was for the priests to wash in."

These vessels were cast "in the plain of Jordan, . . . in the clay ground between Succoth and Zeredathah. Thus Solomon made all these vessels in great abundance: for the weight of the brass could not be found out."

Completion of the Work

"So was ended all the work that King Solomon made for the house of the Lord. And Solomon brought in the things which David his father had dedicated; even the silver, and the gold, and the vessels, did he put among the treasures of the house of the Lord." "Thus Solomon finished the house of the Lord, . . . and all that came into Solomon's heart to make in the house of the Lord, . . . he prosperously effected."

"In the fourth year was the foundation of the house of the Lord laid, in the month Zif: and in the eleventh year, in the month Bul, which is the eighth month, was the house finished throughout all the parts thereof, according to all the fashion of it. So was he seven years in building it."

"If we would commend the religion of Christ to the world, we must show faith and courage in our own lives, and have more smiles than frowns on our faces."

How to Increase Our Tithes and Offerings *

(Concluded)

4. Let us each be faithful in this duty ourselves. Example goes far in teaching others. A faithful ministry will prove a large factor in encouraging others to faithfulness. When workers themselves are false to the truths they teach, there can be but little hope of reform. On this point the General Conference at its last session adopted the following: —

"(a) That the local conference officers take special pains to see that only such executive officers are chosen as will faithfully impress upon all conference employees, not only the duty to be conscientious themselves in rendering to the Lord his own, but to be faithful also in giving instruction along these lines to all within their spheres of influence.

"(b) That the officers of all churches make themselves ensamples to their flocks in the payment of tithes and offerings, in order that they may consistently exhort others to faithfulness in this respect."

It will be plainly seen that the aim of the General Conference is to persuade our people to place in responsible positions only such as are true and loyal in paying their tithe into the treasury of the Lord, that even church officers, such as church elders, deacons, and treasurers, shall be ensamples to the flock in the payment of their tithes and offerings, in order that they can consistently exhort others to faithfulness in this respect.

Oftentimes the tithe is diverted from its specific object; namely, the support of the evangelical work of our denomination. Sometimes we find that the churches are tempted to use their tithe in the support of local work, in the payment of church expenses, for janitor service, and such other incidental expenses as really belong to the church to supply. When the standard of loyalty to God is so lowered, it can be no marvel that conscientious people become discouraged, believing that those who are in charge of the work are not true and faithful, and consequently take their tithe into their own hands, and place it where they believe it will be used for the purpose which the Lord ordains.

Again, quoting the action of the General Conference in regard to this matter, I read as follows: —

"(f) Whereas, There is a tendency to divert the tithe from its specific object,—

"We recommend, That all our conferences sacredly guard the tithe, that this fund be not used for building purposes, but that it be entirely devoted to the support of the evangelistic work and Bible teachers."

5. What we have said in regard to tithes, we could also say with equal force in regard to offerings. "Ye have robbed me . . . in tithes and offerings." The Lord speaks frequently throughout his Word of the bringing of the "first-fruits of our increase," and the making of this, dear brethren, in order to keep pace with the rapid advancement of the third angel's message. As the Lord has greatly blessed us in basket and in store, let us remember the great and needy fields, and be liberal in our donations. In view of the fact that the Lord has given us such a bountiful harvest, the donations should be largely in excess of last year's.

The One Most Needful Thing

The coming week of prayer and what it should mean to Seventh-day Adventists this year is a question that should appeal to us with greater force than any similar event of the past. Called as we are to give to the whole world in one generation the most solemn message ever committed to mortal man, there is a demand for greater earnestness on our part than has ever yet characterized our work.

I do not mean by this to cast reflections upon the consecrated laborers of the past who have studied and prayed and labored hard to unfold the glorious truths we now have all arranged in one grand system. God did bless the faithful pioneers of this message, and is still blessing the efforts of his people. But I would like to ask, Has the spirit of devotion, consecration, and sacrifice grown in intensity with the passing years? Are we standing to-day equipped for the service our times demand of us? Do we really believe that the end of all things is at hand? And are we revealing this faith to the world in a convincing way? These are serious questions.

It seems to me that the one thing most needful in the prosecution of our work now is the baptism of the Holy Spirit. While our proofs are clear and the arguments convincing, we fail to realize from the efforts put forth the results that should follow. It is true that by the written Word we can convince men of sin, but we greatly lack the convincing and converting power to bring men back to God. Why is this lack? We have been told that "the power of the Holy Spirit awaits our demand and reception." The trouble, then, is with us, and not with God. Because of the unfitness of the human instrument, the power is withheld lest the work should be marred, and the cause suffer a greater loss.

Brethren and sisters, how long shall we hinder the progress of the cause we profess to love? Should not the coming week of prayer mark a new era in the history of our work? What greater blessing could come to us and to the cause of God than the baptism of the Holy Spirit for service? This would bring with it every other essential to a speedy close of the message, and secure for us a part in the final triumph. For this let us pray.

Toil and Rest

O Lord, I lay my idols down
At thy dear feet,
And toil through life from cross to crown,
Though rest is sweet.

I do not ask that thou wouldst make
That cross a toy,
Nor that my weary heart should find
My toil a joy.

Thou hast not said my burdens great
That press me so,
Nor that my crosses' galling weight,
Should lighter grow.

But thou wilt help me in the toil
Till work is done,
The tempter's every effort foil
Till victory's won.

Then I shall see in clearer light
That it was best
To be with Jesus day and night,
In toil and rest.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 9

The Ark of the Covenant

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Beyond the inner veil of the wilderness-tabernacle built in the time of Moses, was the holy of holies, where centered the symbolic service of atonement and intercession. In this apartment was the ark, a chest of acacia wood, overlaid within and without with gold, and having a crown of gold about the top. It was made as a depository for the tables of stone, upon which God himself had inscribed the ten commandments. Hence it was called the ark of God's testament, or the ark of the covenant, since the ten commandments were the basis of the covenant made between God and Israel.

The cover of the sacred chest was called the mercy-seat. This was wrought of one solid piece of gold, and was surmounted by golden cherubim, one standing on each end. One wing of each angel was stretched forth on high, while the other was folded over the body in token of reverence and humility. The position of the cherubim, with their faces turned toward each other, and looking reverently downward toward the ark, represented the reverence with which the heavenly host regard the law of God, and their interest in the plan of redemption. Above the mercy-seat was the Shekinah, the manifestation of the divine presence; and from between the cherubim, God made known his will.

Throughout the times of Moses and Joshua, and of the judges and kings of Israel, the ark of the covenant was regarded as a symbol of God's presence among his people. It was the ark that led the way for the hosts of Israel when they crossed the Jordan and entered the promised land. Surrounded by a halo of glory, the ark was borne around the walls of Jericho by priests clad in the dress denoting their sacred office. During the conquest of Canaan, Gilgal was the headquarters of the Jewish nation and the seat of the tabernacle. Afterward, Shiloh, a little town easy of access to all the tribes, was chosen as a place most suitable for the tabernacle of the congregation.

The ark remained at Shiloh for three hundred years, until, because of the sins of Eli's house, it fell into the hands of the Philistines, and Shiloh was ruined. Through the providence of God, the ark was returned, uninjured, to the Israelites, and was placed in the house of a Levite at Kirjath-jearim, nine miles distant from Jerusalem. There it remained for many years, until David, at the head of a triumphal procession, with sacrifices, and dancing, and music, brought the ark to Jerusalem, and deposited it in the tent that had been prepared for its reception.

The Transfer of the Ark to the Temple

After Solomon had finished building the temple, he assembled the elders of Israel, and the most influential men among the people, to bring up the ark of the covenant of the Lord out of the city of David. These men consecrated themselves to God, and, with great solemnity and reverence, accompanied the priests who bore the ark. "And they brought up the ark of the Lord, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, even those did the priests and the Levites bring up. And King Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel, that were assembled unto him, were with him before the ark, sacrificing sheep and oxen, that could not be told nor numbered for multitude."

Solomon followed the example of his father David. Every six paces he sacrificed. With singing, and with music, and great ceremony, "the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the Lord unto his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims. For the cherubims spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and the staves thereof above."

A most splendid sanctuary had been made, according to the pattern showed to Moses in the mount, and afterward presented by the Lord to David. In addition to the cherubim on the top of the ark, Solomon made two other angels of larger size, standing at each end of the ark, representing the heavenly angels guarding the law of God. It is impossible to describe the beauty and splendor of this sanctuary. Into this place the sacred ark was borne with solemn reverence by the priests, and set in its place beneath the wings of the two stately cherubim that stood upon the floor. (1)

The sacred choir lifted their voices in

Commentary, Vol. 2 (1) p. 1030

(1) praise to God, and the melody of their voices was accompanied by all kinds of musical instruments. And while the courts of the temple resounded with praise, the cloud of God's glory took possession of the house, as it had formerly filled the wilderness-tabernacle. "And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that the cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of the Lord." (2)

A "Shadow of Heavenly Things"

Like the earthly sanctuary built by Moses according to the pattern shown him in the mount, Solomon's temple, with all its services, was "a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices;" its two holy places were "patterns of things in the heavens;" Christ, our great High Priest, is "a minister of the sanctuary, and of the true tabernacle, which the Lord pitched, and not man." As in vision the apostle John was granted a view of the temple of God in heaven, he beheld there "seven lamps of fire burning before the throne." He saw an angel "having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the (2) throne." Here the prophet was permitted to behold the first apartment of the sanctuary in heaven; and he saw there the "seven lamps of fire" and the "golden altar," represented by the golden candlestick and the altar of incense in the sanctuary on earth. Again, "the temple of God was opened," and he looked within the inner veil, upon the holy of holies. Here he beheld "the ark of His testament," represented by the sacred chest constructed by Moses to contain the law of God.

In the ministration of the earthly tabernacle, which served "unto the example and shadow of heavenly things," (2) the holy of holies was opened only upon the great day of atonement, the typical day of judgment, set apart for the cleansing of the sanctuary. Therefore the announcement, "The temple of God was opened in heaven, and there was seen in his temple the ark of his testament," points to the opening of the most holy place of the heavenly sanctuary, at the end of the twenty-three hundred days,— in 1844,— as Christ entered there to perform the closing work of the atonement. Those who by faith followed their great High Priest, as he entered upon his ministry in the most holy place, beheld the ark of the testament.

The sanctuary in heaven is the very center of Christ's work in behalf of men. It concerns every soul living upon the earth. It opens to view the plan of redemption, bringing us down to the very close of time, and revealing the triumphant issue of the contest between righteousness and sin. It is of the utmost importance that all should thoroughly investigate these subjects, and be able to give to every one that asketh them a reason for the hope that is in them.

Commentary, Vol. 2 (1) p. 1030

We are now living in the great day of atonement. In the typical service, while the high priest was making the atonement for Israel, all were required to afflict their souls by repentance of sin, by humiliation before the Lord, lest they be cut off from among the people. In like manner, all who would have their names retained in the book of life, should now, in the few remaining days of their probation, afflict their souls before God by sorrow for sin, and true repentance. There must be deep, faithful searching of heart. The light, frivolous spirit indulged in by so many professed Christians must be put away. There is earnest warfare before all who would subdue the evil tendencies that strive for the mastery. The work of preparation is an individual work. We are not saved in groups. The purity and devotion of one will not offset the want of these qualities in another. Though all nations are to pass in judgment before God, yet he will examine the case of each individual with as close and searching scrutiny as if there were not another being upon the earth. Every one must be tested, and found without spot or wrinkle or any such thing.

Solemn are the scenes connected with the closing work of the atonement. Momentous are the interests involved therein. The judgment is now passing in the sanctuary above. For more than sixty years this work has been in progress. Soon — none know how soon — it will pass to the cases of the living. In the awful presence of God our lives are to come up in review. At this time above all others it behooves every soul to heed the Saviour's admonition, "Watch and pray: for ye know not when the time is." "If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I will come upon thee."

When the work of the investigative judgment closes, the destiny of all will have been decided for life or death. Probation is ended a short time before the appearing of the Lord in the clouds of heaven. At that time, Christ will declare: "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still. And, behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his work shall be."

The righteous and the wicked will still be living upon the earth in their mortal state — men will be planting and building, eating and drinking, all unconscious that the final, irrevocable decision has been pronounced in the sanctuary above. Before the flood, after Noah entered the ark, God shut him in, and shut the ungodly out; but for seven days the people, knowing not that their doom was fixed, continued their careless, pleasure-loving life, and mocked the warnings of impending judgment. "So," says the Saviour, "shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Silently, unnoticed as the midnight thief, will come the decisive hour which marks the fixing of every man's destiny, the final withdrawal of mercy's offer to guilty men.

"Watch ye therefore, . . . lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping." (2) Perilous is the condition of those who, growing weary of their watch, turn to the attractions of the world. While the man of business is absorbed in the pursuit of gain, while the pleasure-lover is seeking indulgence, while the daughter of fashion is arranging her adornments,— it may be in that hour the Judge of all the earth will pronounce the sentence, "Thou art weighed in the balance, and art found wanting."

Former Experiences Recalled

A. F. HARRISON

Some time has elapsed since I have written anything for our dear old Review, but my burden for the work here in this great Southern field leads me to hope that some one is anxious to know more of how the message is progressing here.

It was the first of December, 1888, almost seventeen years ago, when the General Conference placed a company of canvassers in Shreveport, La. We were mostly sent from Kansas.

It was a splendid time to sell books, and in one year we sold 2,300 volumes; 1,700 of these were "Bible Readings," and 600 "Marvel of Nations." We were all enthusiastic, worked hard, and put in good time. Little did we think that we should be here so long. No, indeed! we were all sure that in a few years at most the Lord would come, and we should all go home. I thought every other Seventh-day Adventist felt just the same way, and I know there was much praying and working. Why, at that time there were one thousand canvassers scattered in different parts of the world, and almost a million dollars' worth of books was sold each year. Here in this Southern field a tithe of all the Sabbath-keepers, counting men, women, and children, were engaged in the work. Had we kept on at this rate, what might have been accomplished! But a sad change has come.

There is not the burden for souls there once was. A spirit of worldliness seems to have crept in. I wonder if it is so in other places. Let me see, in "Early Writings," page 128, we find these words: "I saw that Satan bade his angels lay their snares especially for those who were looking for Christ's second appearing, and keeping all the commandments of God. Satan told his angels that the churches were asleep. He would increase his power and lying wonder, and he could hold them. 'But,' said he, 'the sect of Sabbath-keepers we hate; they are continually working against us, and taking from us our subjects, to keep the hated law of God. Go, make the possessors of lands and money drunk with cares. If you can make them place their affections upon these things, our ears from him. The dark shadows about him and his work are lighted up by the glories of heaven, and dispersed before they reach us. But if he had plenty of means at hand, he would not only be free from thoughts of his own and his family's wants, he would also be free from the heavier burden and worry of not being able to answer the many calls; he would have a lighter heart, which would make his work easier, and his life longer and more useful. New outposts could oftener, and with less time and energy, be established, and we here at home would have greater joy at seeing the work go faster.

The past two years this sacrificing body of people has carried the burden of establishing our denominational headquarters at the capital of the nation. That opportunity was successfully improved; the board is cleared of that; and now we are ready for —

"The Opportunity"

of this people for mission work. Let this opportunity be as well improved as was the former, and heaven and earth will rejoice at the results of this week of prayer. Instead of recruiting and strengthening our missions the past two years, they have languished, and the work has halted while we were improving our last opportunity, and so nobly doing the work the Lord told us to do,— to establish the work at Washington. Many of our ardent missionaries were called home, and held here waiting for the present opportunity of this people to supply the needed funds to send them back to their waiting work, and to supply them with needed help.

The Responsibility of this week of prayer is the responsibility of Seventh-day Adventists to support in their tasks those whom we send to the front, and to complete this work as soon as possible; and this responsibility each one of us pledged himself to take when we espoused this glorious cause. It is not a light one; but if all will unite in carrying it, it will be lighter upon a few already heavily burdened souls; it will be met and finished sooner, and its —

Load of Blessings

will be seen and felt in the churches, the homes, and in the lives of the members; in the neighborhoods, the country, and in the world; reaching wider and wider until their ripples touch the eternal shores, and cause the harps of heaven to sound with the jubilee song begun here upon earth. O brethren and sisters, let us pray much that we may be led fully to understand its meaning and its responsibilities, and enjoy the blessings of the week of prayer of 1905, and soon triumph in the glorious completion of this good work.

E. W. WEBSTER, of South Carolina.

Preparation for a Greater Work

THE year 1905 is fast drawing to a close, and we are again reminded of the mercy shown to us by a never forgetful and always forgiving Heavenly Father. In view of all this, how fitting that we should set apart a time for thanksgiving and seeking his face for strength to begin the duties of the coming year. Every one living at this present time who entered into the week of prayer service last year with full purpose of heart, will say, Thank God for the help that I received back there. But, beloved, the coming year will bring to us greater responsibilities, heavier burdens; and a greater march toward the kingdom must be made. This being true, we need more of the wisdom, grace, and love of God than we had during the year that is now closing. O that every Seventh-day Adventist would not only say, but do the things that would make each one, young and old, a greater power in this world and in the closing message than ever before! And, dear ones, while some who were with us last year will meet no more with us while we sojourn here, there are others who will meet with us for the first time as a result of the work we did then. As the years come, and as our burdens broaden, more men and more money will be needed. Would you not be glad to see a much larger gift this year than this people has ever given? I am sure our Saviour, yes, all heaven, would be glad; for a greater work could be done, the end of sin would sooner come, and we be gathered home.

G. F. WATSON, of Colorado.

Power Needed for Service

Now the day is far spent, the night is at hand, and there can be delay no longer. Shall we not, therefore, rise in the strength of our God and bear the word in haste to a perishing world? To do this we must have power; but the manifestation of spiritual power in our lives involves the reception of the Holy Spirit. Therefore to do this work we must have the Spirit; for "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Knowing these things, beloved, how shall we approach the week of prayer that is just before us? The prayer of the Master is that we might all be one; the admonition of Paul, that we should be of one mind; that of James, that we come nothing doubting; while Peter tells us to humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God that he may exalt us in due time, "casting all your care upon him; for he careth for you," and likewise to be sober and vigilant. Only a few more such feasts will be ours to enjoy on this earth. Let us come to this one in God's way, with the burden of an unsaved world resting upon us, and he will abundantly bless us. Let the ninth of December find us "all with one accord in one place." Let us come with our possessions devoted and our lives consecrated to the service of the Master. God will then set his seal to the work, and we shall see his cause advance in these provinces as never before. May God bless you all and prosper his cause that a great victory may be speedily gained for him.

Early Morning Thoughts

A. G. WRIGHT (Deceased)

IT is time to begin,
If at last we would win
In the battle with self and wrong.
There's a cause to maintain,
And a heaven to gain,
If we sing the triumphant song.

There's a warning to give
To the people who live
In this generation of men.
There are truths to proclaim
In the power of his name
Who said, "I am coming again."

The time now is near
When he shall appear
To redeem his chosen and tried
Who believed on his name,
By his grace overcame,
And will in his presence abide.

Soon his judgments will fall
On the great and the small,
Who have heard, but would not obey.
Soon a voice from the throne
Will declare, "It is done;"
Thus will end probation's long day.

Then the whole earth will shake
With so great an earthquake;
The islands will then flee away,
The mountains will fall,
And the great men will call
For a place to hide in that day.

Then the trumpet will sound
The whole earth around
With the power of the Archangel's voice,
As he calls from the tomb,
Clothed in immortal bloom,
All those who have made him their choice.

Then, up to the skies,
With glad shouts they'll arise,
To meet their Redeemer and King.
In anthems of praise,
On that glad day of days,
With loud hallelujahs they'll sing.

Then the chariot grand,
At the word of command
Moves on toward the city of light,
Where the King on his throne
Will welcome them home
Into day where there's nevermore night.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 10

The Dedication of the Temple

MRS. E. G. WHITE

SEVERAL years had been spent in the building of the temple, and at last it was complete. And now, in order that this beautiful palace might indeed be, as David had declared, a dwelling-place "not for man, but for the Lord God," there remained the solemn ceremony of formally dedicating it to Jehovah and his worship.

The time chosen for the dedication was a most favorable one — the seventh month, when the people from every part of the kingdom were accustomed to assemble at Jerusalem to celebrate the feast of the tabernacles. This feast was pre-eminently an occasion of rejoicing. The labors of the harvest being ended, and the toils of the new year not yet begun, the people were free from care, and could give themselves up to the sacred, joyous influences of the hour.

At the time appointed, "a great congregation" from every part of the realm gathered at Jerusalem, and participated in the removal of the wilderness-tabernacle and all its holy furniture, including the ark of the testament, to the temple.

The hour for the dedicatory service revealed a scene of great splendor. Before the temple were assembled the hosts of Israel, and the richly clad representatives of many foreign nations. Solomon stood facing the great altar of burnt offering. The priests who had carried in the sacred furniture, came out of the holy place, and took the places assigned them in the court of the temple. The singers,— Levites "arrayed in white linen, having cymbals and psalteries and harps,"—"stood at the east end of the altar, and with them an hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets."

"It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the Lord, and when they lifted up their voice with the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of music, and praised the Lord, saying, For he is good; for his mercy endureth forever: that then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the Lord; so that the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled the house of God."

Solomon, realizing the significance of this cloud, declared: "The Lord hath said that he would dwell in the thick darkness. But I have built an house of habitation for thee, and a place for thy dwelling forever."

An Inspired Blessing

"In the midst of the court" of the temple had been erected "a brazen scaffold," or platform, "five cubits long, and five cubits broad, and three cubits high;" and after ascending this, Solomon stood and lifted up his hands, and blessed the vast multitude before him. "And all the congregation of Israel stood."

"Blessed be the Lord God of Israel," Solomon exclaimed, "who hath with his hands fulfilled that which he spake with his mouth to my father David, saying, Since the day that I brought forth my people out of the land of Egypt I chose no city among all the tribes of Israel to build an house in, that my name might be there; neither chose I any man to be a ruler over my people Israel: but I have chosen Jerusalem, that my name might be there; and have chosen David to be over my people Israel.

"Now it was in the heart of David my father to build an house for the name of the Lord God of Israel. But the Lord said to David my father, Forasmuch as it was in thine heart to build an house for my name, thou didst well in that it was in thine heart:" "nevertheless thou shalt not build the house; but thy son that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house unto my name. And the Lord hath performed his word that he spake, and I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as the Lord promised, and have built an house for the name of the Lord God of Israel. And I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is the covenant of the Lord, which he made with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt."

The Dedicatory Prayer

Having pronounced this blessing upon the people, Solomon knelt upon the brazen scaffold, and in the presence and hearing of all the people before him, offered the dedicatory prayer. Lifting his hands toward heaven, the king offered an earnest and solemn petition to God, while the congregation were bowed with their faces to the ground. The king pleaded: —

"O Lord God of Israel, there is no god like thee in the heaven, nor in the earth; which keepest covenant, and showest mercy unto thy servants, that walk before thee with all their hearts: thou which hast kept with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him; and spakest with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

"Now therefore, O Lord God of Israel, keep with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him, saying, There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit upon the throne of Israel; yet so that thy children take heed to their way to walk in my law, as thou hast walked before me. Now then, O Lord God of Israel, let thy word be verified, which thou hast spoken unto thy servant David.

"But will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? behold, heaven and the heaven of heavens can not contain thee; how much less this house which I have built! Have respect therefore to the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O Lord my God, to harken unto the cry and the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee: that thine eyes may be open upon this house day and night, upon the place whereof thou hast said that thou wouldest put thy name there; to harken unto the prayer which thy servant prayeth toward this place. Harken therefore unto the supplications of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, which they shall make toward this place: hear thou from thy dwelling-place, even from heaven; and when thou hearest, forgive.

"If a man sin against his neighbor, and an oath be laid upon him to make him swear, and the oath come before thine altar in this house; then hear thou from heaven, and do, and judge thy servants, by requiting the wicked, by recompensing his way upon his own head; and by justifying the righteous, by giving him according to his righteousness.

"And if thy people Israel be put to the worse before the enemy, because they have sinned against thee; and shall return and confess thy name, and pray and make supplication before thee in this house; then hear thou from the heavens, and forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again unto the land which thou gavest to them and to their fathers.

"When the heaven is shut up, and there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; yet if they pray toward this place, and confess thy name, and turn from their sin, when thou dost afflict them; then hear thou from heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, and of thy people Israel, when thou hast taught them the good way, wherein they should walk; and send rain upon thy land, which thou hast given unto thy people for an inheritance.

"If there be dearth in the land, if there be pestilence, if there be blasting, or mildew, locusts, or caterpillars; if their enemies besiege them in the cities of their land; whatsoever sore or whatsoever sickness there be: then what prayer or what supplication soever shall be made of any man, or of all thy people Israel, when every one shall know his own sore and his own grief, and shall spread forth his hands in this house: then hear thou from heaven thy dwelling-place, and forgive, and render unto every man according unto all his ways, whose heart thou knowest (for thou only knowest the hearts of the children of men); that they may fear thee, to walk in thy ways, so long as they live in the land which thou gavest unto our fathers.

"Moreover concerning the stranger, which is not of thy people Israel, but is come from a far country for thy great name's sake, and thy mighty hand, and thy stretched out arm; if they come and pray in this house; then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling-place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for; that all people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee, as doth thy people Israel, and may know that this house which I have built is called by thy name.

"If thy people go out to war against their enemies by the way that thou shalt send them, and they pray unto thee toward this city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name; then hear thou from the heavens their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their cause.

"If they sin against thee (for there is no man which sinneth not), and thou be angry with them, and deliver them over before their enemies, and they carry them away captives unto a land far off or near; yet if they bethink themselves in the land whither they are carried captive, and turn and pray unto thee in the land of their captivity, saying, We have sinned, we have done amiss, and have dealt wickedly; if they return to thee with all their heart and with all their soul in the land of their captivity, whither they have carried them captives, and pray toward their land, which thou gavest unto their fathers, and toward the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house which I have built for thy name: then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling-place, their prayer and their supplications, and maintain their cause, and forgive thy people which have sinned against thee.

"Now, my God, let, I beseech thee, thine eyes be open, and let thine ears be attent unto the prayer that is made in this place. Now therefore arise, O Lord God, into thy resting-place, thou, and the ark of thy strength: let thy priests, O Lord God, be clothed with salvation, and let thy saints rejoice in goodness.

"O Lord God, turn not away the face of thine anointed: remember the mercies of David thy servant."

A Divine Token of Acceptance

As Solomon ended his prayer, a miraculous fire "came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt offering and the sacrifices." The priests could not enter the temple, because "the glory of the Lord filled the house." "When all the children of Israel saw how the fire came down, and the glory of the Lord upon the house, they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and worshiped, and praised the Lord, saying, For he is good; for his mercy endureth forever."

The Closing Ceremonies

"Then the king and all the people offered sacrifices before the Lord. And King Solomon offered a sacrifice of twenty and two thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep: so the king and all the people dedicated the house of God. And the priests waited on their offices: the Levites also with instruments of music of the Lord, which David the king had made to praise the Lord, because his mercy endureth forever, when David praised by their ministry; and the priests sounded trumpets before them, and all Israel stood. Moreover Solomon hallowed the middle of the court that was before the house of the Lord: for there he offered burnt offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings, because the brazen altar which Solomon had made was not able to receive the burnt offerings, and the meat offerings, and the fat."

The Feast of the Tabernacles

"Also at the same time Solomon kept the feast seven days, and all Israel with him, a very great congregation, from the entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt. And in the eighth day they made a solemn assembly: for they kept the dedication of the altar seven days, and the feast seven days. And on the three and twentieth day of the seventh month he sent the people away into their tents, glad and merry in heart for the goodness that the Lord had showed unto David, and to Solomon, and to Israel his people."

"Wait"

"Let none that wait on Thee be ashamed."

Yes, I am waiting, Lord, and it is sweet
To rest the while close at thy sacred feet;
Here with thy wounded hand upon my head,
My weary soul is blest and comforted.

'Tis joy to tarry at thy bleeding side,
Whence flows the healing, purifying tide,
My only hope, my perfect righteousness;
Yes, I will wait in this dear hiding-place.

For prone am I, my Lord, from thee to stray,
And lose thy presence in earth's busy way;
Yea, sometimes out on errands thine alone,
Self rises, and I count them all my own.

So eager am I to devise and do,
And in my frantic zeal the way pursue,
That I forget I should but follow thee;—
And hurry till thy face I can not see.

And Thou in love dost check my foolish haste,
Take me apart into the desert waste,
And bid me pause till thou shalt point the way,
And go before me, lest again I stray.

So here beneath the shadow of thy wing
I stay my steps, and as I wait I sing;
While peace divine through all my soul distils,
And love its blessed, perfect work fulfils.

In this dear refuge, quiet and still,
I fold my hands, and bide thy holy will.
"Speak, for thy servant heareth," I will say;
Ready, when thou shalt send me, to obey.

Shall disappointments or dismay betide
The soul that meekly waits her Lord beside?
Ah, no, my expectation is from him,
And shall not fail, though heaven itself grow dim.

God is the Lord, who gives the soul's desire;
I bind the sacrifice and wait the fire;
They shall not be ashamed who watch and wake,
The morn of joy and glory soon shall break.

The Papacy and the Constitution

K. C. RUSSELL

A Roman Catholic priest, John F. Mullany, in the October number of the North American Review, tries to defend the Roman Catholic schools against a criticism that they are un-American. In this article he attempts to prove that the papacy is in harmony with the Constitution of the United States, and, not only this, but claims that Roman Catholic philosophy taught by St. Thomas Aquinas is the basis of the Declaration of Independence, and further that the principles of Aquinas were the basis upon which the fathers of the American Revolution fought for liberty and justice.

In view of the foregoing arguments to prove that the papacy has a supreme regard for the Constitution of the United States, it would seem like a most fitting time to refresh the memories of all with other statements from the Roman Catholics concerning liberty of conscience, which the Constitution of the United States guarantees to every citizen.

Pope Pius IX, in his encyclical letter of Aug. 15, 1854, said: "The absurd and erroneous doctrines or ravings in defense of liberty of conscience are a pestilential error — a pest, of all others, most to be dreaded in a state."

The same pope, in his encyclical letter of Dec. 8, 1864, anathematized "those who assert the liberty of conscience and of religious worship," also "all such as maintain that the church may not employ force."

Says Bishop O'Connor: "Religious liberty is merely endured until the opposite can be carried into effect without peril to the Catholic world."

The Archbishop of St. Louis once said: "Heresy and unbelief are crimes; and in Christian countries, as in Italy and Spain, for instance, where all the people are Catholics, and where the Catholic religion is an essential part of the law of the land, they are punished as other crimes."

It is difficult to comprehend how this stupendous system of error, which is the very embodiment of a union of church and state, could pose before the world as not only the champion of that charter of American rights and liberties, the Constitution, but as the one which inspired the creation of this document.

Another strange feature concerning the boastful claims of the papacy in being the champion of religious liberty, and of the principles on which this government was founded, is the eagerness with which they are being received by professed Protestants. It should be remembered by Protestants that the policy of Rome has always been to adapt herself to the various conditions of the nations where she is operating, in order to gain influence and prestige. It is very fitting indeed, and shows great foresight, that this power should pose in this country as the champion of religious liberty and education; but, if we want to know her real attitude upon these questions, we have but to turn our eyes to the countries of Spain and South America, where, for centuries, the Catholic Church has borne sway. Here we find the people locked in the embrace of ignorance and superstition, and in the bondage of priestcraft. A celebrated prelate some years ago said, "What the Catholic Church has done for other countries, she will do for America." This is not a very flattering outlook.

The Time of the End

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Reading for Sabbath, December 9)

The Lord is soon to come. Wickedness and rebellion, violence and crime, are filling the world. The cries of the suffering and the oppressed rise to God for justice. In the place of being softened by the patience and forbearance of God, the wicked are growing stronger in stubborn rebellion. The time in which we live is one of marked depravity. Religious restraint is thrown off, and men reject the law of God as unworthy of their attention. A more than common contempt is placed upon this holy law. David in his time saw the wickedness of the last days. He saw the law of God's kingdom trampled under foot, and in righteous indignation he exclaimed, "It is time for thee, Lord, to work: for they have made void thy law."

Men are now passing the boundary line, and the Lord is permitting the enemy to do his will. We hear of floods, of earthquakes, of storms by land and on the sea, blotting out hundreds of lives in a moment of time; but the end is not yet. The tread of the Lord will be heard upon the land and upon the water. For his own honor's sake, God is now about to repress iniquity. He will soon, very soon, vindicate the claims of his law.

The final overthrow of all earthly dominions is plainly foretold in the Word of truth. In the prophecy uttered when sentence from God was pronounced upon the last king of Israel, is given the message: —

"Thus saith the Lord God; Remove the diadem, and take off the crown: . . . exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn, it: and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."

The crown removed from Israel passed successively to the kingdoms of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome. God says, "It shall be no more, until he come whose right it is; and I will give it him."

That time is at hand. To-day the signs of the times declare that we are standing on the threshold of great and solemn events. Everything in our world is in agitation. Before our eyes is fulfilling the Saviour's prophecy of the events to precede his coming: "Ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars. . . . Nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places."

The present is a time of overwhelming interest to all living. Rulers and statesmen, men who occupy positions of trust and authority, thinking men and women of all classes, have their attention fixed upon the events taking place about us. They are watching the strained, restless relations that exist among the nations. They observe the intensity that is taking possession of every earthly element, and they realize that something great and decisive is about to take place — that the world is on the verge of a stupendous crisis.

(1) [Angels are now restraining the winds of strife, until the world shall be warned of its coming doom; but a storm is gathering, ready to burst upon the earth, and when God shall bid his angels loose the winds, there will be such a scene of strife as no pen can picture.]

"Behold, the Lord maketh the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and turneth it upside down, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof; . . . because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant. Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate. . . . The mirth of tabrets ceaseth, the noise of them that rejoice endeth, the joy of the harp ceaseth."

"I beheld the earth, and, lo, it was without form, and void; and the heavens, and they had no light. I beheld the mountains, and, lo, they trembled, and all the hills moved lightly. I beheld, and, lo, there was no man, and all the birds of the heavens were fled. I beheld, and, lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down."

"Alas, for that day is great, so that none is like it: it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; but he shall be saved out of it."

"Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee: hide thyself as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast."

To us who are standing on the very verge of the fulfilment of these great scenes, of what deep moment, of what living interest, are these delineations of the things to come — events for which, since our first parents turned their steps from Eden, God's children have watched and waited, longed and prayed!

At this time, before the great final crisis, as before the world's first destruction, men are absorbed in the pleasures and the pursuits of sense. Engrossed with the seen and the transitory, they have lost sight of the unseen and the eternal. For the things that perish with the using, they are sacrificing imperishable riches. Their minds need to be uplifted, their views of life broadened. They need to be aroused from the lethargy of worldly dreaming.

A moment of respite has been graciously given us of God. Every power lent us of heaven is to be used in doing the work assigned us by the Lord for those who are perishing in ignorance. The warning message is to be sounded in all parts of the world. There must be no delay. The truth must be proclaimed in the dark places of the earth. Obstacles must be met and surmounted. A great work is to be done, and this work has been entrusted to those who know the truth for this time.

Now is the time for us to lay hold of the arm of our strength. The prayer of David should be the prayer of pastors and laymen: "It is time for thee, Lord, to work; for they have made void thy law." Let the servants of God weep between the porch and the altar, crying, "Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach." God has always wrought in behalf of his truth. The designs of wicked men, the enemies of the church, are subject to his power and his overruling providence. He can move upon the hearts of statesmen; the wrath of the haters of his truth and his people can be turned aside, even as the waters of a river could be turned, if thus he ordered it. Prayer moves the arm of Omnipotence. He who marshals the stars in order in the heavens, whose word controls the waves of the great deep — the same infinite Creator will work in behalf of his people, if they will call upon him in faith. He will restrain all the forces of darkness, until the warning is given to the world, and all who will heed it are prepared for his coming.

[God's people should make mighty intercession to him for help now. And they must put their whole energies into the effort to proclaim the truth during the respite that has been granted.] (1) As they consecrate themselves unreservedly to God's service, a convincing power will attend their efforts to present the truth to others, and light will shine into many hearts. My brethren and sisters, sleep no longer on Satan's enchanted ground, but arouse, and call into requisition every resource for the proclamation of the message of mercy. The last warning is to be given "before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings."

My heart is often burdened because so many who might work are doing nothing. They are the sport of Satan's temptations. Every church-member who has a knowledge of the truth is expected to work while the day lasts; for the night cometh, wherein no man can work. Erelong we shall understand what that night means. The Spirit of God is being grieved away from this earth. The nations are angry with one another. Widespread preparations are being made for war. The night is at hand. Let the church arouse and go forth to do her appointed work. Every believer, educated or uneducated, can bear the message.

(1) Evangelism p. 704

Eternity stretches before us. The curtain is about to be lifted. What are we doing, what are we thinking of, that we cling to our selfish love of ease, while all around us souls are perishing? Have our hearts become utterly callous? Can we not see and understand that we have a work to do in behalf of others? My brethren and sisters, are you among those who having eyes, see not, and having ears, hear not? Is it in vain that God has given you a knowledge of his will? Is it in vain that he has sent you warning after warning of the nearness of the end? Do you believe the declarations of his Word concerning what is coming upon the world? Do you believe that God's judgments are hanging over the inhabitants of the earth? How, then, can you sit at ease, careless and indifferent?

Every day that passes brings us nearer the end. We are one year nearer the judgment, nearer eternity, than we were at the beginning of 1905. Are we also nearer to God? Are we watching unto prayer? Another year, of the time granted us for labor has rolled into eternity. (1) Every day we have been associating with men and women who are judgment-bound. Each day may have been the dividing line for some soul. Each day some one may have made the decision which will determine his future destiny. What has been our influence over these fellow travelers? What effort have we put forth to bring them to Christ?

Those with whom we associate day by day need our help, our guidance. They may be in such a condition of mind that a word in season will be sent home by the Holy Spirit as a nail in a sure place. To-morrow some of these souls may be where we can never reach them again. May God help us to work while the day lasts.

Unmistakable evidences point to the nearness of the end. The way must be prepared for the coming of the Prince of Peace. Let not our church-members complain because they are so often called upon to give. What is it that makes the frequent calls a necessity? Is it not the rapid increase of missionary enterprises? Shall we by refusing to give, retard the growth of these enterprises? Shall we forget that we are laborers together with God? From every church, prayers should ascend to God for an increase of devotion and liberality. My brethren and sisters, do not plead for retrenchment in evangelical work. So long as there are souls to save, our interest in the work of soul saving is to know no abating. Not all can go as missionaries to foreign lands, but all can do the work waiting for them in their own neighborhood; and all can give of their means for the carrying forward of foreign missions.

There are new fields to be entered, and we must have your help. Shall we ignore the commission given us, and thus forfeit the fulfilment of the promise accompanying the commission? Shall the people of God become careless and indifferent, and refuse to give of their means for the advancement of his work? Can they do this without severing their connection with him? They may think thus to economize; but it is a fearful economy that places them where they are separated from God.

Let the Lord's people pay a faithful tithe, and let them, also, from parents to children, lay aside for the Lord the money that is so often spent for self-gratification. The Lord has made us his stewards. He has placed his means in our hands for faithful distribution. He asks us to render to him his own. He has reserved the tithe as his portion, to be used in sending the gospel to all parts of the world. My brethren and sisters, confess and forsake your selfishness, and bring to the Lord your gifts and offerings. Bring him also the tithe that you have withheld. Come confessing your neglect. Prove the Lord as he has invited you to do. "I will rebuke the devourer for your sakes, and he shall not destroy the fruits of your ground; neither shall your vine cast her fruit before the time in the field, saith the Lord of hosts. And all nations shall call you blessed: for ye shall be a delightsome land."

My brethren and sisters, it is too late to devote your time and strength to self-serving. Let not the last day find you destitute of the heavenly treasure. Seek to push the triumphs of the cross, seek to enlighten souls, labor for the salvation of your fellow beings, and your work will abide the trying test of fire. "If any man's work abide . . . he shall receive a reward." Glorious will be the reward bestowed when the faithful workers gather about the throne of God and of the Lamb. When John in his mortal state beheld the glory of God, he fell as one dead. He was not able to endure the sight. But when the children of God have put on immortality, they will "see him as he is." They will stand before the throne, accepted in the Beloved. All their sins have been blotted out, all their transgressions borne away. Now they can look upon the undimmed glory of the throne of God. They have been partakers with Christ in his sufferings, they have been workers together with him in the plan of redemption, and they are partakers with him in the joy of seeing souls saved in the kingdom of heaven, there to praise God through all eternity.

Finishing God's Work: From the Standpoint of the Home Field

G. A. IRWIN

(Reading for Sunday, December 10)

The book of Daniel is a prophecy covering the history of the world from 606 B. C. to the setting up of God's everlasting kingdom at the end of time. Portions of the prophecy, however, were sealed even to the beloved prophet, "until the time of the end." This "time of the end" began with the cessation of papal persecution, in 1775, and the overthrow of that power in 1798. Contemporaneously with the overthrow of this power and the unsealing of the book, we see another power arising, described by the revelator as a beast coming up out of the earth, with two horns like a lamb, which was to play an important part in the closing drama of this world's history. From the time and manner of its rise, and the characteristics of its form of government, it is clear that the United States of America is the power indicated. The unsealing of the book and the time of the end brought into existence not only a new message, or movement,— the advent proclamation,— but it brought also the development of a new nation among the powers of earth, as a field in which the new movement was to grow into strength.

The same God who had indicated by his word and by unfolding events, when the time of the end would come, had prepared a power to be the special custodian and champion of the principles of civil and religious liberty, which had for centuries been ignored and trampled under foot by the papacy and the secular governments of the Old World. The right to worship God according to the dictates of one's own conscience, without fear of molestation, brought to the American shores the oppressed of all nations. Isolated by location from the countries of the Old World, and not mixed up with their politics and diplomacy, with its varied soil and climate, and with natural resources almost inexhaustible, the United States was to become one of the leading nations of this world. Here, where the principles of religious liberty were held aloft, the Lord inaugurated the threefold message of Rev. 14:6-12,— a message destined to break the power of man-made theories, and to enlighten the whole world with its glory, preparing the way for the second coming of Christ.

How fitting that a movement embracing within its scope so many and varied reforms, should have its rise in such a nation, and at a time when its rapid growth and development were attracting the attention of all the civilized nations. What a legacy to a nation and people — to be put in trust of such principles and such a message! That only a few in the beginning accepted the message, and struggled on in poverty and comparative obscurity, is no proof that God did not give the message to the churches and people of this nation, and provide for its promulgation in the multiplicity of inventions for rapid communications and transit, and the number and freedom of its educational institutions. And a failure to sense its responsibility will lead this nation to the repudiation of its principles, and cause it to speak as a dragon in the end.

With the faithful few, however, who accepted the message, as with the disciples of old, God has wrought wonders. From a small and insignificant beginning, this message has spread over this entire nation, and believers are now numbered

13. A bundle of The Signs of the Times loaned to a family bitterly opposed to the truth. The papers, utilized as wall-paper all over the house, were read by the young rancher while waiting for his mother to prepare the meals. He next ordered some tracts from the Pacific Press, and accepted the truth. Mother and sister subsequently followed.

14. The reading of Canright's book against Seventh-day Adventists.

15. Seeing a copy of The Bible Echo in a store window in Melbourne, Australia, led to an investigation.

16. His wife's godly life — an experience of fifteen years — led him to become an Adventist.

17. A sick boy, overhearing from his bed a Bible reading being given to his parents in an adjacent room, by a Seventh-day Adventist minister.

18. The reading of one tract — "Elihu on the Sabbath."

19. Accepted the truth through Bible readings given while picking grapes.

20. Became an Adventist by reading a Danish tract, "Both Sides of the Sabbath Question," handed him by a young man one Sunday morning on his way to church, on street corner in Christiania.

21. Seeing one of our brethren quit work Friday night, led him to think and investigate.

22. One tract, "State of the Dead," led him to attend Sabbath-school, which, in turn, led to Bible readings, the reading of our large books, and to Bible lectures by our ministers.

23. Going to work for a Seventh-day Adventist.

24. An infidel, eating lunch with other workmen, when Seventh-day Adventist canvasser, failing to sell any publications, gave the Sentinel to one of the workmen. Was led to think of the Sabbath question, through conversation with workman who had the Sentinel. Had no Bible in the house. Went to a neighbor, and offered a load of wood for a New Testament. Read it through, and accepted the truth.

25. Read "Thoughts on Daniel and the Revelation" ten years before hearing a preacher. Says the Lord sent him across the continent to hear preaching by Elder ——, of California.

26. Through meeting Brother B. O. Wade, one of our missionaries in Japan. Now an active missionary, and publisher of Japanese Seventh-day Adventist literature.

27. Through boarding with Elder G. H. Baber in Valparaiso, Chile, South America.

28. Through the Adventist argument on the question of spiritualism.

29. Through lectures in Stockholm, Sweden.

30. The entire Baptist church of Riceland, Minn., was advised by its pastor to study the Bible to see which day is the Sabbath. The sister writes: "Six of the fifty members, of which I was one, began keeping the Sabbath."

These figures are powerful witnesses of the fruitfulness of humble efforts. They afford food for thoughtful study, and should be cause for sincere rejoicing. Note the following points: —

1. While the gospel ministry stands at the head, as it should, of the means for bringing the light of truth to the knowledge of the world, still the greater volume of the work was accomplished by inexpensive, humble means.

2. One fourth of the entire number were brought into the truth directly by reading our books, tracts, and periodicals, and not only so, for according to the reports, nearly every other person was assisted and instructed by the printed page.

3. What an encouragement and incentive to parents it must be to know that one fifth of the believers in present truth are brought in through home influence.

It appears, from our experience in the tract and missionary work, that the dear Lord watches with peculiar tenderness and care over little seeds sown by the wayside — those little acts inspired wholly by love by which we set no store, kindnesses which we forget to count when summing up what we have done. Because human pride was laid aside, and the deed sprang from a divine impulse, God could use it and multiply it exceedingly to his glory.

An interesting illustration of this was given by W. C. Sisley, manager of the International Tract Society, of London, when presenting his report of the publishing work in Great Britain. A canvasser had become disheartened, and feared that he was accomplishing but little. He decided one morning simply to scatter a few little leaflets on the second coming of Christ. One of these was dropped into the letter-box of a wealthy man, who read the tract with great interest. Though not a member of the Seventh-day Adventist church, he decided to assist in the circulation of this leaflet. So he wrote to the International Tract Society, and obtained terms for printing fifty thousand copies; then he hired newsboys, and had these circulated from door to door through the city where he lived. One of the fifty thousand leaflets fell into the hands of another gentleman, who decided upon the same course of action, only he pushed the work still further than the first, by securing one hundred thousand copies of the leaflet, paying for the same, and distributing them at his own expense. Thus one leaflet, placed in a mail-box that morning, when the agent felt that he could accomplish nothing, resulted in the circulation of one hundred and fifty thousand leaflets telling the glad news of Christ's soon coming.

(Note to the Leader.— If time will permit, it may be well to open the way, at the close of the reading, for a brief praise service. If the congregation is not large, perhaps all can speak a few words, stating how present truth was brought to them, and how they are resolved to continue their efforts to carry it to others. By remarks and suggestions, make the social meeting as practical as possible, looking toward a continuation of active personal missionary work in the church.)

Individual Consecration Needed

MRS. E. G. WHITE

(Reading for Thursday, December 14)

God chose a people for himself, and gave them the name of Christian. This is a royal name, given to those who join themselves to Christ. It is of this name that James is speaking when he says, "Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment seats? Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?" And Peter says, "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf."

God expects those who bear the name of Christ to represent him in thought, word, and deed. Their thoughts are to be pure, and their words and deeds noble and uplifting, drawing those around them nearer to the Saviour.

In the life of the true Christian there is nothing of self. Self is dead. There was no selfishness in the life that Christ lived while on this earth. Bearing our nature, he lived a life wholly devoted to the service of others.

"Be ye therefore perfect," is God's word to us. And in order that we might obey this word, he sent his only begotten Son to this earth to live in our behalf a perfect life. We have before us his example; and the strength by which he lived this life is at our disposal. In thought, word, and act Jesus was sinless. Perfection marked all that he did. He points us to the path that he trod, saying, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

In a special sense Seventh-day Adventists have been set in this world as watchmen and light bearers. To them has been entrusted the last message of mercy for a perishing world. On them is shining wonderful light from the Word of God. What manner of persons, then, ought they to be?

Our lives should show steady spiritual growth. But I have seen that which makes me tremble — men and women dwarfed in character, possessing the Word of God, which tells them what they must do in order to be saved, yet unsanctified and unholy. They do not enjoy the strength provided for every Christian, because they refuse to be Christlike.

It is the purpose of God to glorify himself in his people before the world. He longs to make them channels through which he can pour his boundless love and mercy. But are we what God would have us? — No, we are not. The members of our churches in every place need to examine themselves closely, and surrender their lives unreservedly to God. They need to grasp the offered gifts of heaven, and live out their love and gratitude. Did they do this, they would regard time as too precious to be spent in faultfinding and criticism.

When God's people bring the righteousness of Christ into the daily life, sinners will be converted, and victories over the enemy will be gained.

Let us come up to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty powers of darkness. Satan is working with intensity of purpose to enslave and destroy souls. Let us take a firm stand against him. He who is fully consecrated to the service of God will be made strong for the battle. He will be strengthened with "all might." He who feels his weakness, and wrestles with God as did Jacob, saying, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me," will go forth with the fresh anointing of the Holy Spirit. The atmosphere of heaven will surround him. He will go about doing good. His influence will be a positive force in favor of the religion of Christ.

God calls for light bearers, who will fill the world with the light and peace and joy that come from Christ. He calls for humble men, men who cherish a sense of their weakness, and who remember what the service of God demands of them — the propriety of speech and action which shows the power of the grace of Christ. Such ones will reveal in their lives the virtues of Christ's character.

There needs to be a deeper work of grace in the hearts of God's people. Less of self, and more of Christ, must be seen. Tests, close and sharp, are coming to all. The religion of the Bible must be interwoven with all that we do and say. Every business transaction must be fragrant with the presence of God.

The condition of things in this world bears unmistakable evidence that the end of all things is at hand. Men's hearts are filled with pride and selfishness. Theft and murder are common. And the world is not being warned as it should be. Thousands are perishing in sin, and the last message of mercy is yet to be proclaimed in the power of the Spirit. How little is being done in comparison with what must be done! Souls are perishing out of Christ. In the future men will be moved by the Spirit to leave their ordinary employment, and enter the fields in which the warning message has never been proclaimed. Many will be endued with power from on high. These workers will labor wisely, not expending means lavishly, but studying how souls can be brought to a knowledge of the truth. This work men and women can take hold of for the love of Christ.

Time is precious. The destiny of souls is in the balance. God is holding back his judgments, waiting for the message to be sounded to all. There are many who have not yet heard the testing message of truth for this time. The last call of mercy is to be proclaimed throughout the earth. Heavenly angels have long been waiting for human agents, the members of the church, to co-operate with them in the great work to be done. They are waiting for you. So vast is the field, so comprehensive the design, that every sanctified heart will be pressed into service as an agent of divine power.

At infinite cost a way of salvation has been provided. Shall Christ's great sacrifice be in vain? Shall the earth be entirely controlled by satanic agencies? The salvation of souls is dependent upon the consecration and activity of the members of the church of God. The Lord calls upon those who believe in him to be workers together with him. While their life shall last, they are not to feel that their work is done. Until the time shall come when Christ shall say "It is finished," the work for the saving of souls will not decrease, but will grow in importance. A thousand times more work for God might be accomplished if all his children would fully consecrate themselves to him. If they would improve every opportunity for doing good, doors for service would open before them. They would be called to bear greater responsibilities.

The same devotion, the same self-sacrifice, the same subjection to the claims of the Word of God, that were manifest in the life of Christ, must be seen in the lives of his servants. He left his home of security and peace, left the glory that he had with the Father, left his position on the throne of the universe. He went forth, a suffering, tempted man, went forth in solitude, to sow in tears, to water with his blood, the seed of life for a lost world.

In like manner his servants are to go forth to sow. The warning message is to be carried to all parts of the world. Our books are to be published in many different languages. With these books, humble, faithful men are to go forth as colporteur-evangelists, bearing the truth to many who would otherwise never be enlightened. Those who take up this line of work are to go prepared to do medical missionary work. The sick and suffering are to be helped. Many for whom this work of mercy is done will hear and accept the words of life.

It is not learned, eloquent workers that are needed now, but humble, Christlike men and women, who have learned from Jesus of Nazareth to be meek and lowly, and who, trusting in his strength, will go forth into the highways and hedges to give the invitation, "Come; for all things are now ready."

Not all can go as missionaries to foreign fields, but all can live the Christ-life where they are. All can give of their means for the support of workers in foreign fields. And all can engage in home missionary work. Let not parents forget the great mission field that lies before them in the home. In the children committed to her, every mother has a sacred charge from God. "Take this son, this daughter," God says, "and train it for me. Give it a character polished after the similitude of a palace, that it may shine in the courts of the Lord forever."

The light and glory that shines from the throne of God rests upon the faithful mother as she tries to educate her children to resist the influence of evil.

Church-members, let the light shine forth. Let your voices be heard in humble prayer, in witness against the intemperance, the folly, and the amusements of the world, and in proclamation of the truth for this time. Your voice, your influence, your time — all these are gifts from God, to be used in winning souls to Christ.

My brethren and sisters, you have a voice, you have reason, you have capabilities, and the Lord calls upon you to make known his truth. Visit your neighbors, and show an interest in the salvation of their souls. Arouse every spiritual energy to action. Tell those whom you visit that the end of all things is at hand. The Lord Jesus Christ will open the door of their hearts, and will make lasting impressions upon their minds.

Strive to arouse men and women from their spiritual insensibility. Tell them how you found Jesus, and how blessed you have been since you gained an experience in his service. Tell them what blessing comes to you as you sit at the feet of Jesus, and learn precious lessons from his Word. Tell them of the gladness and joy that there is in the Christian life. Your warm, fervent words will convince them that you have found the pearl of great price. Let your cheerful, encouraging words show them that you have certainly found the higher way. This is genuine missionary work, and as it is done, many will awake as from a dream.

The gospel commission is never to lose its force on the minds of the people of God. Into the darkness of sin the light of truth is to shine, that the darkness may be expelled. Those who reflect light will receive more light to reflect. New power will be brought into the church.

Let companies of Christian workers unite to help the needy and to proclaim the truth for this time. As they labor with self-sacrifice, for the sake of others denying themselves of that which they have heretofore enjoyed, but have not really needed, they are God's helping hand.

The Lord calls upon his people to arouse out of sleep. The end of all things is at hand. When those who know the truth will be laborers together with God, the fruits of righteousness will appear. By the revelation of the love of God in missionary effort, many will be awakened to see the sinfulness of their own course of action. They will see that in the past their selfishness has disqualified them to be laborers together with God. The exhibition of the love of God as seen in unselfish ministry to others will be the means of leading many souls to believe the Word of God just as it reads.

God desires to refresh his people by the gift of the Holy Spirit, baptizing them anew in his love. There is no need for a dearth of the Spirit in the church. After Christ's ascension, the Holy Spirit came upon the waiting, praying, believing disciples with a fulness and power that reached every heart. In the future, the earth is to be lightened with the glory of God. A holy influence is to go forth to the world from those who are sanctified through the truth. The earth is to be encircled with an atmosphere of grace. The Holy Spirit is to work on human hearts, taking the things of God, and showing them to men.

The message of salvation is not to be proclaimed in a few places only, but throughout the world. Those who know not the gospel are in the darkness of unbelief. They know not God. Why is the church so indolent, so selfish, so weak? Why do the members not make earnest efforts to proclaim the message of mercy, that others may know the joy of salvation through Christ?

Ye churches of the living God, study the promises of the Saviour, and think of how your lack of faith, of spirituality, of divine power, is hindering the coming of Christ. If you would go forth to do the Lord's work, angels of heaven would go before you, preparing hearts to receive the gospel. Were every one of us a genuine missionary, the message for this time would be proclaimed speedily in all lands, to every nation and people and tongue. Are you individually workers together with God? If not, why not?

The kingdoms of this world are soon to become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. "The seventh angel sounded, and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." There is to be a rapid and triumphant spread of the gospel.

"The Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple. . . . Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fullers' soap: and he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver." Soon every man will be judged according to his deeds.

My brother, my sister, I urge you to prepare for the coming of Christ in the clouds of heaven. Day by day cast the love of the world out of your hearts. Understand by experience what it means to have fellowship with Christ. Prepare for the judgment, that when Christ shall come, to be admired in all them that believe, you may be among those who will meet him in peace. In that day the redeemed will shine forth in the glory of the Father and the Son. The angels, touching their golden harps, will welcome the King and his trophies of victory — those who have been washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb. A song of triumph will peal forth, filling all heaven. Christ has conquered. He enters the heavenly courts, accompanied by his redeemed ones, the witnesses that his mission of suffering and sacrifice has not been in vain.

A Review of the Mission Fields

W. A. SPICER

(Reading for Friday, December 15)

Thank God that we can review another year of progress, another long step taken toward the end of the way. We have a right to talk confidently about this truth going to all the world. We have Christ's assurance that this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached as a witness to all nations, and John in the Revelation saw it actually going — the very warning message that we preach — to every nation and kindred and tongue and people.

It is going swiftly, too, as by an angel flying in the midst of heaven. The word comes in a recent Testimony: "The light is to shine to all lands and all peoples. It will not be long before every one will have heard the warning, and made his decision. Then shall the end come." Those at the ends of the earth are to make their decision for eternity, as the truth comes to them. Truly, we who know the truth are making our decision for eternity in the manner in which we meet God's call to carry the message to souls waiting for it.

VIEW OF KOBE, JAPAN

Still the world's Macedonian cry sounds in our ears, and God's wonderful providences urge us on to answer it. As stated in "Christ's Object Lessons:" "From India, from Africa, from China, from the islands of the sea, from the down-trodden millions of so-called Christian lands, the cry of human woe is ascending to God. That cry will not long be unanswered." This is not alone a general world-wide cry from souls that know not what they need. Mingled with this cry of woe is the voice of direct appeal to us. Many hearts all through the nations are listening for the voice of God. They hear of this advent movement, and they feel that we have something that will help them. They look to us for the message that will heal all their soul's diseases. We have the "blessed hope" and the saving truth for this last day; they want it, as well as we.

Here are just a few individual calls, to emphasize this fact of the very direct and touching appeals that come now from all parts of the world to Seventh-day Adventists. In the city of Colombo, Ceylon, Elder Armstrong was called to a house, to find a meeting already assembled. The leader said to him: "Brother Armstrong, we have invited you to open the scriptures to us which will give us light on the Sabbath question." From a remote interior point in Chile South America, a letter came: "Dear brother, no one visits us here, no one enlightens us, no one explains to us, neither do we understand, what we should do." From over in Korea came the word to Japan: "We now believe, and desire to be baptized. Dear brother, when you read this, hasten and take a boat and come to us."

Among the Santal hills of western Bengal, India, the people thronged our workers, begging attention to sick ones in the village. Kneeling and grasping the feet of the workers, a woman cried, "See my poor husband; can't you help him?" An aged native of Basutoland, Africa, said to our workers: "What you say is true; the Lord is coming again soon. But our hearts seem quite hard. However, you must not get tired of coming to us. Some seed will grow." Among the Servians of Hungary, Brother Huenergardt recently found a man who had heard there were Christians keeping the Sabbath. He wrote to Hamburg, and to other leading cities in Germany, to learn where to find us. He failed to get information. Then he wrote to Budapest and the leading cities of Hungary; and again he failed. At last he got trace of us through the Bible Society, and to-day is rejoicing in the truth. A heathen African woman wept as she came to two of our native teach-hold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him." In view of this the writer feels the need of prayer.

In our conference we hope that there will be a determination in all our churches and companies to assemble during that week as often as possible.

A. O. BURRILL, of Ontario.

Time to Finish

How rapidly many of our laborers and older brethren and sisters are dropping into their graves! Must this continue until we who have reached the half-century period of our lives have all passed off the stage of action, and the finishing of the work be given to our children to accomplish? For one, I desire to help in its completion; I do not wish to lay down the armor until the work is done. I wish to live to see Him who died to redeem me coming in the clouds of heaven, with all his holy angels, to gather his people to those mansions he is now preparing for the faithful.

But to accomplish that which the Lord has for us to do in this generation, we must have a new experience — a new life and power greater than heretofore possessed. Shall we not, during the week of prayer, seek the Lord with all our hearts for a preparation that will cause us unitedly to arise in the strength of the God of Israel and finish the work? Shall we act like men who wait for their Lord when he shall return from the wedding? Shall we not make the carrying of this message to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people the one great purpose of our lives? Shall we not, in fact, become a part of the third angel's message — the literal voice, as was John the Baptist in his day?

May this week of prayer be to this denomination what the ten days of tarrying at Jerusalem were to the disciples before the day of Pentecost. May this be a time when we shall be greatly endued with power from on high; and may the hearts of all God's people be greatly enlarged, and made willing to supply every needed assistance for the conclusion of the work quickly.

W. J. STONE, of Indiana.

In the Mission Field

THERE is, perhaps, no one in our ranks to whom the week of prayer appeals more strongly than to the toiler in the mission field. He has left home and friends, and the comforts of the home land, for customs and climes both strange and new, sacrificing all worldly ambition, to carry this gospel of the kingdom to all the world. Everything that points to a speedy realization of the Saviour's wish that his people may be with him where he is, finds a ready response in his soul. To him the week of prayer and the annual offering are a barometer, gauging the missionary zeal of those left behind in the home land, foretelling whether during the year to come the burdens shall be lighter in mission lands, or whether a lack of funds will weigh him down with extra burdens.

In a recent religious gathering held in Seattle, Wash., Secretary Patton, speaking as a missionary, in his report gave utterance to the following significant words: —

"Within five years the missionary situation of the world has been so transformed as to be hardly recognizable by those who studied the problem in the previous period. There has been nothing like this in history since the preparation of the Roman empire for the advent of Christ. We are in a new fulness of time. Once our missionaries labored ten years for a single convert; now one thousand converts await baptism in a single province in China."

We as a people know the meaning of this great transformation. Divine agencies, in a marked manner, for more than five years have so changed the attitude of heathen lands toward the gospel message that other denominations are led to say that there has been nothing like it since the preparation of the Roman empire for the advent of Christ. It is even so. It is the preparation of the whole world for the realization of the blessed hope, the second advent of our Saviour.

This denomination has been separated from the world by the mighty cleaver of God's truth, for this very fulness of time. The world is being prepared. It now behooves us, from the oldest to the youngest, to lay all on the altar of sacrifice, and sweep through the world with the last warning message, gathering out such as will be saved, and then shall the end come.

Those who have gone out in the mission field believe that the Lord will finish the gospel work, by raising up a people whose meat it is to do the Father's will and to finish his work. Some will have to leave home, others must remain behind; but all will have the one meat. If they are working for a salary, conducting some business, or running a farm, all their income will be consecrated to the finishing of this work.

Had all this people done thus from the time of their separation from the world, there would have been in all the earth a mighty army, well sustained by those who remained at home, and we should now face a finished work. But it will come; we in the mission fields are certain of it. It may come sooner, or it may come later. It all depends on the attitude of those who read these lines. Let us make it sooner. We will look at the attitude of the people toward the week of prayer, and their response to the needs in the annual offering, as a gauge of their interest in the finishing of the work. How cheering it will be to hear of a good week of prayer, universal interest, enthusiastic, Spirit-filled meetings, and an unprecedented annual offering, showing a united people with hearts beating as one in the finishing of the work. Shall it not be so?

The Altered Question

VOICES, sad with sin and suffering,
From the lands beyond the sea,
Ever came in pleading accents,
Till they seemed a call to me;
But I strove to answer "No"
As I questioned, "Must I go?"

Still I mused, till growing pity
Touched and filled my inmost soul.
I could tell the "old, old story"
Of the Love that maketh whole;
Yet I wavered to and fro,
Pondering always, "Shall I go?"

Then I saw, as in a vision,
One who stood with outstretched hands,
And a face of tender yearning
Turned toward those heathen lands;
At His feet I bent me low,
Whispering softly, "May I go?"

There I leave it — anxious questions
Are for evermore at rest,
Here or there, or work or waiting,
His the choice, and that is best.
For I know that, day by day,
He himself will show the way.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 11

Acceptable Worship

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE prayer offered by Solomon at the dedication of the temple breathed sentiments of loftiest piety blended with deepest humility.

In all that was said during the dedicatory services, Solomon sought to remove from the minds of those present the superstitions in regard to the Creator that had beclouded the minds of the heathen. He told them that the God of heaven is not like the gods of the heathen, who are confined to temples built for them, but that the true God would meet with his people by his Spirit when they should assemble at the house dedicated to his worship. The Lord visits his people in their homes, or wherever they may be, and cheers them by special revelations of his goodness. And in every place God's children have the privilege of worshiping their Heavenly Father.

Centuries later, Paul taught the same truth in these words: "God that made the world and all things therein, seeing that he is Lord of heaven and earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshiped with men's hands, as though he needed anything, seeing he giveth to" "all nations of men" "life, and breath, and all things; . . . that they should seek the Lord, if haply they might feel after him, and find him, though he be not far from every one of us: for in him we live, and move, and have our being."

And the psalmist declares: —

"Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord;
The people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance.
The Lord looketh from heaven;
He beholdeth all the sons of men;
From the place of his habitation he looketh forth
Upon all the inhabitants of the earth."
"He hath looked down from the height of his sanctuary."
"The Lord hath prepared his throne in the heavens;
And his kingdom ruleth over all."

"Thy way, O God, is in the sanctuary: who is so great a God as our God? Thou art the God that doest wonders: thou hast declared thy strength among the people."

Although God dwells not in temples made with hands, yet he honors with his presence the assemblies of his people. He has promised that when they come together to seek him, to acknowledge their sins, and to pray for one another, he will meet with them by his Spirit. But those who assemble to worship him should put away every evil thing. Unless they can worship him in spirit and truth and in the beauty of holiness, their coming together will be of no avail.

If God's people, when they assemble, will let him speak to them through his appointed agencies, all will be united in his service. "Give ear, O my people," he pleads, "to my law: incline your ear to the words of my mouth. I will open my mouth in a parable: I will utter dark sayings of old: which we have heard and known, and our fathers have told us. We will not hide them from their children, showing to the generation to come the praises of the Lord, and his strength, and the wonderful works that he hath done. For he established a testimony in Jacob, and appointed a law in Israel, which he commanded our fathers, that they should make them known to their children: that the generation to come might know them, even the children which should be born; who should arise and declare them to their children: that they might set their hope in God, and not forget the works of God, but keep his commandments: and might not be as their fathers, a stubborn and rebellious generation; a generation that set not their heart aright, and whose spirit was not steadfast with God."

Words of Approval and of Warning

After the close of the dedicatory ceremonies, "the Lord appeared to Solomon by night, and said unto him, I have heard thy prayer, and have chosen this place to myself for an house of sacrifice. If I shut up heaven that there be no rain, or if I command the locusts to devour the land, or if I send pestilence among my people; if my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will heal their land. Now mine eyes shall be open, and mine ears attent unto the prayer that is made in this place. For now have I chosen and sanctified this house that my name may be there forever: and mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually."

If Israel had remained faithful and true to God, this glorious building would have stood forever, as a perpetual sign of God's especial favor to his chosen people. "The sons of the stranger," God declared, "that join themselves to the Lord, to serve him, and to love the name of the Lord, to be his servants, every one that keepeth the Sabbath from polluting it, and taketh hold of my covenant; even them will I bring to my holy mountain, and make them joyful in my house of prayer: their burnt offerings and their sacrifices shall be accepted upon mine altar; for mine house shall be called a house of prayer for all people." And the Saviour himself, in referring to this scripture, declared that the temple was to have been known as "a house of prayer for all nations."

In the night vision given Solomon, the Lord made very plain the path of duty before the king. "As for thee," he declared, "if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, and do according to all that I have commanded thee, and shalt observe my statutes and my judgments; then will I stablish the throne of thy kingdom, according as I have covenanted with David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man to be ruler in Israel."

How full are God's promises! Had Solomon continued to serve the Lord in humility, his reign would have been a powerful influence for good over the surrounding heathen nations,— nations that had been so favorably impressed by his father David's reign, and by the wise words and magnificent works of the earlier years of his own reign. God, in his mercy, foreseeing the terrible temptations that attend prosperity and worldly honor, tenderly warned Solomon against the sin of apostasy, and foretold the awful results of sin.

"If ye turn away," the Lord plainly declared, "and forsake my statutes and my commandments, which I have set before you, and shall go and serve other gods, and worship them; then will I pluck them up by the roots out of my land which I have given them; and this house, which I have sanctified for my name, will I cast out of my sight, and will make it to be a proverb and a byword among all nations. And this house, which is high, shall be an astonishment to every one that passeth by it; so that he shall say, Why hath the Lord done thus unto this land, and unto this house? And it shall be answered, Because they forsook the Lord God of their fathers, which brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, and laid hold on other gods, and worshiped them, and served them: therefore hath he brought all this evil upon them."

"Let Us Kneel Before the Lord Our Maker"

[The prayer offered by Solomon during the dedication of the temple, was not made while he stood upon his feet. The king knelt in the humble position of a petitioner. (1)

Herein is a lesson for God's people to-day. Our spiritual strength and our influence are not increased by conformity to a worldly attitude during prayer.] In these perilous times, those who profess to be God's commandment-keeping people should guard against the tendency to lose the spirit of reverence and godly fear.

The Scriptures teach men how to approach their Maker,— with humility and awe, through faith in a divine Mediator. [Let man come on bended knee, as a subject of grace, a suppliant at the footstool of mercy. Thus he is to testify (2) that the whole soul, body, and spirit are in subjection to his Creator.]

Both in public and in private worship, it is our duty to bow upon our knees before God when we offer our petitions to him. Jesus, our example, "kneeled down, and prayed." And of his disciples it is recorded that they, too, "kneeled down, and prayed." Stephen "kneeled." Paul declared: "I bow my knees unto the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." In confessing before God the sins of Israel, Ezra knelt. Daniel "kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God." And the invitation of the psalmist is: "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker."

"What doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul?" "Fear ye not me? saith the Lord: will ye not tremble at my presence?" "Unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of Righteousness arise with healing in his wings."

"Let all the earth fear the Lord: let all the inhabitants of the world stand in awe of him. . . . The eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy." "By humility and the fear of the Lord are riches, and honor, and life."

"Wherefore . . . let us have grace, whereby we may offer service well-pleasing to God with reverence and awe."

The Groaning Earth

T. H. JEYS

"For we know that the whole creation groaneth, . . . even we ourselves groan within ourselves." Rom. 8: 22, 23.

When one groans, it is because there is some condition that is painful. This is why the earth groans at the present time. For six thousand years the fatal experiment of sin has had time to do its baleful work. The wickedness of man rests heavily on the earth, and causes this mighty cry of anguish to go up from all nature.

(1) (2)
Commentary, Vol. 3 p.1131; Vol. 1, p 1131

has he to take the name? To be a Christian means to be Christlike. It is written, "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." To be Christlike means to be swallowed up in that blessed work which made him the Saviour of men. In speaking of his mission, he said, "The zeal of thine house hath eaten me up." Why should I, by taking the title "Christian," profess Christlikeness, and then not be consumed with the impulses, the undying life-purpose, which made him the Christ, the Saviour of men?

If seventy-five thousand people counted fully that their very existence was for the purpose of winning souls, this message would receive a new impetus. A drawing power will surely accompany every one who lifts up the Saviour. Should not our commandment-keeping be the revelation of the life and love of Christ to the world? The life of devoted sacrifice will bear fruit, even as the sacrifice of Christ is fruitful in the salvation of every believer in him.

My special burden for the welcome week of prayer is that the people who are commissioned of heaven to carry the message of salvation to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, shall fully awake to a true sense of their mission, and by faith, through prayer, receive that baptism of the Spirit of Christ which alone will energize them for their heavenly calling.

As we contemplate the millions of souls yet to be warned, the work yet to be accomplished, and the necessity of the development of that faith in the remnant people which may truly be called the "faith of Jesus," who can but pray, "Lord, increase our faith," and send forth more laborers into the great, white harvest-field?

G. W. REASER, of Southern California.

The Time Has Come

THE conviction has been growing upon me during the weeks just past that the time has fully come for us to rise and quickly finish the work. This week of prayer ought to be, and I believe it will be, the greatest inspiration we have ever had to faithful service in carrying this precious message to the world in this generation.

F. S. BUNCH, of Western Oregon.

Claim the Promised Blessing

WHAT should this coming week of prayer be to us? To me it would seem that the time had come for the invitation in Joel 2:12-14 to be accepted by turning wholly to the Lord, and the promised blessing claimed by the Lord's waiting children. Are we not fully warranted in expecting this?

Then the deliverance foretold in verse 32 will be realized, and the captives bound in sin will be set free, all who are longing for freedom, and then will the Lord be able to close the work in triumph.

The Way

THE Way is narrow, straight, and long,
I go in tears, sometimes in song,
But not one step of joy or pain
Shall ever more be walked again;
For only once I pass this way
In traveling to the Gates of Day.

'Tis only once. Shall my heart break
Because no more this Way I take?
Shall I bewail that every night
Forever shuts the past from sight?
When sunset comes, the stars arise,
And morning never fails the skies.

Upon this Way of earthly sod
Are tented angels sent of God!
So on I go, the Way is straight,
The cross of Christ my only weight,—
The weight of wings the lark must bear
In soaring heavenward through the air.

The Glory of Solomon's Early Reign

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE wealth and the wisdom of Solomon, the magnificent buildings and public works constructed during the early years of his reign, the energy and the piety revealed in word and deed, made a deep impression upon all Israel, and brought to him fame and honor from the surrounding nations. By his justice and magnanimity he won the loyalty of Israel, and the admiration of the rulers of many lands.

"God gave Solomon wisdom and understanding exceeding much. . . . He was wiser than all men; . . . and his fame was in all nations round about." Solomon took special interest in natural history, but his researches were not confined to any one branch of learning. Through diligent study of all created things, both animate and inanimate, he gained a clearer conception of the Creator. In the forces of nature, in the mineral and the animal world, and in every tree and shrub and flower, he saw a revelation of God's infinite wisdom; and as he sought to learn more and more, his knowledge of God and his love for him constantly increased.

The Tribute of Kings

"And all the kings of the earth sought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, that God had put in his heart. And they brought every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and raiment, harness, and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year."

As the people from many lands visited Solomon, he taught them of God as the Creator of all things. These visitors returned to their homes with clearer conceptions of the God of Israel, and of his compassionate love for the human race. In the works of nature they now beheld an expression of his love and a revelation of his character; and many were led to worship him as their God.

Never was Israel more greatly honored than during the first part of Solomon's reign. The righteousness and wisdom revealed by the king bore to all nations continual witness of the power of God. For a time the Israelites shone forth as the light of the world, showing, by their nobility of character, the greatness of Jehovah.

The Visit of the Queen of Sheba

One of those deeply interested in Solomon's wisdom, the queen of Sheba, determined to "prove him with hard questions," and "came to Jerusalem," attended by a retinue of servants, with camels bearing "spices, and gold in abundance, and precious stones."

"And when she was come to Solomon, she communed with him of all that was in her heart." The queen talked with him of the mysteries of nature, and Solomon taught her of the God of nature, the great Creator, who dwells in the highest heaven and rules over all. "And Solomon told her all her questions: there was not anything hid from the king, which he told her not."

"When the queen of Sheba had seen all Solomon's wisdom, and the house that he had built, and the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel, and his cupbearers, and his ascent by which he went up unto the house of the Lord; there was no more spirit in her."

"It was a true report," she acknowledged to the king, "which I heard in mine own land of thine acts, and of thy wisdom: howbeit I believed not their words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it:" "and, behold, the half was not told me: thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard. Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom."

Recognizing the source of Solomon's wisdom and prosperity, the queen exclaimed: "Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee to set thee on his throne, to be king for the Lord thy God: because thy God loved Israel, to establish them forever, therefore made he thee king over them, to do judgment and justice."

The queen "gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of spices very great store, and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Sheba gave to King Solomon."

"King Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty. So she turned and went to her own country, she and her servants."

"The Lips of the Wise Disperse Knowledge"

The real glory of Solomon's reign was not the surpassing wisdom, the fabulous riches, and the far-reaching power and fame that were his. It was by a wise use of these gifts of heaven, in revealing to the world a knowledge of the King of kings, that Solomon brought glory to the name of the God of Israel.

With the passing of the years and the increase of his fame, Solomon sought to honor God by adding to his mental and spiritual strength, and by imparting to others the blessings he received. He realized that he had come into possession of a kingdom, and of power, wisdom, and glory, through the favor of Jehovah. None understood better than he that these gifts were bestowed in order that he might give to the world a knowledge of God.

It was to give in his own life a revelation of his Father's character, that Christ came in the form of humanity. In his life no ostentatious display, no act to gain applause, was ever witnessed. Christ was hid in God, and God was revealed in the character of his Son. To this revelation Jesus desired the minds of the people to be directed and their homage to be given.

Solomon's divinely given wisdom found expression in songs of praise, and in many inspired proverbs. In these writings are outlined principles of holy living and high endeavor,— principles that should govern every act of life,— principles that are heaven-born and that lead to godliness. The wide dissemination of these truths, and the recognition of God as the one to whom belongs all praise and honor, made Solomon's early reign most glorious.

"Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding. For the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold. She is more precious than rubies: and all the things thou canst desire are not to be compared unto her. Length of days is in her right hand; and in her left hand riches and honor. Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. She is a tree of life to them that lay hold upon her: and happy is every one that retaineth her."

"Wisdom is the principal thing; therefore get wisdom: and with all thy getting get understanding." "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." "The fear of the Lord is to hate evil: pride, and arrogancy, and the evil way, and the froward mouth, do I hate."

O that Solomon had heeded in later years these wonderful words of wisdom that he was inspired to write! O that he who once declared that "the lips of the wise disperse knowledge," and who himself wisely taught the kings of the earth to ascribe to the King of kings the glory they desired to give him, had never with a "froward mouth," in "pride and arrogancy," taken to himself the glory due to God alone!

Diffusion Versus Concentration

FRANCIS M. WILCOX

The history of this world from the entrance of sin presents a record of opposing principles. The governments of God and Satan, and the principles upon which they are based, have stood in direct opposition. At every step Satan has sought to circumvent the plan of God. Between them there has been a deadly conflict,— a conflict which can give no quarter or know no compromise.

The difference between these principles is well illustrated in the methods by which God has sought to carry forward and extend his work, and the methods by which Satan has sought to extend his. Satan's plan has been that of concentration and self-centered interests. God's plan has been the plan of diffusion, of giving, of sacrifice.

To Adam the command was given, "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it." The garden of Eden was planted as a model of God's husbandry; but instead of settling around it, the human family were to scatter abroad, subdue the earth, and bring it into the same high and glorious state of cultivation as was the model given them by the Creator.

Satan sought to thwart the plan of God. He inspired men to begin the building of cities, and encouraged them to associate together in large colonies. Cain, the wicked one, conceived the idea, and others rapidly followed in his steps, until the earth became so corrupt that God was forced to destroy the whole human race, with the exception of Noah and his family.

Upon Noah's liberation from the ark the same principle of diffusion was again enunciated. "Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth." But the same principle of evil which had proved so successful in the antediluvian age once more prevailed, and just in proportion as the human family departed from God, they again began to disregard his command and centralize their efforts and their influence. The result of the second apostasy culminated in the building of the tower of Babel. The second time God was compelled to resort to extreme measures. He destroyed the tower, and "scattered them abroad from thence upon the face of all the earth;" and in order that his plan should not again be turned aside, he confounded their language, thus creating the beginnings of nations and the distinctive and lasting separation of the human family.

In the call extended to Abraham, the principle of diffusion is again witnessed. "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land that I will show thee;" and the subsequent history of Abraham's experience demonstrates that he did not receive the fulness of God's blessing until this command was literally carried out, and there came about the complete separation between himself and Lot.

Abraham dwelt in tents, and was a wanderer from one part of the country to the other. This was in God's order, that the light and knowledge of the true God might be diffused to the people of that country. Their iniquity was not yet full, and God was still giving them opportunity for repentance. In later years God called the seed of Abraham to the land of Egypt. Here in the courts of the mightiest nation of earth, and before the millions of Egypt, Joseph and his brethren were to vindicate the majesty and glory of the one true God. But now Egypt had been given her opportunity, and the time comes in God's providence when his people are to return to the land given to their fathers, there to stand as the mightiest of the nations of the earth, as the chosen people of God, to spread abroad his truth and the glory of his name. Of them at this time God says that they should stand as a peculiar people, and should not be "reckoned among the nations."

The land bestowed upon them as an inheritance was peculiarly situated. It was on the great highway of travel between the east and the west. During all its history, in the changes that took place among the nations of the earth, it occupied a unique position. The mightiest kingdoms were its neighbors. To these God would have go out a knowledge of his truth, and so long as Israel were consecrated to him, their influence was potent for good; but as soon as they became self-centered, as soon as they came to glory in their possession, then God, in order that his plan might be carried out, sold them into captivity, and scattered them as individuals among the nations of earth.

The scattering of Israel and of Judah was not without its results in a missionary way. We find Daniel and his companions at the court of Babylon, and brought into positions of trust in the government, thus revealing to the heathen the knowledge of the true God.

That this principle of diffusion is a true gospel principle, Christ himself demonstrated by every act of his life and in all of his teachings. He "went about doing good." His efforts were not for one city, nor even for one nation. His visit to Samaria was but the first fruits of the glorious work to be done among the Gentile nations of the earth. He commissioned his disciples, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature." With their Jewish prejudices they illy comprehended the significance of his words and the world-wide commission committed to their hands. Even after the resurrection of our Lord they approached him with the question, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" He answers them, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." But Jerusalem continued to be the center of their hopes and the field of their labor, and in order for the purpose of the Lord to be carried out there came

A Time for Prevailing Prayer

THE LORD is soon to come. Wickedness and rebellion, violence and crime, are filling the world. The cries of the suffering and the oppressed rise to God for justice. In the place of being softened by the patience and forbearance of God, the wicked are growing stronger in stubborn rebellion. The time in which we live is one of marked depravity. Religious restraint is thrown off, and men reject the law of God as unworthy of their attention. A more than common contempt is placed upon this holy law.

A moment of respite has been graciously given us of God. Every power lent us of heaven is to be used in doing the work assigned us by the Lord for those who are perishing in ignorance. The warning message is to be sounded in all parts of the world. There must be no delay. The truth must be proclaimed in the dark places of the earth. Obstacles must be met and surmounted. A great work is to be done, and this work is entrusted to those who know the truth for this time.

Now is the time for us to lay hold of the arm of our strength. The prayer of David should be the prayer of pastors and laymen: "It is time for Thee, Lord, to work, for they have made void Thy law." Let the servants of God weep between the porch and the altar, crying, "Spare Thy people, O Lord, and give not Thine heritage to reproach." God has always wrought in behalf of His truth. The designs of wicked men, the enemies of the church, are subject to His power and His overruling providence. He can move upon the hearts of statesmen; the wrath of the haters of His truth and His people can be turned aside, even as the waters of a river could be turned, if thus he ordered it. Prayer moves the arm of Omnipotence. He who marshals the stars in order in the heavens, whose word controls the waves of the great deep—the same infinite Creator will work in behalf of His people, if they will call upon Him in faith. He will restrain all the forces of darkness, until the warning is given to the world, and all who will heed it are prepared for His coming.

The Perils of Prosperity

MRS. E. G. WHITE

In the midst of Solomon's wonderful prosperity, lurked danger. The sins of his father David's later years, though sincerely repented of and sorely punished, had emboldened the people in transgression of God's commandments. Through association with surrounding nations, evil influences were gradually permeating the kingdom that had been so remarkably blessed. God was not inquired of. Wealth, with all its temptations, came in Solomon's day to a rapidly increasing number of the people. "The king made silver and gold at Jerusalem as plenteous as stones, and cedar trees made he as the sycamore trees that are in the vale for abundance."

Throughout the ages, riches and honor have been attended with much peril to humility and spirituality. It is when a man is prospered, when all his fellow men speak well of him, that he is in special danger. Man is human. Spiritual prosperity continues only so long as man depends wholly upon God for wisdom and for perfection of character. And those who feel most their need of dependence upon God are usually those who have the least amount of earthly treasure and human honor on which to depend.

The Commendation of Man

There is danger in the bestowal of rich gifts or of words of commendation upon human agencies. Those who are favored by the Lord need to be on guard constantly, lest pride spring up and obtain the supremacy. He who has an unusual following, he who has received many words of commendation from the messengers of the Lord, needs the special prayers of God's faithful watchmen, that he may be shielded from the danger of cherishing thoughts of self-esteem and spiritual pride. Never is such a man to manifest self-importance, or attempt to act as a dictator or a ruler. Let him watch and pray, and keep his eye single to the glory of God. As his imagination takes hold upon things unseen, and he contemplates the joy of the hope that is set before him, — even the precious boon of life eternal, — the commendation of man will not fill his mind with thoughts of pride. And at times when the enemy makes special efforts to spoil him by flattery and worldly honor, his brethren should faithfully warn him of his dangers; for, if left to himself, he will be prone to make mistakes, and reveal human frailties.

In Solomon's day, as in ours, the very ones who praised and flattered and glorified the man of ability were the ones who failed to recognize and glorify God for the blessings he bestowed upon them through the human instrumentality. They praised the man; God was dishonored; and soon the Lord found the vessel he had ordained and used in his sacred service, becoming unclean. The sentiments, the spirit, and the likeness of the natural man began to appear, and he who once was doing God's will, became corrupted through human exaltation. Then the feebleness and weakness of man was revealed by the choice of injudicious friends, whose course helped the tempter to ensnare the man. The Lord allowed him to be ensnared, because he would not be counseled; he would walk in his own way.

Strength in Service

The Lord places men in positions of responsibility to carry out not their own will, but God's will. He gives wisdom to those who seek him, and who depend upon him as their counselor. So long as men represent the pure principles of his government, he will continue to bless and maintain them as his instrumentalities to carry out his purposes concerning his people. He co-operates with those who co-operate with him. It is to the interest of all who act any part in God's service, to labor with exactitude and fidelity; for with distinctness is to be revealed the line of demarcation separating his people from the inhabitants of the world. He who remains true to principle will never be left by the Lord to become weak and discouraged.

The Lord's word to Solomon is applicable to every man who consents to assume responsibilities in any place in the Lord's work. Strength of character is to be honored by those who claim to keep the commandments and statutes of God. The solemn charges and appeals and promises, so large and full, that were made to Solomon, are made to every man who will stand in his lot and place to do the work that God has appointed him to.

In the Valley of Humiliation

It is not the empty cup that we have trouble in carrying; it is the cup full to the brim that must be carefully balanced. Affliction and adversity may cause much inconvenience, and may bring great depression; but it is prosperity that is dangerous to spiritual life. Unless the human subject is in constant submission to the will of God, unless he is sanctified by the truth, and has the faith that works by love and purifies the soul, prosperity will surely arouse the (1) natural inclination to presumption.

Our prayers need most to be offered for the men in high places. They need the prayers of the whole church, because they are entrusted with prosperity and influence.

In the valley of humiliation, where men depend on God to teach them and to guide their every step, there is comparative safety. But let every one who has a living connection with God pray for the men in positions of responsibility, — for those who are standing on a lofty pinnacle, and who, because of their exalted position, are supposed to have much wisdom. Unless such men feel their need of an Arm stronger than the arm of flesh to lean upon, unless they make God their dependence, their view of things will become distorted, and they will fall.

The History of Bethel

S. N. HASKELL

Wherever the cause of God centers, there is the sharpest conflict between Christ and Satan. Bethel, twelve miles north of Jerusalem, was such a place; it was a strategic military and spiritual center.

The city was anciently called Luz, meaning "almond tree." It was under these almond trees, no doubt, that Jacob "had power over the angel, and prevailed: he wept, and made supplication unto him." Hosea 12:4. When Jacob knew of a surety that his peace was made with God, and his sins were forgiven, he lay down and slept sweetly with only hard stones for a pillow. Then it was that the Lord revealed that wonderful vision of the ladder reaching from earth to heaven, and the Lord gave him that wonderful promise, "I am with thee." Truly Jacob could say as he awakened, "The Lord is in this place." The presence of the Lord was of more importance than the presence of the almond trees, and Jacob changed the name from Luz, almond tree, to Bethel, the house of God. Gen. 28:12-19, margin. In speaking of Jacob's experience at Bethel, the prophet Hosea says the Lord found Jacob "in Bethel, and there he spake with us." We should ever remember that in the history of Bethel God is speaking to us. Hosea 12:4.

Christ Thy Strength

FIGHT the good fight with all thy might,
Christ is thy strength, and Christ thy right;
Lay hold on life, and it shall be
Thy joy and crown eternally.

Run the straight race through God's good grace,
Lift up thine eyes, and seek his face;
Life with its way before us lies,
Christ is the path, and Christ the prize.

Cast care aside, lean on thy Guide;
His boundless mercy will provide;
Trust, and thy trusting soul shall prove
Christ is its life, and Christ its love.

Faint not nor fear, his arms are near;
He changeth not, and thou art dear;
Only believe, and thou shalt see
That Christ is all in all to thee.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon—No. 14

Apostasy

MRS. E. G. WHITE

FOR many years Solomon walked uprightly. Heavenly wisdom was given him to rule over God's people with impartiality and mercy. But his life, after a morning of so great promise, was darkened with apostasy. History records the melancholy fact that he who was called Jedidiah (Beloved of the Lord),— he who had been specially honored by God with tokens of divine favor so remarkable that his wisdom and uprightness gained for him world-wide fame,— he who had so often given wise counsel to others,— turned from the worship of the true God to bow before the idols of the heathen.

Solomon's apostasy was so gradual that almost before he was aware of it, he had wandered far from God. Gradually but surely, he lost sight of the necessity of implicit obedience to the plain precepts of Holy Writ, and conformed more and more closely to the customs of the surrounding nations. Yielding to the temptations connected with his prosperity and his honored position, he forgot God, and the conditions of success.

Hundreds of years before Solomon came to the throne, the Lord, foreseeing the perils that would beset those chosen as rulers of Israel, gave Moses special instruction for their guidance. Directions were given that he who sat on the throne of Israel should "write him a copy" of the statutes of Jehovah "in a book out of that which is before the priests the Levites: and it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them: that his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aside from the commandment, to the right hand, or to the left: to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he, and his children, in the midst of Israel."

In connection with this instruction, the Lord particularly cautioned the one who should be anointed king not to "multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the Lord hath said unto you, Ye shall henceforth return no more that way. Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold."

These plain warnings were familiar to Solomon. And for a time he heeded them. His greatest desire was to live and rule in accordance with the statutes given at Sinai. His manner of conducting the affairs of the kingdom was in striking contrast with the customs of the idolatrous nations of his time,— nations who feared not God, and whose rulers trampled under foot his holy law.

The beginning of Solomon's apostasy may be traced to his violation of the plain commandments of the Lord. God had given the king of Israel wonderful prestige in the surrounding nations. Had Solomon continued to trust the Lord fully, his fame and the greatness of his nation would have constantly increased. But he began, almost imperceptibly at first, to trust less and less in the guidance and blessing of God, and to put confidence in his own strength. This is seen in his effort to gain power and dignity by allying himself with the nations round about him.

In seeking to strengthen his relations with the powerful kingdom lying to the southward of Israel, Solomon ventured upon forbidden ground. He "made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the city of David." From a human point of view, this marriage, although contrary to the teachings of God's law, seemed to prove a blessing; for Solomon's heathen wife was converted, and united with him in the worship of the true God. Furthermore, Pharaoh rendered signal service to Israel by taking Gezer, slaying "the Canaanites that dwelt in the city," and giving it "for a present unto his daughter, Solomon's wife." Solomon rebuilt and fortified this city, and thus apparently greatly strengthened his kingdom along the Mediterranean seacoast.

The barrier was further broken by Solomon's marriage with other heathen princesses. He flattered himself that his wisdom and the power of his example would lead his wives from idolatry to the worship of the true God, and also that the alliances thus formed would draw the nations round about into close touch with the people of God. Vain hope! How fatal was Solomon's mistake in regarding himself strong enough to resist the influence of heathen associates! And how fatal, too, the deception that led Solomon to hope that a disregard of God's law on his part, would lead others to revere and obey its sacred precepts!

Alliances and commercial relations with many heathen nations brought Solomon renown, honor, and the riches of this world. He was enabled to bring gold from Ophir and silver from Tarshish in great abundance. More and more he came to regard luxury, self-indulgence, and the favor of the world as indications of greatness. Beautiful and attractive women were brought from Egypt, Phonecia, Edom, Moab, and from many other places. These women were numbered by hundreds. Their religion was idol-worship, and they had been taught to practise cruel and degrading rites. Infatuated with their beauty, the king neglected his duties to God and to his kingdom. His wives exerted a strong influence over him, and gradually prevailed on him to unite with them in their worship.

Solomon's course brought its sure penalty. His separation from God through communication with idolaters ruined him. As he cast off his allegiance to God, he lost the mastery of himself. His moral efficiency was gone, as power is gone from a paralytic. His fine sensibilities became blunted, his conscience seared. Association with idolaters corrupted his faith. The instruction that God had given to serve as a barrier for his safety,— "neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold," — was disregarded, and Solomon gave himself up to the worship of false gods. He became the tool of Satan and a slave to impulse.

"It came to pass, when Solomon was old, that his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and his heart was not perfect with the Lord his God, as was the heart of David his father. For Solomon went after Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, and after Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites. And Solomon did evil in the sight of the Lord, and went not fully after the Lord, as did David his father. Then did Solomon build an high place for Chemosh, the abomination of Moab, in the hill that is before Jerusalem, and for Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon. And likewise did he for all his strange wives, which burnt incense and sacrificed unto their gods."

On the southern eminence of the Mount of Olives,— opposite Mount Moriah, where stood the beautiful temple of Jehovah,— Solomon erected an imposing pile of buildings to be used as idolatrous shrines. To please his wives, he placed huge idols, unshapely images of wood and stone, amid the groves of myrtle and olive. There, before the altars of the heathen deities, were practised the most degrading rites of heathenism.

He who in his early reign had displayed so much wisdom and kindly sympathy in restoring a helpless babe to its unfortunate mother, fell so low as to consent to the erection of an idol to whom children were offered as living sacrifices. He who in his youth was endowed with discretion and understanding, and who in his strong manhood had been inspired to write, "There is a way which seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death," in later years departed so far from purity as to countenance the licentious, revolting rites connected with the worship of Chemosh and Ashtoreth. He who at the dedication of the temple had said to his people, "Let your heart therefore be perfect with the Lord our God," himself became an offender, in heart and life denying his own words. He mistook license for liberty. He tried, but at what cost, to unite light with darkness, Christ with Belial, purity with impurity, good with evil.

From being one of the greatest kings that ever wielded a scepter, whose wisdom made him renowned throughout the world, Solomon became a profligate,— the tool and slave of others. His character, once noble and manly, became enervated and effeminate. His faith in the living God was shaken and supplanted by atheistic doubts. Unbelief marred his happiness, weakened his principles, and degraded his life; gloomy and soul-harrassing thoughts troubled him night and day. The justice and magnanimity of his early reign were changed to despotism and tyranny. Poor, frail human nature! God can do but little for men who lose their sense of dependence upon him.

Denominational or Undenominational?

W. J. STONE

THERE have been times in the history of our work when persons have felt it would be an advantage to conceal the fact that the work they were doing was denominational, or was being conducted by a certain denomination, and in the interests of that denomination. I have heard some who were giving instruction to our canvassers teach that it was better to evade a direct answer to the question whether it was a denominational book they were selling. I have even known of some ministers who have felt in the past that in going into a new field it was better to keep in the background the fact that we were Seventh-day Adventists, carrying the idea that the truths we preach are general Bible truths.

But I am glad there has come a change, and that there is inscribed upon the banner of those who are giving the third angel's message, "Here are they that keep the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus." And this characteristic is distinctively denominational; it applies to no other denomination. And that which is true upon this point is equally true on many other points of our faith.

The facts are that every phase of the work of Seventh-day Adventists is distinctively denominational. And whenever one attempts to take out from this denomination any special line of work connected with it, and tries to carry it forward disconnected from this body, and not in the setting that God has given it, that work becomes a failure, and sooner or later results in confusion, and comes to naught. This has been witnessed over and over in the history of this denomination, and should be a lesson to any who are tempted to carry forward, disconnected from this body, some special phase of the work committed to this people.

The Spirit of the Lord — the testimony of Jesus — has brought out and developed every phase of the message which we hold as a denomination. It has placed every phase of this truth in a certain setting, and it is impossible for a person who does not believe the whole message to give any part of it, or carry forward any branch of the work entrusted to us, correctly or in harmony with the mind of the Spirit. For example: There are many people in the world who believe in and teach the soon coming of Christ; but this generation has, in the third angel's message, the teaching that the hour of God's judgment is come, that probation ends before Christ comes, that during the millennium the saints will reign in heaven. The true preaching of the second coming of Christ and of the gospel of the kingdom, as brought to view in Revelation, is distinctively denominational; and when taken from its proper setting, and where God has placed it, it is not preaching the truth, but the very opposite.

Again: the true Sabbath is observed and taught by other people, yet not in the setting in which the Lord has placed it for these last days; consequently, there is no special power connected with it, and those who hear it are not moved to obedience.

Thus every point of present truth, and every branch of our work,— educational, medical, or religious liberty,— has its special setting, and is distinctively denominational, and must go with the denomination. Separated from the denomination, it no longer serves God's purpose in his present message to the world. Is the sanitarium work as conducted by Seventh-day Adventists denominational? What is its history? Has not God, by his Spirit, guided in the building up of the sanitarium work in this denomination? If Seventh-day Adventists had adopted these principles forty years ago, they would have stood at the head in these reforms in a greater measure than they do to-day.

If this is true,— and it is,— the sanitarium work as given to this people, and as God intended it should be carried forward by this people in all the world, is distinctively denominational, and can not be carried forward in harmony with the mind of God, and as God intended it should be, when taken out of its proper setting in the denomination. God has ordained that our medical work should be connected with the evangelical work. None but consecrated persons, those who have the spirit of the Master and a love for souls, can properly minister to the afflicted and sin-sick, and point them to the Source of life, the One who heals all our diseases of both soul and body. The consecrated nurses are many times the instruments, in God's hands, of ministering to afflicted souls the one thing needful, more than the physician, but both alike should be consecrated Christians, in order to perform the highest type of medical missionary work. So I say again that the more closely the medical work can be linked with the evangelical, the greater will be its efficiency.

In "Testimonies for the Church," Vol. VI, page 289, we read: "The medical missionary work should be a part of the work of every church in our land. Disconnected from the church, it would soon become a strange medley of disorganized atoms." Take it out of its proper place, and it can not fulfil the purpose of God; it becomes a medley. The world may conduct hospitals, and do much in relieving the sick and the suffering, but it is not doing the work committed to Seventh-day Adventists. Neither can it do it, even though it might employ some of the same methods. And professed Seventh-day Adventists who conduct sanitariums for gain, and adopt the spirit of commercialism, disconnecting themselves from the body, can not meet the design or mind of God in this great work which is designated as the "right arm" of the message.

Truly, the Lord has said, "Disconnected from the church, it would soon become a strange medley of disorganized atoms." The truthfulness of this statement is being demonstrated at the present time; and it will appear more apparent as time passes. Every line of work carried forward by Seventh-day Adventists, and every point of our message as outlined and directed by the Spirit of the Lord for the past forty years, has been distinctively denominational, and, under the guidance of the Spirit, it has prospered, and accomplished much for God. Separated from the denomination, it has come to naught.

Our work is one of reform, a fulfilment of prophecy, under God, to accomplish a special work which was not being done by any other people or denomination in the world. And this fact again designates our whole work as denominational. And, dear brethren and sisters, let us not try to get away from this idea; for if we do, we shall only pull away from the message; and that means our eternal loss.

The Seventh-day Adventist denomination is the embodiment of the third angel's message. Nearly two thousand years ago God permitted John to behold the closing scenes of this world's history. He also inspired John to write what he saw. The word of God as

Though the storm, cloud, and tempest appear,
Thou shalt hide thee for aye in the "cleft of the rock,"
And be safe in the hour of thy fear.

But say to the wicked, "With thee it is ill;"

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 15

"He That Soweth Iniquity Shall Reap Vanity"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

ONE of the most powerful influences that led to Solomon's apostasy, was the pride of prosperity. As wealth and worldly honor came to him, he at first remained humble, but after a time he began to lose sight of the Source of his unparalleled prosperity. This led to a wrong use of the talents of wealth and of influence. The gifts of heaven were perverted for selfish purposes.

Solomon's profligacy was accompanied by extravagance. For his first wife, Pharaoh's daughter, he built a magnificent palace "of costly stones . . . within and without, even from the foundation unto the coping." "Solomon was building his own house thirteen years."

"The House of the Forest of Lebanon"

"He built also [in Jerusalem] the house of the forest of Lebanon; the length thereof was an hundred cubits, and the breadth thereof fifty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits, upon four rows of cedar pillars, with cedar beams upon the pillars. . . . And there were windows in three rows, and light was against light in three ranks. . . . He made a porch of pillars; the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth thereof thirty cubits."

"King Solomon made two hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred shekels of gold went to one target." "And three hundred shields made he of beaten gold; three hundred shekels of gold went to one shield. And the king put them in the house of the forest of Lebanon."

"All the drinking vessels of King Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold: none were of silver; it was not anything accounted of in the days of Solomon."

God's money, which should have been held in sacred trust for the benefit of the worthy poor, and for national improvements of permanent value, was selfishly absorbed in the king's ambitious projects. The suffering ones in Israel were not given proper food and clothing and shelter. In his proud heart the king cherished the desire to excel all other earthly kings in the magnificence of his court.

Solomon's Throne

"He made a porch for the throne where he might judge, even the porch of judgment: and it was covered with cedar from one side of the floor to the other." "Moreover the king made a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with the best gold. The throne had six steps, and the top of the throne was round behind: and there were stays on either side on the place of the seat, and two lions stood beside the stays. And twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps: there was not the like made in any kingdom."

Military Equipment

A striking illustration of the blinding influence of sin is seen in Solomon's disregard of the plain command of the Lord that the king of Israel should not "multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses." The record declares: "Solomon had horses brought out of Egypt." "They brought unto Solomon horses . . . out of all lands." "And Solomon had forty thousand stalls of horses for his chariots. . . . Barley also and straw for the horses and dromedaries brought they unto the place where the officers were, every man according to his charge."

In the matter of military equipment, Solomon chose to follow unsanctified human judgment in the place of following the word of God. "A chariot came up and went out of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver [over three hundred dollars], and an horse for an hundred and fifty [over seventy-five dollars]." "Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jerusalem."

"The king had at sea a navy of Tarshish with the navy of Hiram."

A Record of Folly

The pride of prosperity brought separation from God. From the joy of divine communion Solomon turned to find satisfaction in the pleasures of sense. A word-picture portraying this experience is given, in the language of Solomon himself, in the book of Ecclesiastes. "I communed with mine own heart," he confesses, "saying, Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten more wisdom than all they that have been before me. . . . And I gave my heart to know . . . madness and folly." "I said in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth, therefore enjoy pleasure."

"I sought in mine heart to give myself unto wine, yet acquainting mine heart with wisdom; and to lay hold on folly. . . . I made me great works; I builded me houses; I planted me vineyards: I made me gardens and orchards; . . . I got me servants and maidens, and had servants born in my house; also I had great possessions of great and small cattle above all that were in Jerusalem before me: I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces: I gat me men singers and women singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments, and that of all sorts. So I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem. . . . And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them, I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labor. . . .

"Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labor that I had labored to do: and, behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit. . . . I saw that wisdom excelleth folly, as far as light excelleth darkness. . . . Then said I in my heart, As it happeneth to the fool, so it happeneth even to me. . . . I hated life. . . . Yea, I hated all my labor which I had taken under the sun."

The National Revenues

The enormous expense of establishing and maintaining a court of unrivaled splendor and Oriental profligacy, was met in part by the annual tribute of kings, and by the rich treasures brought from the East, from Tarshish, and from the land of Ophir, by the king's seagoing vessels sailing from Ezion-geber, and from Eloth, "at the seaside in the land of Edom." Hiram "sent him by the hands of his servants ships, and servants that had knowledge of the sea; and they went with the servants of Solomon to Ophir, and took thence four hundred and fifty talents of gold, and brought them to King Solomon." "And the navy also of Hiram, that brought gold from Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of almug trees, and precious stones."

"The king's ships went to Tarshish with the servants of Hiram: every three years once came the ships of Tarshish, bringing gold, and silver, ivory, and apes, and peacocks."

"The weight of the gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and threescore and six talents of gold; besides that which chapmen and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia and governors of the country brought gold and silver to Solomon."

Even this enormous revenue did not prove sufficient to meet the lavish expenditures of the king and his court. And now pride, ambition, prodigality, and indulgence bore fruit in cruelty and exaction. The conscientious, considerate spirit that had actuated Solomon in all his dealings with his people during his early reign, was now sadly changed. From the wisest and most merciful of rulers, he degenerated into a tyrant. Once the compassionate, God-fearing guardian of the people, he became oppressive and despotic. His passion for extravagant display led him to impose great burdens on the people. Tax after tax was levied on them, that means might be forthcoming to support the luxurious court.

The people began to murmur and complain. The respect and admiration they once cherished for their king was changed into disaffection and abhorrence.

National Apostasy

Solomon's alliance with heathen nations was followed by evils which led many of the children of Israel to violate the law of God. Multitudes became contaminated with the principles and practises of the heathen. Polygamy was introduced into Palestine. The pure religious service instituted by God was replaced by idolatry of the darkest hue. Human sacrifices were offered to idols; and the licentious rites practised by the heathen were countenanced.

In the rejection of the ways of God for the ways of men, the downfall of Israel began. Thus also it continued, until the Jewish people became a prey to the very nations whose practises they had chosen to follow.

Work for the Young People

B. E. HUFFMAN

As the autumn evenings lengthen into long winter nights, many a youth begins to wonder how he can spend his time so as to realize the most lasting satisfaction and the greatest enjoyment. Some may be tempted to associate with the young people of the world in their sports and merrymaking. But the consciousness of an evening thus wasted, or perhaps worse than wasted, brings a feeling of remorse to the soul. Such a course is fittingly described in the following paragraph: —

"The continual craving for pleasureable amusements reveals the deep longings of the soul. But those who drink at this fountain of worldly pleasure, will find their soul thirst still unsatisfied. They are deceived; they mistake mirth for happiness; and when the excitement ceases, many sink down into the depths of despondency and despair. O what madness, what folly, to forsake the 'Fountain of living waters' for the 'broken cisterns' of worldly pleasure!"

There are other youth who, not choosing to attend the world's places of amusement, fill their minds with the same exciting, sensational themes in the form of cheap, trashy reading; but the effects are as unsatisfying.

"The young are in great danger. Great evil results from their light reading. Much time is lost which should be spent in useful employment. Some would even deprive themselves of sleep to finish some ridiculous love story. The world is flooded with novels of every description. Some are not of so dangerous a character as others, . . . but all are pernicious in their influence."

Something must be done to save our young people from these influences which are leading so many astray. Where they are prepared for it, great good has resulted from the organization of missionary societies. This, perhaps, is the ideal for young people's meetings, but there are places where these meetings do not satisfy the restless activity of the young. They want something more informal and entertaining. For such we would suggest the organization of a reading society, as follows: —

First, secure the co-operation of the young people and their parents. They should understand the plan and be anxious to co-operate in making it a success. This co-operation may be secured by personal private talks united with prayer and study at a time when they are in a frame of mind least liable to object to the plan or to taking part in it. Recognizing the continual craving for pleasurable amusements and the influence of these upon the minds and characters of our youth, instruction has been given touching this point, a part of which we quote: —

"I do not recommend pleasure parties where young people assemble together for mere amusement, to engage in cheap, nonsensical talk, and where loud, boisterous laughter is to be heard. I do not recommend this kind of gathering, where there is a letting down of dignity, and the scene is one of weakness and folly. Many times young men for whom heavenly intelligences have been waiting in order to number them as missionaries for God, are drawn into the gatherings for amusement, and are carried away with Satan's fascinations." — "Special Testimonies on Education," pages 82, 83.

The following quotation from "Testimonies," Vol. VII, page 64, is speaking of how every one may obtain a knowledge of health principles and medical missionary work, but it reveals a principle which may be employed with profit as an introduction to, or in preparing the way for, a study of such missionary work by a study of something more interesting to unconverted youth: —

"Form a home reading circle, in which every member of the family shall lay aside the busy cares of the day, and unite in study. Fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, take up this work heartily, and see if the home church will not be greatly improved. Especially will the youth who have been accustomed to reading novels and cheap story-books receive benefit by joining in the evening family study. Young men and young women, read the literature that will give you true knowledge, and that will be a help to the entire family. Say firmly: 'I will not spend precious moments in reading that which will be of no profit to me, and which only unfits me to be of service to others.'"

Second, select some good book which will be found instructive and inspiring as well as entertaining. Assign a certain number of pages or chapters to be read at home each week. We believe the books used in the Home Improvement Courses, conducted for young people by the Central Union Conference, are excellent books for this purpose. Outline lessons and helpful suggestions are being printed in the Educational Messenger to guide in this study.

Third, the society should meet once each week or once in two weeks to discuss the reading lesson. The exercise in these meetings may differ according to the wishes of those conducting the work. There should be questions upon the lesson, quotations from other authors and the Bible upon the thoughts suggested by the lesson, with occasional recitations, songs, description of countries and places mentioned, and accounts of other missionary efforts in these countries, which may be found in the Review, Youth's Instructor, or elsewhere. In this way the exercises may be made very interesting, and all have a part to act. By encouraging them to help one another in every way possible, they may become home missionaries, without much thought of missionary work as such.

The leader of the society should appoint different ones each week to conduct the study. By using discretion in this work the young may soon be trained to bear responsibility in the home and in the church, and to do it in a creditable manner. If attention is given to every one, thus causing all to feel that they are a "part of the concern," you will have but little trouble in holding attention.

This recommendation is not made to those churches having their young people well organized into active missionary societies. It is intended to reach a class who are not converted nor interested in missionary meetings. Any one desiring further information or suggestions should address Prof. M. E. Kern, or the writer, at College View, Neb.

CYRUS SIMMONS

"But even unto this day, when Moses is read, the veil is upon their heart." 2 Cor. 3:15.

This is the arraignment that Paul brought against the Jews for not being able to see Christ in the writings of Moses. There is a popular error to the effect that the Old Testament has been done away. The ones who hold to this are unable to see Christ in the Old Testament. "The veil is upon their heart." Jesus tells us to "search the Scriptures; for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." John 5:39. Evidently the Saviour had reference to the Old

The Best We Have

CHRIST wants the best. He in the far-off ages
Once claimed the firstling of the flock, the finest of the wheat;
And still he asks his own with gentlest pleading
To lay their hopes and talents at his feet.
He'll not forget the feeblest service, humblest love,
He only asks that of our store we give him
The best we have.

Christ gives the best. He takes the hearts we offer,
And fills them with his glorious beauty, joy, and peace,
And in his service we are growing stronger.
The calls to grand achievement still increase.
The richest gifts for us on earth, or in the heaven above,
Are hid in Christ. In Jesus we receive
The best we have.

And is our best too much? O friends, let us remember
How once our Lord poured out his soul for us,
And in the prime of his mysterious manhood
Gave up his precious life upon the cross!
The Lord of lords, by whom the worlds were made,
Through bitter grief and tears gave us
The best we have.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon—No. 16

173-178 The Spirit of Sacrifice

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE beginnings of Solomon's apostasy may be traced to many seemingly slight deviations from right principles. Associations with idolatrous women was by no means the only cause of his downfall. Among the primary causes that led Solomon into extravagance and tyrannical oppression, was his course in developing and cherishing a spirit of covetousness.

In the days of ancient Israel, when at the foot of Sinai Moses told the people of the divine command, "Let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them," the response of the Israelites was accompanied by appropriate gifts. "They came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing," and brought offerings. For the building of the sanctuary, great and expensive preparations were necessary; a large amount of the most precious and costly material was required; yet the Lord accepted only freewill offerings. "Of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering," was the divine command repeated by Moses to the congregation. Devotion to God and a spirit of sacrifice were the first requisites in preparing a dwelling-place for the Most High.

A similar call to self-sacrifice was made when David turned over to Solomon the responsibility of erecting the temple. Of the assembled multitude that had brought their liberal gifts, David asked, "Who then is willing to consecrate his service this day unto the Lord?" This call should ever have been kept in mind by those who had to do with the construction of the temple.

Chosen men were specially endowed by God with skill and wisdom for the construction of the wilderness-tabernacle. "Moses said unto the children of Israel, See, the Lord hath called by name Bezaleel . . . of the tribe of Judah; and he hath filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship. . . . And he hath put in his heart that he may teach, both he, and Aholiab . . . of the tribe of Dan. Them hath he filled with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer . . . and of the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of those that devise cunning work." "Then wrought Bezaleel, . . . and every wise-hearted man, in whom the Lord put wisdom and understanding." Heavenly intelligences co-operated with the workmen whom God himself chose.

The descendants of these men inherited to a large degree the skill conferred upon their forefathers. In the tribes of Judah and of Dan there were men who were regarded as especially "cunning" in the finer arts. For a time these men remained humble and unselfish; but gradually, almost imperceptibly, they lost their hold upon God and his truth. They began to ask for higher wages because of their superior skill. In some instances their request was granted, but more often those asking higher wages found employment in the surrounding nations. In place of the noble spirit of self-sacrifice that had filled the hearts of their illustrious ancestors, they cherished a spirit of covetousness, of grasping for more and more. They served heathen kings with their God-given skill, and dishonored their Maker.

It was to these apostates that Solomon looked for a master workman to superintend the construction of the temple on Mount Moriah. Minute specifications, in writing, regarding every portion of the sacred structure, had been entrusted to the king, and he should have looked to God in faith for consecrated helpers, to whom would have been granted special skill for doing with exactness the work required. But Solomon lost sight of this opportunity to exercise faith in God. He sent to the king of Tyre for "a man cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and crimson, and blue, and that can skill to grave with cunning men . . . in Judah and in Jerusalem."

The Phenician king responded by sending Huram, "a cunning man, endued with understanding, . . . the son of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his father was a man of Tyre." This master workman, Huram, was a descendant, on his mother's side, of Aholiab, to whom, hundreds of years before, God had given special wisdom for the construction of the tabernacle. Thus at the head of Solomon's company of workmen there was placed an unsanctified man, who demanded large wages because of his unusual skill.

Huram's efforts were not prompted by a desire to render his highest service to God. He served the god of this world — Mammon. The very fibers of his being had been inwrought with principles of selfishness, which were revealed in his grasping for the highest wages. And gradually these wrong principles came to be cherished by his associates. As they labored with him day after day, and yielded to the inclination to compare his wages with their own, they began to lose sight of the holy character of their work, and to dwell upon the difference between their wages and his. Gradually they lost their spirit of self-denial, and fostered a spirit of covetousness. The result was a demand for higher wages, which was granted them.

The baleful influences set in operation by the employment of this man of a grasping spirit, permeated all branches of the Lord's service, and extended throughout Solomon's kingdom. The high wages demanded and received gave many an opportunity to indulge in luxury and extravagance. In the far-reaching effects of these influences, may be traced one of the principal causes of the terrible apostasy of him who once was the wisest of mortals. The king was not alone in his apostasy. Extravagance and corruption were to be seen on every hand. The poor were oppressed by the rich; the spirit of self-sacrifice in God's service was well nigh lost.

Herein lies a most important lesson for God's people to-day,— a lesson that many are slow to learn. [The spirit of covetousness, of seeking for the highest position and the highest wage, is rife in the world. The old-time spirit of self-denial and self-sacrifice is too seldom met with. But this is the only spirit that can actuate a true follower of Jesus. Our divine Master has given us an example of how we are to work. And to those whom he bade, "Follow me, and I will make you fishers of men," he offered no stated sum as a reward for their services. They were to share with him his self-denial and sacrifice. (1)

Those who claim to be followers of the Master Worker, and who engage in his service as colaborers with God, are to bring into their work the exactitude and skill, the tact and wisdom, that the God of perfection required in the building of the earthly tabernacle. And now, as in that time and as in the days of

(1) Christ's earthly ministry, devotion to God and a spirit of sacrifice should be regarded as the first requisites of acceptable service. God designs that not one thread of selfishness shall be woven into his work.

Great care should be taken in regard to the spirit pervading the Lord's institutions. These institutions were founded in self-sacrifice, and have been built up by the self-denying gifts of God's people and the unselfish labor of his servants. Everything connected with institutional service should bear the signature of heaven. A sense of the sacredness of God's institutions should be encouraged and cultivated. The workers are to humble their hearts before the Lord, acknowledging his sovereignty. All are to live in accordance with principles of self-denial. As the true, self-sacrificing laborer, with his spiritual lamp trimmed and burning, strives unselfishly to advance the interests of the institution in which he is working, he will have a precious experience, and will be able to say, "The Lord indeed is in this place." He will feel that he is highly privileged in being permitted to give to the Lord's institution his ability, his service, and his unwearying vigilance.

In the early days of the third angel's message those who established our institutions, and those who labored in them. were actuated by high motives of unselfishness. For their arduous labors they received no more than a mere pittance — barely enough for a meager support. But their hearts were baptized with the ministry of love. The reward of whole-souled liberality was apparent in their close fellowship with the Spirit of the Master Worker. They practised the closest economy, in order that as many other laborers as possible might be planting the standard of truth in new places.

But in time a change came. The spirit of sacrifice was not so manifest. In some of our institutions the wages of a few workers was increased beyond reason. Those who received these wages claimed that they deserved a greater sum than others, because of their superior talents. But who gave them their talents, their ability? With the increase of wages came a steady increase of covetousness, which is idolatry, and a steady decline of spirituality. Gross evils crept in, and God was dishonored. The minds of many who witnessed this grasping after higher and still higher wages, were leavened with doubt and unbelief. Strange principles, like evil leaven, permeated nearly the entire body of believers. Many ceased to deny self, and not a few withheld their tithes and offerings.

God in his providence called for a reform in his sacred work, which should begin at the heart, and work outwardly. Some who blindly continued to place a high estimate upon their services, were removed. Others received the message given to them, turned to God with full purpose of heart, and learned to abhor their covetous spirit. So far as possible, they endeavored to set a right example before the people by voluntarily reducing their wages. They realized that nothing less than complete transformation in mind and heart would save them from being swept off their feet by some masterly temptation.

The work of God in all its wide extent is one, and the same principles should control, the same spirit be revealed, in all its branches. It must bear the stamp of missionary work. Every department of the cause is related to all parts of the gospel field, and the spirit that controls one department will be felt throughout the entire field. If a portion of the workers receive large wages, there are others, in different branches of the work, who will call for higher wages, and the spirit of self-sacrifice will gradually be lost sight of. Other institutions and conferences will catch the same spirit, and the Lord's favor will be removed from them; for he can never sanction selfishness. Thus our aggressive work would come to an end. Only by constant sacrifice can it be carried forward.

God will test the faith of every soul. Christ has purchased us at an infinite sacrifice. Although he was rich, yet for our sake he became poor, that we through his poverty might come into possession of eternal riches. All that we possess of ability and intellect has been lent us in trust by the Lord, to use for him. It is our privilege to be partakers with Christ in his sacrifice.

A Protest Against Modern Theology

[A book has been written by Dr. Robert A. Hume with the title "Missions from the Modern View." In the December issue of The Missionary Review of the World the editor-in-chief, Dr. Arthur T. Pierson, considers some positions taken in this book. While so much is being published which either openly denies the fundamental truths of Christianity or at best compromises with the "new theology," it is refreshing to read such a straightforward statement of essential truth. We quote a portion of Dr. Pierson's article, as follows.— Ed.]

Dr. Hume, as the title of his book suggests, looks at missions from the "modern view," reflecting twentieth century notions of religion, as qualified by man's conclusions as to anthropology and ethnology, psychology, sociology, and especially evolution. Five men of the last century, none of them Christian believers, molded current thought, not only in the scientific, but in the religious realm, more than, perhaps, any other Englishmen since Lord Bacon and Bishop Butler. These were Mill, Spencer, Darwin, Huxley, and Tyndall. Evolution exercises its potent charm even over Christian philosophy and theology; "heredity" and "environment," "natural selection," "survival of the fittest," and "development," have come to be applied as solutions, even to such problems as the Bible and Christ.

Of course, the prosecution of missions and all cognate matters are strongly affected by this "modern view," and Dr. Hume presents the matter in its most attractive form, so moderately and reasonably as not to repel, while starting not a few doubts and questions which deserve careful answer. Some positions taken by this writer may be considered as fairly representative of this "modern view," and as illustrative both of its plausibility and possible peril.

1. First of all, the "modern view" gives pre-eminence to Christ's example rather than his vicarious death for sinners. It shifts the practical center from the "cross" to the "pattern," and from faith in his sacrificial work to following in his steps. This is a serious mistake, easily made, for it confuses the position of a sinner, before repentance and faith, with the position of a believer, after acceptance of salvation. It is Peter who gives us the familiar phrase, "leaving us an example, that ye should follow in his steps," yet the same inspired writer, more explicitly than any other in the New Testament, puts the fact that "Christ suffered in our behalf," in its true order, before the furnishing of an example; and what is meant by such vicarious suffering he more minutely defines — "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed." 1 Peter 2:21, 24, 25.

The author of this book fascinates the reader with the popular conception of God's universal fatherhood and man's universal brotherhood, representing the divine Father as yearning over his erring human children, leading and drawing all to himself, however unconsciously on their part; and man, as helping his brother man to find and know the common Father. All religions are construed as more or less successful human attempts to reach the ideal; Christianity is conceded to be the best of all religions, but, as other faiths have learned and have yet much to learn from Christianity, Christianity, in turn, is represented as having no little "to gain from contact with the East."

Christianity, in its unique feature of atonement as the basis of a redeemed sonship, certainly is not prominent in this book, though it would appear that Dr. Hume personally holds that the "one central element in the process by which Christ helps men, making sinful men into new creatures, is his suffering and death," and gives reasons why he does not "try to explain" to the Hindu mind this central element. He considers that the philosophy of this fact, on which even Christians differ, is not a part of the essence of Christianity, and that there may be a saving experience of vital relations to Christ without any such explanation.

How consistent Peter was with his own teaching will be seen in his addresses on the day of Pentecost and in the house of Cornelius, in both which the one grand fact emphasized was the crucifixion and resurrection of the Lord

The Glorious Coming

O WEARY laborers in the field,
  Hope on and sing, nor heave a sigh;
The happy day is drawing near,
  "The glorious coming draweth nigh!"

Work on and spread the precious news,
  Proclaim it wide to low and high;
Be swift the Master's call to heed,
  "The glorious coming draweth nigh!"

Gird on thy armor for the strife,
  Go forth and on thy God rely;
Turn not, nor falter, but trust on,
  "The glorious coming draweth nigh!"

Be strong, but true, go far and wide,
  Till all shall Jesus magnify;
Be holy, spotless, like thy Lord,
  "The glorious coming draweth nigh!"

Then hasten to the harvest-fields,
  The days are passing swiftly by;
The "little while" will soon be gone,
  "The glorious coming draweth nigh!"

Lessons From the Life of Solomon—No. 17

"Give Unto the Lord the Glory Due Unto His Name"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"HE that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord. For not he that commendeth himself is approved, but whom the Lord commendeth."

From the day when Solomon was entrusted with the work of building the temple, to the time of its completion, his avowed purpose was to build "a house for the name of the Lord God of Israel." This purpose was fully recognized before assembled Israel during the dedication of the temple. In his prayer he acknowledged that Jehovah had said, "My name shall be there."

One of the most touching portions of Solomon's dedicatory prayer is his plea for the strangers that would come "out of a far country for thy name's sake; for they shall hear of thy great name, and of thy strong hand, and of thy stretched-out arm." In behalf of every stranger that would "come and pray toward this house," Solomon pleaded with the Lord: "Hear thou in heaven thy dwelling-place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for: that all people of the earth may know thy name, to fear thee, as do thy people Israel; and that they may know that this house, which I have builded, is called by thy name."

At the close of the services, Solomon exhorted Israel to be faithful and true to God, in order that "all the people of the earth may know that the Lord is God, and that there is none else."

The temple of Jehovah was a marvel of richness and glory, unequaled by any work of human art. A greater than Solomon was the designer of this building; the wisdom and glory of God stood there revealed. Those who were unacquainted with the source of Solomon's wisdom naturally admired and praised the human agent; but the king disclaimed any honor for the conception and the erection of so magnificent a structure.

The queen of Sheba, at the close of her visit to Jerusalem, was constrained by what she had seen and learned, not to extol Solomon, but to exclaim: "Blessed be the Lord thy God, which delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel: because the Lord loved Israel forever, therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and justice." This is the impression that God designed should be made upon all peoples. And when "all the earth sought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, which God had put in his heart," the king continued for a time reverently to direct them to the Creator of the heavens and the earth, the Ruler of the universe, the All-Wise. The name of Jehovah was honored, and his holy temple was regarded with reverence.

Had Solomon remained humble, had he continued to turn the attention of men from himself to the One who had endowed him with wisdom and riches and honor, what a history might have been his! But the unerring pen of inspiration, while it records his virtues, also bears faithful witness to his downfall. Raised to a pinnacle of greatness, and surrounded with the gifts of fortune, Solomon became dizzy, lost his balance, and fell. Constantly extolled by men of the world for his unsurpassed wisdom, he at length was unable to withstand the flattery. The gift of heaven, the wisdom which was entrusted to him by God, and which should ever have been used to glorify the Giver, filled Solomon with pride. He forgot that man, in humility, must reveal constant reverence for God.

Like the tabernacle, the temple had been built in accordance with specifications divinely given. And it was through the Lord's blessing that the people were enabled to give and prepare the necessary material. All the temple services were divinely instituted. And yet the honor was diverted from God, and given to Solomon. He finally allowed men to speak of him as the one most worthy of praise for the matchless splendor of the building that had been planned and erected for the honor of "the name of the Lord God of Israel."

Thus it was that the temple of Jehovah came to be known throughout the nations as "Solomon's temple." The human agent had taken to himself the glory that belonged to "the One higher than the highest." Even to this day the temple of which Solomon had declared to the Lord, "This house which I have builded is called by thy name," is oftenest spoken of, not as the temple of Jehovah, but as "Solomon's temple."

The course followed by Daniel, to whom God gave "knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom," is in striking contrast with the course followed by Solomon during the latter years of his reign. [In Daniel's life, the desire to glorify God was the most powerful of all motives. He realized that when standing in the presence of men of influence, a failure to acknowledge God as (1) the source of his wisdom would have made him an unfaithful steward. And his constant recognition of the God of heaven before kings, princes, and statesmen, detracted not one iota from his influence. King Nebuchadnezzar, before whom Daniel so often honored the name of God, was finally thoroughly converted, and learned to "praise and extol and honor the King of heaven."] And to the close of his career Daniel honored God.

In connection with every line of God's work in the earth to-day, the Name that is above every other name is to be honored. The gospel ministry, the publishing work, the medical missionary work, the educational work,— all are of heavenly origin. Not one of these lines of service has been originated or perfected by any human being. God has given the wisdom that has made possible the rapid development of every department of his cause. Let no man take unto himself the glory that belongs to God alone. Let no line of work, no institution, bear a name that would divert honor from God to any man or any set of men. Let us remember that the beautiful temple which was erected for the honor of "the name of the Lord God of Israel," came to be known, through the apostasy of the builder, as "Solomon's temple."

Said the great apostle Paul: "Let a man so account of us, as of the ministers of Christ, and stewards of the mysteries of God. Moreover it is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." Let every worker understand that as he strives to advance the glory of God in our world, whether he stands before Christians or infidels, peasants or princes, he is to make God first, and last, and best in everything. Man can not show greater weakness than by allowing men to ascribe to him the honor for gifts that are heaven-bestowed. God must stand the highest. The worldly wisdom of the greatest men is foolishness with him. The true Christian will exalt the name of the Lord. No ambitious motive will chill his love for God; steadily, perseveringly will he cause honor to redound to his Heavenly Father.

"It is required in stewards, that a man be found faithful." When we are faithful in making God known, our impulses will be under divine supervision, and we shall make steady growth, spiritually and intellectually. It is Christ's power alone that can give success to the human agent. God has given every man talents, that his name may be exalted; not that man may be lauded and praised, honored and glorified, while the Giver is forgotten. Let those around you see that you give God the glory. Let self be crucified; let God appear.

Jesus, our divine Master, ever exalted the name of his Heavenly Father. He taught his disciples to pray, "Our Father which art in heaven, Hallowed be thy name." And they were not to forget to acknowledge, "Thine is the glory." So careful was the great Healer to direct attention from himself to the source of his power, that the wondering multitude, "when they saw the dumb to speak, the maimed to be whole, the lame to walk, and the blind to see," glorified not Him; "they glorified the God of Israel." In his wonderful prayer offered just before the crucifixion, he declared: "I have glorified thee on the earth." "Glorify thy Son," he pleaded, "that thy Son also may glorify thee." "O righteous Father, the world hath not known thee: but I have known thee, and these have known that thou hast sent me. And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it: that the love wherewith thou hast loved me may be in them, and I in them."

(1)
Commentary, Vol. 4 p. 1170

"Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches: but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercise loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: for in these things I delight, saith the Lord."

"I will praise the name of God, . . . and will magnify him with thanksgiving." "Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power." "I will praise thee, O Lord my God, with all my heart: and I will glorify thy name forevermore." "O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together."

Finding the Bread

J. N. LOUGHBOROUGH

"CAST thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." Eccl. 11:1.

The bread in this text is understood to mean the truth found in the Word of the Lord, which is to be scattered abroad, like the sowing of seed upon the running waters, which bear it away from sight, and apparently to the sower it is lost. But the seed lodges on the banks, takes root, and, springing up, bears fruit which may be found "after many days."

Reading, in the REVIEW of December 14, Brother Tanner's report of the work in Hayti, brought the Scripture already quoted forcibly to mind. Brother Tanner says that some one in Southampton, England, about twenty-four years ago, sent papers and tracts to the agent of the steamship company at Cape Haitien. It may be of interest to our readers to know by whom and how the papers happened to be sent to that port.

In the summer of 1879, when we held our first tent-meeting in England, on Shirley Road, Southampton, Brother J. N. Andrews came from America, and was with us at Southampton three months. He was accompanied by his niece, Edith Andrews, and Annie Oyer, who were going to Basel, Switzerland, to help in the mission work. Brother Andrews was in a delicate condition of health, and was therefore unable to assist in the meetings, and, in fact, was not able to complete the journey to Basel, so they tarried with us. The house we then occupied being quite small, we engaged lodgings for Edith and Sister Oyer at the home of Mr. Nippard, a near neighbor, with whom Elder Ings had formed a slight acquaintance in his tract distribution work.

Mr. Nippard's family formed a very friendly acquaintance with these lodgers, and as Brother Ings studied the Bible with him, he readily drank in the truth, and expressed a desire to do all he could to help it along, although he did not then see his way clear to keep the Sabbath. He was what is called a "ship keeper" for the Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Company, which sailed its steamers from Southampton to some eighty seaports in the East and West Indies, Africa, and Central America.

When the steamer was made fast at the docks, the officers and crew of the vessel were released until the next sailing of the vessel, the discharging of the cargo and reloading of the vessel being placed in the hands of stevedores. The ship keeper had charge of the vessel, and lodged upon it nights. As Mr. Nippard became interested in the truth, he did much to aid Brother Ings in his ship-mission work.

Finally he said to Brother Ings, "I can help you send your papers and tracts to other ports if you will furnish them. I can do it on this wise: parcels are placed in my hands to give to the purser of the vessel, directed to the steamer agents at ports where the ship calls. You furnish a little roll of your papers and tracts directed to the agent at any of the ports you may select. Place in the roll a letter asking him to hand the papers and tracts to any who might be interested in them. In this manner you may do much to spread abroad the reading-matter."

We heeded Mr. Nippard's advice. At that time we were receiving one thousand copies weekly of The Signs of the Times from America. We would make a roll of a few Signs, tracts, and papers in other languages. On our papyrograph I prepared a carefully worded letter. In this the agent was not only asked to circulate the enclosed documents, but to reply, informing us whether more reading-matter was desired, and in what language.

It was among the packages thus sent that the roll of papers, tracts, and a letter went to Cape Haitien. From this venture on Hayti we received no reply, and Brother Tanner's letter, "after many days," is the first knowledge I have had concerning the result of that seed sowing.

In a similar manner we sent parcels to a large portion of the eighty seaports. We had responses from several of them, as Durban, Natal, East London, and Maritzburg, South Africa, and Georgetown, Demerara, British Guiana. From some of these places we had replies expressing a desire for more reading-matter, and to these we sent parcels several times.

In 1896, when I was in Southampton, England, I called upon Mr. Nippard. His companion was with the silent dead. He was settled on a pension from the steamship company. He was in feeble health, but was kindly cared for by his daughter. With tears he would speak of his association with Elder Ings. The reading that he most of all prized was the weekly visits of the Present Truth from London. In the year 1900, when I again visited Southampton, I inquired for Mr. Nippard. The dear old gentleman had passed away, probably living up to what light he had. I have given this brief rehearsal to encourage others to cast bread upon the waters.

The Canon of the Bible

THE word "canon," as at present employed, signifies a collection of religious writings of an authoritative or normative character, such as "always, everywhere, and by all" have been considered divinely inspired, hence sacred and binding. The term was first used in this sense by Amphilochius, 395 A. D.

The So-Called "Larger" and "Smaller" Canons

Between the New Testament of Catholics and that of Protestants there is absolutely no difference as to canon, or size, the number and order of the books corresponding exactly. But the case of the Old Testament is different; Catholics holding to what is sometimes spoken of as the "larger" canon of the Jews in Alexandria, while Protestants hold to the "smaller" canon of the Jews in Palestine. The actual difference between them is a matter of seven complete books and portions of two others; namely, Tobit, Judith, Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, Baruch, First and Second Maccabees, together with certain additions to Esther and to Daniel. All these Protestants usually reject as apocryphal, because there is no evidence whatever that they were ever considered canonical by the Jews.

The Canon of the Jews in Alexandria

The chief witness to the existence of a possible "larger" canon in Alexandria is the Greek version of the Old Testament known as the Septuagint (which was translated probably between 250 and 150 B. C., and frequently designated "LXX"). But it is exceedingly doubtful whether the Jews in Egypt ever had a larger canon than their brethren in Palestine. There is absolutely no explicit witness to this effect. The LXX version is inconclusive. The mere existence of manuscripts of this ancient version which contain the canonical and deutero-canonical or apocryphal books, intermingled, is a long way from substantial evidence. For not only are all the extant manuscripts of Christian origin, but they differ widely as to their contents among themselves, no one of

Are You Ready?

Say, brother, are you ready for the coming of the King?
Do the signs of his appearing to your soul sweet comfort bring?
Are you of the few and faithful who believe the time is near?
Does your heart beat high with gladness, or sink with dread and fear?

Are you halting and discouraged? are you tempted now to say,
As the evil servant said, "My Lord his coming doth delay"?
Because the Bridegroom tarries, do you think you've been deceived?
Is the "blessed hope" less precious than when you first believed?

My brother, are you watching through the dark and sinful night
For the glory of the morning? Do your eyes behold the light?
Or are they dull with slumber, or dazzled by the glare
Of the world and its attractions, which will prove a fatal snare?

Then arouse, and gird your armor! for the Master bravely toil;
See that your lamp is burning, and well filled with heavenly oil;
Be not like the foolish virgins, who awoke to woe and shame,
With their vessels dry and empty when the midnight summons came.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon — No. 18

Outward Display

MRS. E. G. WHITE

One sad feature of Solomon's experience was his supposition that massive buildings and magnificent furnishings give character to the work of God. He endeavored to pattern after, and to compete with, the world. He lost sight of the foundation principle underlying the influence that is ever to be exerted by the people of God,— obedience to every precept of Holy Writ. The real power of God's people lies not in numbers, nor in the wealth and worldly prosperity that may be displayed, but in steadfast adherence to his Word. The truth, obeyed, is made the power of God unto salvation.

Solomon became ambitious of excelling all other nations in power and grandeur. It was his desire to attain greater political power, that led him to form alliances with idolatrous nations, and to seal these alliances by marriages with heathen princesses. In conformity with the customs of surrounding nations, he maintained a luxurious court, in many respects surpassing in splendor the courts of the rulers of other kingdoms. Luxury was followed by wanton extravagance. Vast riches were squandered. This led to the levying of a grievous tax upon the poor people.

"I made me great works," Solomon declares. Among these were "Millo, and the wall of Jerusalem, and Hazor, and Megiddo, and Gezer." "And he built Tadmor in the wilderness, and all the store cities, which he built in Hamath. Also he built Beth-horon the upper, and Beth-horon the nether, fenced cities, with walls, gates, and bars; and Baalath, and all the store cities that Solomon had, and all the chariot cities, and the cities of the horsemen, and all that Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, and in Lebanon, and throughout all the land of his dominion."

So engrossed was Solomon with thoughts of vanity, that perfection and beauty of character were overlooked in his attempt to surpass other nations in outward display. He sold his honor and his integrity in seeking to glorify himself before the world, and he finally became a despot. The power and the riches obtained at a sacrifice of right principles, proved to him a terrible curse.

How striking is the contrast between Solomon's ambitious desire to exalt himself, and the life that the Son of God lived upon this earth! The Saviour of mankind was born of humble parentage in a sin-cursed, wicked world. He was brought up in obscurity at Nazareth, a small town of Galilee. He began his work in poverty and without worldly rank. He sought not the admiration or the applause of the world. He dwelt among the lowly. To all appearance he was merely a humble man, with few friends. Thus God introduced the gospel in a way altogether different from the way in which many deem it wise to proclaim the same gospel in this age. At the very beginning of the gospel dispensation he taught his church to rely, not on worldly rank and splendor, but on the power of faith and obedience.

"The kingdom of God cometh not with outward show." The gospel of the grace of God, with its spirit of self-abnegation, can never be in harmony with the spirit of the world. The two principles are antagonistic. "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God: for they are foolishness unto him: neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

It is not the largeness or the grandeur of an edifice that impresses hearts, but the principles of righteousness, of justice and equity, practised within. Our institutions will give character to the work of God just according to the consecrated devotion of the workers,— by revealing the power of the grace of Christ to transform the life. Never are we to rely upon worldly recognition and rank. Never are we, in the establishment of institutions, to try to compete with worldly institutions in size or splendor. We shall gain the victory, not by erecting massive buildings in rivalry with our enemies, but by cherishing a Christlike spirit of meekness and lowliness. We are to be distinguished from the world because God has placed his seal upon us, because he manifests in us his own character of love. Our Redeemer covers us with his righteousness.

As Solomon continued to conform to the customs of the world, his pride greatly increased. And the worldly prosperity that attended his apostasy, was regarded by him as a token of God's favor. So fully had he yielded himself to evil influences, that his spiritual discernment was well-nigh destroyed. He could not see the terrible losses that were sustained by the nation spiritually because he brought into the kingdom an abundance of the gold of Ophir and the silver of Tarshish.

To-day there exists the same danger of mistaking prosperity for the favor of heaven. The prosperity that often for a time attends those who turn from a plain "Thus saith the Lord" to follow a way of their own choosing, is not an assurance of divine approval. Men many interpret it thus, but it is no sign that God's prospering hand is with them. Let all learn a lesson from Solomon's experience. Notwithstanding his violation of a plain "Thus saith the Lord," riches and worldly honor poured in upon him, and seemingly he was greatly blessed. This is in harmony with Job's declaration that the wicked spend their days in prosperity. And the psalmist testifies: —

"As for me, my feet were almost gone;
My steps had well-nigh slipped.
For I was envious at the arrogant,
When I saw the prosperity of the wicked. . . .
Pride is as a chain about their neck;
Violence covereth them as a garment.
Their eyes stand out with fatness:
They have more than heart could wish.
They scoff, and in wickedness utter oppression:
They speak loftily."

Like Solomon, those who esteem their own wisdom above the wisdom of the Lord will surely feel the sad result of their course. For a time they may seemingly be prospered, but their work will not abide. The Lord will let them pass through bitter experiences, in order that they may have an opportunity to learn that real prosperity comes not by outward display, but only by conformity to his will and purpose.

God's way is always the right and prudent way. It always brings honor to his name. Man's only security against rash, ambitious movements is to keep the heart in harmony with Christ Jesus. Man's wisdom is untrustworthy. Man is fickle, filled with self-esteem, pride, and selfishness. Let the workers in God's service trust wholly in the Lord. Then they will reveal that they are willing to be led, not by human wisdom, which is as useless to lean upon as is a broken reed, but by the wisdom of the Lord, who has said, "If any of you lack wisdom, let him ask of God, that giveth to all men liberally, and upbraideth not; and it shall be given him. But let him ask in faith, nothing wavering."

Fellow Christian, keep your religion pure and untainted. Worldly interests may tempt you to yield your principles. but "what shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Worldly greatness is no equivalent for integrity, honesty, a pure heart, and a noble, unwavering purpose to do right. Even Solomon, in all his glory, was not arrayed like him who possesses the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit, untouched by the tinsel and show of the world.

A Condition and a Result

C. MC REYNOLDS

THAT we are living in the time for the "latter rain" no true Seventh-day Adventist will question. The Lord has told us to pray for rain in the time of the latter rain. The former rain was given when a certain condition was reached by the Lord's followers — when they were all "of one accord." Those who succeeded in coming into accord with Christ, "the head of the church" and "the head of every man," found themselves in perfect accord with one another, because they were of one accord with him. It was an individual work.

We are desiring the refreshing, the latter rain. The condition upon which the reception of it depends is clearly set forth by the spirit of prophecy. It is that same condition of perfect accord with Christ. "Those who receive the seal of the living God and are protected in the time of trouble, must reflect the image of Jesus fully."

"I saw that many were neglecting the preparation so needful, and were looking to the time of 'refreshing' and the 'latter rain' to fit them to stand in the day of the Lord. . . . They had neglected the needful preparation, therefore they could not receive the refreshing that all must have to fit them to live in the sight of a holy God. . . . I saw that none could share the 'refreshing' unless they obtain the victory over every besetment, over pride, selfishness, love of the world, and over every wrong word and action." — "Early Writings," pages 60, 61. How clearly is here stated the only condition upon which we can ever receive the "refreshing." This is in the article entitled, "Preparation for the End."

It is further stated in this same connection: "Those who refuse to be hewed by the prophets, and fail to purify their souls in obeying the whole truth, and who are willing to believe that their condition is far better than it really is, will come up to the time of the falling of the plagues, and then see that they needed to be hewed and squared for the building." The obtaining of the "victory over every besetment, over pride, selfishness, love of the world, and over every wrong word and action," is the condition; the result is the "refreshing," "the latter rain."

In the article on "The Shaking" (and we are in it now) a view was given of those who obtained this victory — who reached the condition required for receiving the "refreshing." Their voices were heard, "sweet and harmonious," "full of mercy, compassion, and elevating, holy joy. . . . They were clothed with an armor [the "whole armor of God." Eph. 6:13], from their head to their feet. They moved in exact order, like a company of soldiers. . . . They had obtained the victory, and it called forth from them the deepest gratitude, and holy, sacred joy. . . . Evil angels still pressed around them, but could have no power over them." "Sin shall not have dominion over you." Rom. 6:14. "Wherefore he is able also to save them evermore who come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." Heb. 7:25, margin. "We shall be saved by his life." Rom. 5:10. "Unto him that is able to keep you from falling." Jude 24.

These receive the "refreshing" because they have obtained the victory. What is the result? "I heard those clothed with the armor speak forth the truth with great power. It had effect. . . . I asked what had made this great change. An angel answered, 'It is the latter rain, the refreshing from the presence of the Lord, the loud cry of the third angel.'" — "Early Writings," pages 131-133.

In this same connection is this statement: "The careless and indifferent, who did not join with those who prized victory and salvation enough to perseveringly plead and agonize for it, did not obtain it, and they were left behind in darkness." "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out, when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord; and he shall send Jesus Christ."

The repentance is an individual work. The faith must be exercised individually for entire victory. "This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." The victory is individual victory. The refreshing is an individual refreshing received by every one who is brought into accord with Christ our Captain. "Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me . . . unto the uttermost part of the earth." Acts 1:8. As long as we walk in blindness and darkness, and through a lack of repentance and faith fail to obtain the victory over every besetment, over every wrong word and action, we can not receive the refreshing — the latter rain — the source of power. Hence, the power to become witnesses for him is not received, and thus the coming of Jesus is delayed. Let us do the repenting, the confessing, the restoring, the believing. Let him do the living in us, let him get the victory for us, pour upon us the refreshing, fill our hearts with gratitude and gladness, our voices with music sweet and harmonious, clothe us with the garment of praise instead of the spirit of heaviness, bestow upon us the power of the Holy Spirit which will make us witnesses of the power of the living Christ within, and hasten the coming of our Redeemer and glorious King. "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

A Significant Sign of the Age

JOHN S. WIGHTMAN

THE apostle James, in the fifth chapter of his remarkable letter to "the twelve tribes" scattered abroad, gives a remarkably clear and concise description of the time we call "to-day" and of a condition of affairs everywhere prevalent, when the rich, impelled by insatiable greed, shall gather treasures into such vast "heaps" as shall be universally regarded as phenomenal. It is obvious to every candid observer that we are living in an age in which the affairs of men are as never before controlled by an oligarchy of wealth to that extent that the situation is appalling. The apostle declares that it is "for the last days" that individuals are vainly heaping treasures together, just before "the coming of the Lord," in the solemn time when "the Judge standeth at the door."

James Bryce, in the American Commonwealth, observes that up to 1840 there were no large fortunes in the United States. But writing in the later eighties, he says: "Now there is some poverty, many large fortunes, and a greater number of gigantic fortunes than in any other country in the world." In New York City alone there are more than two thousand millionaires. The Rockefeller family, of which John D. is the head, possesses wealth of an estimated vale of a thousand millions. The human mind quite fails to grasp so huge a sum. If the wealth of this one family could be converted into gold coin, and carried upon the backs of porters into Canada or Mexico, it would require twenty-three thousand strong men, for it would weigh one thousand seven hundred and fifty tons. To carry a single day's interest on this sum would require seven strong men, for it would weigh a thousand pounds in gold. Ten men — J. D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, Marshall Field, W. K. Vanderbilt, John Jacob Astor, J. P. Morgan, Russell Sage, J. J. Hill, Wm. H. Clark, and Wm. Rockefeller — control an estimated aggregate of two thousand million dollars. Note the figures, $2,000,000,000.

Byron W. Holt, editor of Moody's Magazine, and the statistical expert of R. G. Dun & Co., offer us a conservative estimate of the total value of the wealth of America's five thousand multimillionaires, as follows: —

No. of fortunes	Amount
10 aggregating	$2,000,000,000
490 aggregating	3,000,000,000
4,500 aggregating	10,000,000,000
5,000 aggregating	15,000,000,000

So five thousand men in this country actually own, as declared by Mr. Cleveland Moffett "(without counting what they

A Pilgrim and Stranger

Heb. 11:13

A PILGRIM and stranger here sadly I roam,
But I look for a kingdom which is soon to come;
A home in that kingdom, a mansion secure,
If I but prove faithful, hold fast, and endure.

A pilgrim and stranger! Though foes should arise
To hinder my way to my home in the skies,
I'll meet them with courage, and ne'er be afraid;
While Jesus is with me, I'll ne'er be dismayed.

A pilgrim and stranger! I'll seek but to know
The will of my God, and thus daily show,
By example and precept, by word and by deed,
I'm striving his counsel and precepts to heed.

The shaking is coming; O who'll be prepared
To stand in the battle in the day of the Lord?
None but the true pilgrim, the stranger to earth,
Shall enter those mansions of heavenly worth.

A pilgrim and stranger, O then let me be,
And patiently suffer, my dear Lord, with thee!
Then with Abram and Isaac, those pilgrims of old,
I shall reign with the Lamb in the city of gold.

In the Thoroughfares of Travel

MRS. E. G. WHITE

UPON the Israelites God bestowed great privileges, blessing them richly from his abundant goodness. He looked for them to honor him by revealing the principles of his kingdom. In the midst of a fallen, wicked people — a world in which violence and crime, greed, oppression, and the most corrupt practises were indulged without restraint — the Israelites were to represent the character of God. In the holiness of their lives, in their mercy and loving-kindness and compassion, they were to show that "the law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul."

Through the Jewish nation it was God's purpose to impart rich blessings to all peoples. Through Israel the way was to be prepared for the diffusion of his light to the whole world. The nations of the world, through following corrupt practises, had lost the knowledge of God. Yet in his mercy God did not blot them out of existence. He purposed to give them opportunity for becoming acquainted with him through his church. He designed that the principles revealed through his people should be the means of restoring the moral image of God in man.

The Lord's vineyard, his own chosen possession, was planted in the land of Canaan. And as the tower in the vineyard, God placed in the midst of the land his holy temple. In the temple his glory dwelt in the holy Shekinah above the mercy-seat.

In the days of Solomon, the kingdom of Israel extended from Hamath on the northward, to the border of Egypt on the southward, and from the Mediterranean Sea to the Euphrates River. Through this territory ran many natural highways of the world's commerce. Caravans were constantly passing to and from distant lands. Thus there was given Solomon and his people a most wonderful opportunity to reveal the character of the true God so clearly that men of all nations would be taught to reverence and obey the King of kings. To all the world the gospel invitation was to be given. Through the teaching of the sacrificial service, Christ was to be uplifted before the nations, and all who would look unto him should live. All who, like Rahab the Canaanite and Ruth the Moabitess, turned from idolatry to the worship of the true God, were to unite themselves with his chosen people. As the numbers of Israel increased, they were to enlarge their borders, until their kingdom should embrace the world.

But Solomon lost sight of God's high and holy purpose. He failed of improving the magnificent opportunities for enlightening the representatives of all nations who were continually passing through his territory and tarrying for rest at the principal cities. A selfish use was made of the strategic points along the well-traveled highways. Solomon sought to strengthen his position by building fortified cities at the gateways of commerce. He rebuilt Gezer, near Joppa, and lying along the road between Egypt and Syria; Beth-horon, to the westward of Jerusalem, commanding the passes of the highway leading from the heart of Judea to Gezer and the seacoast; Megiddo, situated on the caravan road from Damascus to Egypt, and from Jerusalem to the northward; and "Tadmor in the wilderness," along the route of caravans from the East. All these cities were strongly fortified.

The commercial advantages of an outlet at the head of the Red Sea were developed by the construction of "a navy of ships in Ezion-geber, . . . on the shore of the Red Sea, in the land of Edom." Trained sailors from Tyre, "with the servants of Solomon," manned these vessels on voyages "to Ophir, and fetched from thence gold," and "great plenty of almug trees, and precious stones."

The missionary spirit that God had implanted in the heart of Solomon and in the hearts of many true Israelites, was rapidly supplanted by a spirit of commercialism. The precious opportunities afforded by contact with many nations, were misused for personal aggrandizement. The revenues of the king and of many of his subjects were greatly increased, but at what a cost! Because of the cupidity and the short-sightedness of those to whom had been entrusted the oracles of God, the countless multitudes that thronged the thoroughfares of travel were allowed to remain in ignorance of the true God.

Our Opportunity

To the church of to-day God has given the care of his vineyard. The workers of to-day are called to do the work that Israel failed of doing. The salvation of God must be made known to all the people living on the face of the earth. God's glory is to be revealed, his word established, and Christ's kingdom set up to give deliverance to the world. His followers are now to arise and shine.

Those who, in response to the call of the hour, have entered the service of the Master Workman, may well study his methods of labor. During his earthly ministry, our Saviour took advantage of the opportunities to be found along the great thoroughfares of travel. It was at Capernaum that Jesus dwelt in the intervals of his journeys to and fro, and it came to be known as "his own city." This city was well adapted to be the center of the Saviour's work. Being on the highway from Damascus to Jerusalem and Egypt, and to the Mediterranean Sea, it was a great thoroughfare of travel. People from many lands passed through the city, or tarried for rest on their journeyings to and fro. Here Jesus could meet all nations and all ranks, the rich and great as well as the poor and lowly, and his lessons would be carried to other countries and into many households. Investigation of the prophecies would thus be excited, attention would be directed to the Saviour, and his mission would be brought before the world.

[In these days of travel, the opportunities for coming in contact with men and women of all classes and of many nationalities, are much greater than in the days of Israel. The thoroughfares of travel have multiplied a thousandfold. God has wonderfully prepared the way. (1) The agency of the printing-press, with its manifold facilities, is at our command. Bibles and publications in many languages setting forth the truth for this time, are at our hand, and can be swiftly carried to every part of the world.

We are to give the last warning of God to men, and what should be our earnestness in studying the Bible, and our zeal in spreading the light! Let every soul who has received the divine illumination, seek to impart it.] Let the workers go from house to house, opening the Bible to the people, circulating the publications, telling others of the light that has blessed their own souls. Let literature be distributed judiciously on the trains, in the street, on the great ships that ply the seas, and through the mails.

(1)
Evangelism p. 702-703

Christians who are living in the great centers of commerce and travel have special opportunities. The believers in these cities can work for God in the neighborhood of their homes. They are to labor quietly and in humility, carrying with them wherever they go the atmosphere of heaven. If they keep self out of sight, pointing always to Christ, their influence will be felt.

The truth is not to be hidden in the corners of the earth. It must be made known; it must shine in our large cities. Like Christ, the messengers of the Most High to-day must take their position in the great thoroughfares of travel, where they can meet people from all parts of the world. Like him, they are to give the true light; they are to sow the gospel seed; they are to rescue truth from its companionship with error, and present it in its original simplicity and clearness, so that men may comprehend it. The third angel's message is a world-wide message. It is to be given to all cities, to all villages; it is to be proclaimed in the highways and the by-ways.

(1) [In the world-renowned health resorts and centers of tourist-traffic, crowded with many thousands of seekers after health and pleasure, there should be stationed ministers and canvassers capable of arresting the attention of the multitudes. Let these workers watch their chance to present the message for this time, and hold meetings as they have opportunity. Let them be quick to seize opportunities to speak to the people. Accompanied by the power of the Holy Spirit, let them meet the people with the message borne by John the Baptist: "Repent ye: for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The word of God is to be presented with clearness and power, that those who have ears to hear, may hear the truth. Thus the gospel of present truth will be placed in the way of those who know it not, and will be accepted by not a few, and carried by them to their own homes in all parts of the earth.]

A great work is to be done, and those who know the truth should now make mighty intercession for help. The love of Christ must fill their own hearts. The Spirit of Christ must be poured out upon them, and they must be making ready to stand in the judgment. As they consecrate themselves to God, a convincing power will attend their efforts to present the truth to others. We must no longer sleep on Satan's enchanted ground, but call into requisition all our resources, avail ourselves of every facility with which Providence has furnished us. The last warning is to be proclaimed "before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings;" and the promise is given, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

"Arise, shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For, behold, the darkness shall cover the earth, and gross darkness the people: but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising. . . . I will make thee an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations. . . . Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land forever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified."

The Canon of the Bible

(Concluded)

The Canon of the Later Reformed and Anglican Churches

Repeated endeavors were made during the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries to have the apocryphal books removed from the Scriptures. The Synod of Dort (1618-19), Gomarus, Deodatus, and others sought to accomplish it, but failed. The only success achieved was in getting them separated from the truly canonical writings and grouped by themselves. The Puritan Westminster Confession went further, and declared that they were of a purely secular character. The various new versions of the Bible, then being made, likewise placed them by themselves, apart from the acknowledged books, as a kind of appendix. The first English version to omit them altogether was an edition of King James's Version, published in 1629; but the custom of printing them by themselves, between the Old and New Testaments, continued till 1825, when the Edinburgh Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society protested that the society should no longer translate these apocryphal writings, and send them to the heathen. The society finally yielded, and decided to exclude them (May 3, 1827). Since then, Protestants in Great Britain and America have given up the practise of publishing the Apocrypha as a part of Sacred Scripture. In Europe, also, since 1850, the tendency has been in the same direction.

The Church of England, however, and the American Episcopal Church do not wholly exclude them; certain "readings" being selected from Wisdom, Ecclesiasticus, and Baruch, and read on week-days between October 27 and November 17. Yet, when the English Revised Version appeared in 1885, though it was the special product of the Church of England, there was not so much as a reference to the apocryphal writings. The Irish Church, likewise, removes them; and the American Revised Version ignores them altogether.

The Apocryphal Writings Self-Condemned

From the discussion up to this point it becomes obvious how far apart Catholics and Protestants stand in reference to the size of the Bible. The natural question which arises in the reader's mind must be, What is the intrinsic value of these deutero-canonical writings which have stood so long upon the border land, and which have become at last fully canonized by Rome, but are usually rejected by Protestants? What are their merits? What their defects? Why accepted by some and rejected by others? There is no doubt but that they contain many good moral teachings; that they supplement the history of Judaism and bring it down to the Christian era; and that many of the doctrines in the canonical Scriptures are to be found also in them. On the other hand, they contain practically nothing of value which could possibly assist in furthering the interests of Christianity. By their contents they are self-condemned. Here are a few only of the blemishes that might be enumerated: —

1. The Book of Tobit teaches the meritorious value of almsgiving; and is infused with quackery and puerility.
2. The Book of Judith approves of deception and falsehood, and treats a breach of the ceremonial law as a deadly sin.
3. The Book of Wisdom teaches the doctrines of purgatory, the pre-existence of the soul, and that the body is a clog upon the soul.
4. The Book of Ecclesiasticus forbids giving bread to the wicked, and advises to torture a malicious slave.
5. The Book of Baruch teaches that God hears the prayers of the dead, and predicts that the captivity shall last seven generations instead of "seventy years."
6. The First Book of Maccabees practically identifies Simon with the Messiah, and sees in the Maccabean rule the fulfilment of the hope of Israel.
7. The Second Book of Maccabees relates how the sacred fire upon the temple altar was miracuously preserved till Nehemiah's time; and how Jeremiah, when Jerusalem was destroyed, hid the tabernacle, the ark, and the altar of incense. It also describes an apparition which prevented Heliodorus from invading the sanctity of the temple, and teaches the doctrine of sacrifices for the dead. It even justifies, tacitly, the sin of suicide, and in conclusion lays no claim to inspiration.

In view of such blemishes, are we not forced to allow that these books are not only not equal in authority to the true canon, but that they are positively contradictory to the spirit of the Bible's teaching?

Concluding Remarks on the Canon

In conclusion, it has been shown that our Lord and his apostles used only the strictly canonical books of the Greek Version and none of the Apocrypha; that the canon of the Jews in Palestine corresponded exactly to the strict Protestant canon of to-day; that the early church taught theoretically the same view, but used a larger canon; that as an argument, however, usage proves too much; that Jerome advocated most strenuously a strict canon; that Augustine, while he wavered, distinguished, nevertheless, between the inspiration of the proto- and that of the deutero-canonical books; that down to the six-

TOUCH thou my tongue, so strangely still,
When all thy works show forth thy praise;
May I some grateful song upraise —
Sweet echoes from thy holy hill.

Touch thou my feet, that they may keep
Thy forward step; teach me to run,
With sacred haste till tasks are done,
And wearied, I sink down to sleep.

Touch thou my hands, that they no more

Lessons From the Life of Solomon—No. 20

"Be Ye Separate"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

PLACED at the head of a nation that had been set as a light to the surrounding nations, Solomon might have brought great glory to the Lord of the universe by a life of obedience. He might have encouraged God's people to shun the evils that were practised in the surrounding nations. He might have used his God-given wisdom and power of influence in organizing and directing a great missionary movement for the enlightenment of those who were ignorant of God and of his truth. Thus multitudes might have been won to an allegiance to the King of kings.

Satan well knew the results that would attend obedience, and during the earlier years of Solomon's reign,— years glorious because of the wisdom, the beneficence, and the uprightness of the king,— he sought to bring in influences that would insidiously undermine Solomon's loyalty to principle, and cause him to separate from God. And that the enemy was successful in this effort, we know from the record: "Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, and took Pharaoh's daughter, and brought her into the city of David."

In forming an alliance with a heathen nation, and sealing the compact by marriage with an idolatrous princess, Solomon rashly disregarded the wise provisions that God had made for maintaining the purity of his people. The hope that his Egyptian wife might be converted, was but a feeble excuse for the sin. In violation of a direct command to remain separate from other nations, the king united his strength with the arm of flesh.

For a time, God in his compassionate mercy overruled this terrible mistake. Solomon's wife was converted; and the king, by a wise course, might have done much to check the evil forces that his imprudence had set in operation. But Solomon began to lose sight of the Source of his power and glory. Inclination gained the ascendency over reason. As his self-confidence increased, he sought to carry out the Lord's purpose in his own way. He reasoned that political and commercial alliances with the surrounding nations would bring them to a knowledge of the true God; and so he entered into unholy alliance with nation after nation. Often these alliances were sealed by marriage with heathen princesses. The commands of Jehovah were set aside for the customs of the surrounding nations.

During the years of Solomon's apostasy, the spiritual decline of Israel was rapid. How could it have been otherwise, when their king united with satanic agencies? Through these agencies the enemy worked to confuse the minds of the people in regard to true and false worship. They became an easy prey. It came to be a common practise to intermarry with the heathen. The Israelites rapidly lost their abhorrence of idolatry. Heathen customs were introduced. Idolatrous mothers brought their children up to observe heathen rites. The Hebrew faith was fast becoming a mixture of confused ideas. Commerce with other nations brought the Israelites into intimate contact with those who had no love for God, and their own love for him was greatly lessened. Their keen sense of the high and holy character of God was deadened. Refusing to follow in the path of obedience, they transferred their allegiance to Satan. The enemy rejoiced in his success in effacing the divine image from the minds of the people that God had chosen as his representatives. Through intermarriage with idolaters and constant association with them, Satan brought about that for which he had long been working,— a national apostasy.

Unscriptural Alliances

The Lord desires his servants to preserve their holy and peculiar character. "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers," is his command; "for what fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness? and what communion hath light with darkness? and what concord hath Christ with Belial? or what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? And what agreement hath the temple of God with idols? for ye are the temple of the living God; as God hath said, I will dwell in them, and walk in them; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty."

Never was there a time in earth's history when this warning was more appropriate than at the present time. Many professed Christians think, like Solomon, that they may unite with the ungodly, because their influence over those who are in the wrong will be beneficial; but too often they themselves, entrapped and overcome, yield their sacred faith, sacrifice principle, and separate themselves from God. One false step leads to another, till at last they place themselves where they can not hope to break the chains that bind them.

Great care should be taken by Christian youth in the formation of friendships and in the choice of companions. Take heed, lest what you now think to be pure gold turns out to be base metal. Worldly associations tend to place obstructions in the way of your service to God, and many souls are ruined by unhappy unions, either business or matrimonial, with those who can never elevate or ennoble. Never should God's people venture upon forbidden ground. Marriage between believers and unbelievers is forbidden by God. But too often the unconverted heart follows its own desires, and marriages unsanctioned by God are formed. Because of this, many men and women are without hope and without God in the world. Their noble aspirations are dead; by a chain of circumstances they are held in Satan's net. Those who are ruled by passion and impulse will have a bitter harvest to reap in this life, and their course may result in the loss of their souls.

Institutional Work

Those who are placed in charge of the Lord's institutions are in need of much of the strength and grace and keeping power of God, that they shall not walk contrary to the sacred principles of the truth. Many, many are very dull of comprehension in regard to their obligation to preserve the truth in its purity, uncontaminated by one vestige of error. Their danger is in holding the truth in light esteem, thus leaving upon minds the impression that it is of little consequence what we believe, if, by carrying out plans of human devising, we can exalt ourselves before the world as holding a superior position, as occupying the highest seat. (1)

God calls for men whose hearts are as true as steel, and who will stand steadfast in integrity, undaunted by circumstances. He calls for men who will remain separate from the enemies of the truth. He calls for men who will not dare to resort to the arm of flesh by entering into partnership with worldlings in order to secure means for advancing his work — even for the building of institutions. Solomon, by his alliances with unbelievers, secured an abundance of gold and silver, but his prosperity proved his ruin. Men to-day are no wiser than he, and they are as prone to yield to the influences that caused his downfall. For thousands of years Satan has been gaining an experience in learning how to deceive; and to those who live in this age he comes with almost overwhelming power. Our only safety is found in obedience to God's Word, which has been given us as a sure guide and counselor. God's people to-day are to keep themselves distinct and separate from the world, its spirit, and its influences.

(1) Counsels on Health, p. 290

"Come out from among them, and be ye separate." Shall we hear the voice of God and obey, or shall we make half-way work of the matter, and try to serve God and Mammon? There is earnest work before each one of us. Right (1) thoughts, pure and holy purposes, do not come to us naturally. We shall have to strive for them. In all our institutions, our publishing houses and colleges and sanitariums, pure and holy principles must take root. If our institutions are what God designs they should be, those connected with them will not pattern after worldly institutions. They will stand as peculiar, governed and controlled by the Bible standard. They will not come into harmony with the principles of the world in order to gain patronage. No motives will have sufficient force to move them from the straight line of duty. Those who are under the control of the Spirit of God will not seek their own pleasure or amusement. If Christ presides in the hearts of the members of his church, they will answer to the call, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate." "Be not partakers of her sins."

God would have us learn the solemn lesson that we are working out our own destiny. The characters we form in this life decide whether or not we are fitted to live through the eternal ages. No man can with safety attempt to serve both God and Mammon. God is fully able to keep us in the world, but not of the world. His love is not uncertain and fluctuating. Ever he watches over his children with a care that is measureless and everlasting. But he requires us to give him our undivided allegiance. "No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye can not serve God and Mammon."

Solomon was endowed with wonderful wisdom; but the world drew him away from God. We need to guard our souls with all diligence, lest the cares and the attractions of the world absorb the time that should be given to eternal things. God warned Solomon of his danger, and to-day he warns us not to imperil our souls by affinity with the world. "Come out from among them," he pleads, "and be ye separate, . . . and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord God Almighty."

God and His Dwelling-Place

S. N. HASKELL

The Bible teaches that God has a personality. Man was made in his image. Gen. 1:26, 27; Heb. 1:3. "Image" means form or shape. Gen. 5:3; Rom. 1:23. Because of sin no man can see God's face, and live. Ex. 33:20. But his face will be seen. Rev. 22:4. The pure in heart will see him. Matt. 5:8.

If God and Christ have a personality, they must have a local dwelling-place. This place is called by Christ, "My Father's house." John 14:2; Ps. 122:1, 9. The term "sanctuary," or "tabernacle," is applied to it more frequently than any other; and this sanctuary, or tabernacle, is said to be in heaven. Ps. 102:19; 103:19; Heb. 8:1-3. It is also called God's habitation. Luke 16:9; Isa. 63:15. From this habitation God's voice will be heard. Jer. 25:30. The term "habitation" occurs thirty-one times in the Bible, and in every instance it implies a dwelling-place in some locality. It is also called the temple, in which is God's throne. Ps. 11:4. From this place will one day be heard the words, "It is done." Rev. 16:17. It is also said to be God's dwelling-place where he hears prayer, and whence cometh forgiveness of sins. 2 Chron. 6:21, 23, 25, 27, 30, 33, 35, 39; 30:27; Acts 7:38. It is called a palace. 1 Chron. 29:1; Luke 11:21. Here are seven different terms, which in their use in the Bible aggregate many hundreds of times; and every one of them implies a particular dwelling-place in some locality for some one who has a personality. And yet for some reason there are many who claim Christ as their Saviour, and yet deny that God has any real place in which to dwell. They claim that he has no personality, and if he has, it is of no particular account to us. And yet our salvation depends upon the intercession of Christ at the right hand of the Father in that dwelling-place.

Another consideration is, each of these terms is associated with the sanctuary built on earth, first by Moses, second, by Solomon, third by Zerubbabel, and then with the one in heaven. The one on earth is said to be a figure of the one in heaven. Heb. 9:9. The study of the work of Christ in this sanctuary, this home, this Father's house, this God's habitation, this heavenly palace, reveals to us the real plan of salvation. It is expressly stated that it is where we learn the "ways of God" (Ps. 77:13); of "his goings" (Ps. 68:24); the location of his throne. Ps. 80:1. In the sanctuary we learn of the end of the wicked. Ps. 73:15-17. We also learn that from the sanctuary cometh all our help. Ps. 20:2. The strength and beauty of God is displayed in the sanctuary. Ps. 96:6. Christ turned his eyes toward this sanctuary in heaven when he prayed. John 17:1. The ark of God's testimony is in his heavenly temple. Rev. 11:19. The study of the sanctuary reveals a part of the science of salvation that will be sung throughout eternity. Yet notwithstanding all these facts there are many, yea, very many, who take no interest in this dwelling-place of God, nor in the science of salvation as it is revealed in the sanctuary above.

True Missionaries and a True Missionary Spirit

D. H. KRESS, M. D.

The true missionary is always a home missionary, never a foreign missionary. The one who has a true home missionary spirit will be a home missionary wherever he may be. He will be satisfied to do his best, and will feel perfectly contented, in the place where he is; for he feels he is just where he should be. When the Lord calls him to go elsewhere, he will go, not because he is dissatisfied and desires to flee from his present place or surroundings, but because he recognizes the call of God, and desires to be where God wants him to be. He will be just as true and just as contented in the next place, for he will be a home missionary there. The spirit that he revealed in his previous place, will be revealed in his new place.

Such missionaries are needed everywhere. They are especially needed in foreign fields. From my own observations I have found that the desire to be a foreign missionary is frequently due to feelings of discontent, or arises from sentimental feelings, or a desire to travel. Such workers carry this spirit with them wherever they go, and will surely become dissatisfied with their new work and surroundings.

Home missionaries with a foreign missionary spirit usually manifest a foreign missionary spirit no matter where they are. They are of little value to the work. If they are sent into a foreign field, they soon return to the country whence they came, or go to some other country, with the same unsatisfied feelings. These feelings of restlessness reveal the absence of the true missionary spirit.

I have come to look with suspicion upon young people who have a burden for foreign mission work, and who at the same time give little evidence of being home missionaries. The only ones who are really fitted to be sent forth into foreign fields are those who do their home work so faithfully, and appreciate it so highly, that they would sooner be there than on any other spot on the face of the earth. Their brethren look upon them as indispensable and true home missionaries. The Lord, observing such a spirit of faithfulness, can trust them to stand alone in a foreign field, and will, when faithful workers are needed elsewhere, impress their brethren, and say to them as he did to his servants anciently, "Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." Upon such workers hands may safely be laid, wit-

Walking by Faith

By faith in Christ I walk with God,
With heaven, my journey's end, in view;
Supported by his staff and rod,
My road is safe, and pleasant, too.

I travel through a desert wide,
Where many round me blindly stray;
But he vouchsafes to be my Guide,
And will not let me miss my way.

Though snares and dangers throng my path,
And earth and hell my course withstand,
I triumph over all by faith,
Guarded by his almighty hand.

The wilderness affords no food;
But God for my support prepares,
Provides me every needful good,
And frees my soul from wants and cares.

With him sweet converse I maintain;
Great as he is, I dare be free;
I tell him all my grief and pain;
And he reveals his love to me.

Some cordial from his Word he brings,
Whene'er my feeble spirit faints;
At once my soul revives and sings,
And yields no more to sad complaints.

I pity all that worldlings talk
Of pleasures, that will quickly end;
Be this my choice, O Lord, to walk
With thee, my Guide, my Guard, my Friend!

"Godly Sorrow Worketh Repentance"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Twice during Solomon's reign the Lord had appeared to him with words of approval and of counsel. Soon after he ascended the throne, the king passed through a remarkable experience at Gibeon, where the Lord, after promising him wisdom, riches, and honor, admonished him to remain obedient and humble. "Walk in my ways," he counseled the youthful king, "to keep my statutes and my commandments." And after the dedication of the temple, "the Lord appeared to Solomon the second time," and exhorted him to remain true to his sacred trust. "Walk before me," the Lord pleaded, "as David thy father walked, in integrity of heart, and in uprighteousness, to do according to all that I have commanded thee." As the reward of obedience, the Lord declared, "I will establish the throne of thy kingdom upon Israel forever, as I promised to David thy father, saying, There shall not fail thee a man upon the throne of Israel."

Plain are these admonitions, wonderful are these promises of prosperity on condition of obedience; and yet of him who in circumstances, in character, and in life, seemed favored above all others, it is recorded that "his heart was turned from the Lord God of Israel, which had appeared unto him twice, and had commanded him concerning this thing, that he should not go after other gods: but he kept not that which the Lord commanded."

Solomon's apostasy was so complete, his heart became so hardened in transgression, that his case seemed well-nigh hopeless. But the Lord in his infinite mercy forsook him not. By terrible judgments and by words of stern rebuke he sought to arouse the king to a realization of the sinfulness of sin. God's protecting care was removed, and adversaries were permitted to harass and weaken him. "The Lord stirred up an adversary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite." "And God stirred him up another adversary, Rezon, . . . captain over a band," who "abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria. And Jeroboam, . . . Solomon's servant," "a mighty man of valor," "even he lifted up his hand against the king."

God spoke to Solomon not only by means of these judgments, but also through a prophet, who delivered the startling message: "Forasmuch as this is done of thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, I will surely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it to thy servant. Notwithstanding in thy days I will not do it for David thy father's sake: but I will rend it out of the hand of thy son."

When Solomon heard this terrible denunciation, he awoke as from a dream. His folly began to dawn upon him in its true light. By his own bitter experience, he had learned the emptiness of a life that seeks in earthly things its highest good. He had erected altars to heathen gods, only to learn how vain is their promise of rest to the soul. And now, in his later years, Solomon returned to drink at the fountain of life. For him at last the discipline of suffering accomplished its work.

The Book of Ecclesiastes

The history of the king's wasted years, with their lessons of warning, he by the Spirit of inspiration recorded for after generations. And thus, although the seed of his sowing was reaped by his people in harvests of evil, the life-work of Solomon was not wholly lost. Chastened, broken in spirit, trusting not in his own power, but in the power of Him that is "higher than the highest," he acknowledged that "the heart of the sons of men is full of evil, and madness is in their heart." Whenever left to their own devices, he confessed, "they have sought out many inventions." And "because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil."

Through his own experience Solomon learned that, "though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him: but it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days, which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God."

In meekness and lowliness Solomon "taught the people knowledge; yea, he gave good heed, and sought out, and set in order many proverbs." He "sought to find out acceptable words: and that which was written was upright, even words of truth." "The words of the wise," he declared, "are as goads, and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one shepherd. And further, by these, my son, be admonished."

"Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter: Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man. For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil."

A Touching Appeal

The true penitent does not put his past sins from his remembrance. He does not, as soon as he has obtained peace, grow unconcerned in regard to the mistakes he has made. He thinks of how many have been led into evil by his wrong course, and he tries in every possible way to help those whom he has led into false paths. The clearer the light that he has entered into by returning to the Lord, the stronger his desire to set the feet of others in the right way. He does not gloss over his wayward course, making his wrong a light thing, but lifts the danger-signal, that others may take warning. He walks humbly and carefully, his eyes fixed on his Leader.

Solomon's later writings reveal that he realized the wickedness of his course, and sought to warn those who were in danger of going astray. With sorrow and shame he confessed that in the prime of manhood, when he should have found in God his comfort, his support, his life, he had lost sight of the rich experience of his youth and of the signal blessings bestowed at the time of the dedication of the temple. How sad the confession recorded in Ecclesiastes! For a time, he had turned from the light of heaven and the wisdom of God; he had confounded idolatry with religion.

After the king repented, and returned to his allegiance to God, he made a special appeal to those who were still in the earlier years of life. His yearning desire to save others from the bitter experience through which he had passed, is clearly revealed in this touching appeal: —

"Truly the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun. Yea, if a man live many years, let him rejoice in them all; but let him remember the days of darkness, for they shall be many. All that cometh is vanity. Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment. Therefore remove sorrow from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh: for youth and the prime of life are vanity" — they soon pass away.

"Remember also thy Creator in the days of thy youth,
Or ever the evil days come,
And the years draw nigh,
When thou shalt say, I have no
pleasure in them;

Or ever the sun,
And the light,
And the moon,
And the stars,
Be darkened,
And the clouds return after the rain:

In the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble,
And the strong men shall bow themselves,
And the grinders cease because they are few,
And those that look out of the windows be darkened,
And the doors shall be shut in the street:

When the sound of the grinding is low,
And one shall rise up at the voice of
a bird,
And all the daughters of music shall be brought low;

Yea, they shall be afraid of that which is high,
And terrors shall be in the way;

And the almond tree shall blossom,
And the grasshopper shall be a burden,
And the caper-berry shall burst:

Because man goeth to his long home,
And the mourners go about the streets:

Or ever the silver cord be loosed,
Or the golden bowl be broken,
Or the pitcher be broken at the fountain,
Or the wheel broken at the cistern:

And the dust return to the earth
As it was,
And the spirit return unto God
Who gave it."

The Hope of the Penitent

Christ, the gift of the Father to our world, is the hope and efficiency of the penitent. In him all hopes of eternal life center. He is our advocate in the heavenly courts. He is interceding in our behalf. Without his grace, no progress in spiritual grace can be made. The penitent can not take one step in sincerity, in truthfulness, in righteousness, without the help of the Lord Jesus. For this help let us most earnestly plead.

Through no power of his own could Solomon have broken from the snare of Satan. By no human means could he have been cleansed from the defilement of sin. Without divine help, he would have sunk lower and still lower. Only by coming to Jesus in humility and contrition, with heartfelt confession of sin; only by making a full surrender; only through the merits of Christ's righteousness, could he hope to be freed from the snare of the enemy, and be cleansed.

"Godly sorrow worketh repentance to salvation not to be repented of." True repentance can never be mistaken. It bears fruit that testifies to its own genuineness. Self is subdued; Christ is magnified.

The words and deeds of the truly penitent bear witness that theirs is a repentance that needs not to be repented of. They will offer earnest petitions for fresh grace, for new supplies of strength, for the efficiency and power of the Holy Spirit, promised to all who ask in faith. The truly penitent soul will reach high attainments of holiness, peace, and joy. But he will never forget that he owes it all to the Saviour. A sense of deep humiliation and contrition will fill his heart, and he will bow low before God.

The Origin and History of the Text of the American Standard Edition of the Protestant Bible

(Concluded)

King James's Version; or the Fifth Revision of the Protestant Bible (1611)

The Catholics published their New Testament in 1582. Among Protestants at that time, there was a growing rivalry between the Bishops' Version, which enjoyed the ecclesiastical sanction of Anglicans, and the Genevan, which was the Bible of the Puritans. The necessity of having one authorized Protestant translation became more and more apparent. King James favored the idea, and called an ecclesiastical conference of both parties. In due time, fifty-four (or more probably only forty-seven) representative men, who were learned in Hebrew and Greek, were appointed to undertake the task, and the enterprise was launched.

Fifteen rules were drawn up to govern them in their work. How they actually proceeded is not definitely known; but from Dr. Smith's preface to their version we may be sure that they carried out most thoroughly and systematically their instructions. They were divided into six companies, two meeting at Cambridge, two at Oxford, and two at Westminster. The work was apportioned among them. The time spent in the execution of the task was about two and three-fourths years. They are known to have consulted many sources. In their order of words, choice of vocabulary, striking phrases, and concise and literal renderings, they were sensibly influenced also by the Rhemish Testament. But their version differs from the Rhemish in seeking to fix an intelligible sense on the words rendered, and in leaving the literal renderings uncolored by any expository notes.

The faults of the King James's Version, though insignificant compared with those of other versions of the same period, are nevertheless not inconspicuous. (1) Its inequalities. In the Old Testament, Job, the Psalms, and some of the prophets are very defective; in the New Testament, the epistles, but especially Romans and Corinthians, are poorly done. (2) It contains faulty renderings and occasional interpolations due to the scanty materials at the revisers' command. The science of textual criticism was scarcely born in the seventeenth century. Only two of the great MSS. were known to them. (3) It fails to bring out the different shades of thought. The revisers' knowledge of the niceties of Greek and Hebrew philology was limited, and so they often failed to catch the full force of a root, an article, a tense, and certain particles in the originals. (4) It sometimes obscures important distinctions through translating two or more words in the original by one in the English. (5) On the other hand, it frequently creates distinctions for the sake of variation when faithfulness to the original required the same word. The principle of avoiding mechanical uniformity is a legitimate one, but it is easily abused.

The merits of King James's Version are especially noteworthy. (1) It is a revision, not an arbitrary translation disregardful of its English antecedents. On its title page it is described as "newly translated out of the original tongues, and with the former translations diligently compared and revised." It represents, therefore, a fresh stage in the process of correcting and polishing through which the Protestant Bible has passed. (2) Its general accuracy. Almost every change which the revisers introduced was an improvement in the direction of absolute correctness. Bishop Westcott says: "When every deduction is made for inconsistency of practise and inadequacy of method, the conclusion yet remains absolutely indisputable that their work issued in a version of the Bible better — because more faithful to the original — than any which had been given in English before." (3) It was the product of the ripest scholarship, not of one party, but of many parties. (4) Its matchless vocabulary and style, which are "equally admired by friends and opponents." The revisers appropriated happy expressions wherever they found them. Their version is, therefore, a kind of mosaic of the best results of previous revisions. Not less than ninety per cent of its words are Anglo-Saxon. It combines Saxon strength and Norman grace with Latin majesty. It belongs to the golden age of English literature. It is elevated, venerable, sacred. It reads like poetry. As F. W. Faber has said, "It lives on the ear like a music that can never be forgotten — like the sound of church bells."

But the original version was poorly edited, and consequently there arose variant editions. What is especially singular is the fact that though called the "Authorized Version," so far as history knows, it was never authorized: and, though the canons and constitution

The Transformed Life

One morning as I careless stood,
And from a window facing east,
Looked down upon the grass beneath,
A dazzling gem before me lay —
So clear, so bright, so beautiful,
That beams of rising sun were grasped,
Reflected back with rainbow hues,
And splendors, deepening, revealed.

I looked, surprised and overjoyed,
A prize so radiant to find
Within my easy reach, my own.
Entranced, its beauty held me there.
From every view new glories flashed;
And from the bower where it lay
Its rays now shone with brighter light,
Declaring value yet untold.

Then, as I watched and thought to take
That priceless gem within my hand,
It passed from sight, and left no more
Than drop of dew upon the grass,—
A drop of dew transformed by light
Which shone upon its surface pure;
Its glories were reflected rays.

As drop of dew by light transformed
To diamond of spotless form,
So, when in light of Christ we live,
Transformed are we by Life divine.
No longer self, but Christ is seen;
His life is ours, his light, his love;
We shine, but in his glory beams;
All that we are, we are in him.

The Power of Influence

MRS. E. G. WHITE

For hundreds of years after the death of Solomon, a strange and melancholy sight could be seen opposite Mount Moriah. Crowning the eminence of the Mount of Olives, and peering above the groves of myrtle and olive trees, were imposing piles of buildings, for the idolatrous worship of gigantic, unseemly images of wood and stone. Many a devout stranger, seeing these shrines for the first time, was led to inquire, "How came these buildings and idols on the opposite side of the Jehoshaphat ravine, thus impiously confronting the temple of God?" The truthful answer must be given: "The builder was Solomon. He whom God so wonderfully honored, failed to give God the glory, and finally was persuaded by his heathen wives to build these altars for idol worship."

Little did Solomon think when he built the unholy shrines on the hill before Jerusalem, that these evidences of his apostasy would remain from generation to generation, to testify against him. Notwithstanding his repentance, the evil that he did lived after him, witnessing to the terrible fall of the greatest and wisest of kings.

More than three centuries later, Josiah, the youthful reformer, in his religious zeal demolished these buildings and all the images of Ashtoreth and Chemosh and Moloch. Many of the broken fragments rolled down the channel of the Kedron, but great masses of ruins remained. Even as late as the days of Christ, the ruins on the "Mount of Offense," as the place was called by many of the true-hearted of Israel, might still be seen. Could Solomon, when rearing these idolatrous shrines, have looked into the future, how he would have started back in horror to think of the sad testimony they would bear to the Messiah!

By a life of loyalty and integrity, Solomon could have done much to preserve God's people from backsliding. His early piety and his great wisdom, the power and the prosperity that attended his reign, the respect and the honor shown the kingdom of Israel by the surrounding nations,— all these favorable conditions combined to increase greatly the influence wielded by the king. Had he remained sincere, earnest, and true, had no taint of apostasy marred his life, he might have exerted a most powerful influence for good on the lives of others. But he swerved from his allegiance to God; and the nation, of which he had been the pride, followed his leading. So powerful was his influence, that through his apostasy he became their seducer.

Solomon's repentance was sincere, but the harm that his example of evil-doing had done the people, could not well be remedied. In the anguish of bitter reflection on the evil influence of his sinful course, he was constrained to declare: "Wisdom is better than weapons of war: but one sinner destroyeth much good." "There is an evil which I have seen under the sun, as an error which proceedeth from the ruler: folly is set in great dignity." "Dead flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savor: so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honor."

During the king's apostasy, there were faithful men who remained true to their trust, maintaining their allegiance to purity and loyalty. Many, however, were led astray by his example, and the forces of evil that were set in operation as the result of the introduction of idolatry and worldly practises, could not easily be stayed by the penitent king after his return to God. His influence for good was broken. Many hesitated to place full confidence in his leadership.

How sad the thought that the far-reaching influence of Solomon's apostasy could never be fully counteracted! The king confessed his sins, and wrote out, for the benefit of after generations, a record of his folly and repentance; but he could never hope to destroy the baleful influence of his evil deeds. Emboldened by his apostasy, many continued to do evil, and evil only. And in the downward course of many of the rulers that followed him, may be traced the sad influence of the prostitution of his God-given powers.

Among the manifold lessons that we may learn from Solomon's life, none are more plainly taught than the power of influence for good or for ill. However contracted may be one's sphere, he exerts an influence. That our influence should be a savor of death unto death, is a fearful thought, yet this is possible. One soul misled — forfeiting eternal bliss — who can estimate the loss! And yet one rash act, one thoughtless word, on our part, may exert so deep an influence on the life of another that it will prove the ruin of his soul! One blemish on the character may turn many away from Christ.

God calls for strong, brave Christians, whose influence is always exerted for the right. His cause needs men and women whose every word and act draws those around them to Christ, binding them to him by the persuasive force of loving service. Men and women who commune with God, who, because they co-operate with the heavenly angels, are surrounded by a holy influence, are needed at this time.

It is only through the grace of God that we can make a right use of our influence. There is nothing in us of ourselves by which we can influence others for good. If we realize our helplessness, and our need of divine power, we shall not trust to ourselves. We know not what results a day, an hour, or a moment may determine, and never should we begin the day without committing our ways to our Heavenly Father. His angels are appointed to watch over us, and if we put ourselves under their guardianship, then in every time of danger they will be at our right hand. When unconsciously we are in danger of exerting a wrong influence, the angels will be by our side, prompting us to a better course, choosing words for us, and influencing our actions. Thus our influence may be a silent, unconscious, but mighty power in drawing others to Christ and the heavenly world. (1)

Prayer

WM. COVERT

The church and church people who do not earnestly seek the Lord in prayer will become cold and careless about Christianity and their own salvation. The Lord, through the writings of Paul, advised that prayer be made without ceasing. Indeed, all men everywhere are admonished to pray. The same need exists everywhere to-day that was seen by the apostle when he wrote as he did. Could all our people now be enabled to see their principal need, they would arouse to the necessity of prayer.

Churches should not fail to maintain regular prayer-meetings. Every effective church has essential interests under consideration, and these interests need to be earnestly considered before the throne of God. No church should think of executing important plans until the members have unitedly considered the things together with the Lord. It should always be understood that church organ-

Knowledge

ONCE I thought that healing came
From the angels' wings.
Now the bruised hands of men
Seem the kindest things.

Once I thought to pluck and eat
The fruit of paradise.
Now I break with these their bread
With unsaddened eyes.

Once I thought to find on earth
Love, perfect and complete.
Now I know it carries wounds
In its hands and feet.

Lessons From the Life of Solomon—No. 23

"Stedfast Unto the End"

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE life of Solomon is full of warning, not only to the youth, but to those of mature years and to the aged, those who are descending the hill of life and facing the western sun. We see and hear of unsteadiness in youth,— the young wavering between right and wrong, and the current of evil passions proving too strong for them. But we do not look for unsteadiness and unfaithfulness in those of mature years; we expect the character to be established, the principles to be firmly rooted. In many cases this is so, but there are exceptions, as with Solomon. "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." When Solomon should have been in character as a sturdy oak, he fell from his stedfastness under the power of temptation. When his strength should have been the firmest, he was found the weakest of men.

From such examples as this we should learn that watchfulness and prayer are the only safety for either young or old. A man is not one whit the safer because he occupies an exalted position, and has been given great privileges. Those who for many years have enjoyed a genuine Christian experience, are, nevertheless, still exposed to Satan's attacks, and are liable to fall into grievous sins. In the battle with inward corruptions and outward temptations, even the wise and powerful Solomon was vanquished. His failure reveals to us that, whatever a man's intellectual qualities may be, and however faithfully he may have served the Lord in past years, he can never with safety venture to trust in his own wisdom and integrity.

Whenever man accomplishes anything in spiritual or temporal lines, he should bear in mind that he does it only through the grace and co-operation of his Maker. When left to himself, man reveals his natural temperament; selfishness appears; human wisdom occupies the throne of the heart. But [those who make God their efficiency, realize their own weakness, and the Lord supplies them with his wisdom. As day by day they depend upon God, carrying out his will with humility and whole-heartedness and strictest integrity, they increase in knowledge and ability. By willing obedience they show reverence and honor to God, and are honored by him.]

From the beginning there has been opposition between the forces of good and evil. God declares, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."

Man vainly attempted to exalt himself by following his own way, in harmony with Satan's temptation, and in opposition to the will of God. He thus gained a knowledge of evil, but he gained it at the cost of his loyalty; and his disobedience opened the flood-gates of woe upon our world. Ever since, men have been trying to exalt themselves by the same means. When will they learn that the only way to true exaltation is the path of obedience? Men's plans may seem to them to be exceedingly wise, but there is safety for those only who walk in accordance with a "Thus saith the Lord."

The originator of evil, Satan comes with stealthy tread, presenting plausible theories to the people of God, telling them that if they do this or that, even though it may be questionable, they will gain great advantage, and the end will justify the means. He tries to persuade them that the eating of the forbidden fruit will be to them a source of great good. When men listen to him, the spiritual insight is dimmed, and the power of distinguishing between good and evil is lost.

Nothing has been so difficult for the people of God to learn as loyalty to the pure, elevated, unselfish principles of heaven. And as a result, sin and suffering make up a large part of their history. The words spoken to Daniel by the angel are positive: "Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand." Satan, as a strong man armed, is continually on the watch, seeking to bring in questionable methods, and thereby mar the work of God. He would be well pleased to eclipse the brightness of God's principles by the selfishness of the principles on which he works. If he possibly can, he will tarnish the pure gold of character. If he can place the false where the true should be, his object is gained.

Shall we give heed to the warning of Solomon's apostasy, and shun the first approach to those sins that overcame him who was called the wisest of men? In these days of peril, nothing but obedience will keep man from apostasy. God has bestowed on man great light and many blessings. But unless this light and these blessings are received, they are no security against disobedience and apostasy. When those whom God has exalted to positions of high trust turn from him to human wisdom, their light becomes darkness, and how great is that darkness! Their entrusted capabilities are a snare to them. They become an offense to God. There can be no mockery of God without the sure result.

Till the conflict is ended, there always will be a departing from God. Satan will so shape circumstances that unless we are kept by divine power, they will almost imperceptibly weaken the fortifications of the soul. We need to inquire at every step, "Is this the way of the Lord?" As long as life shall last, there is need of guarding the affections and the passions with a firm purpose. Not one moment can we be secure only as we are relying upon God, the life hid with Christ in God. [The safeguards of our purity must be watchfulness and prayer.] (2) We must do nothing to lower the standard of our religious principles.

Notwithstanding the warnings that God has given in his Word and through his messengers, many have closed their eyes to danger, and have gone on in their own way, infatuated, deluded by Satan, until they fall under his temptations. Then they abandon themselves to despair. This was the history of Solomon. But even for him there was help. He truly repented of his course of sin, and found hope. Let none venture into sin as he did, in the hope that they, too, may recover themselves. Sin can be indulged only at the peril of infinite loss.

All who enter the city of God, enter there through the strait gate,— through agonizing effort. But none who have fallen need give themselves up to despair. Aged men, once honored of God, may have defiled their souls, sacrificing virtue on the altar of lust; but there is still hope for them if they repent, forsake sin, and turn to God. He who has so graciously declared, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life," has also inspired the invitation, "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." God hates sin, but he loves the penitent, and declares, "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely."

"Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might, let not the rich man glory in his riches: but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercise loving-kindness, judgment, and righteousness, in the earth: for in these things I delight."

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord? or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands, and a pure heart; who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully." "Lord, who shall abide in thy tabernacle? who shall dwell in thy holy hill? He that walketh uprightly, and worketh righteousness, and speaketh the truth in his heart." "Blessed are the pure in heart: for they shall see God."

"My beloved brethren," the apostle Paul wrote, "be ye stedfast, unmovable." God desires us to "hold the beginning of our confidence stedfast unto the end." "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy, to the only wise God our Saviour, be glory and majesty, dominion and power, both now and ever."

Importance of Studying the Scriptures

S. N. HASKELL

The Bible is truthfully said to be the Book of books. There is nothing more calculated to strengthen the intellect than the study of the Scriptures. But how will the study of the Scriptures strengthen the intellect? It can not be done by hastily reading the Scriptures. One may read the whole Bible through, and yet fail to see its beauty or comprehend its deep, hidden meaning. Yet every person should read the Bible through, not once or twice, but do it continually. Then he will involuntarily begin to compare scripture with scripture. Strength comes by taxing the mind not only to retain, but to compare spiritual things with spiritual; as the blacksmith's arm is strengthened by constant use.

The apostle Peter's words are, "Grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." He again instructs us as to how we may grow. It is by "laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocricies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as newborn babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby: if so be ye have tasted that the Lord is gracious." There is no growing by the Spirit without the word. For Christ's words "are spirit, and they are life." We are begotten by the word of truth. If we are not doers of the word, but hearers only, then we deceive our own selves. We are like the man who beholds his natural face in the glass; for "he beholdeth himself, and goeth his way, and straightway forgetteth what manner of man he was." We are to be sanctified through the truth; the word of God is truth.

No other book is so potent to elevate the thoughts, to give vigor to the faculties, as the broad, ennobling truths of the Bible. If God's Word were studied as it should be, men would have a breadth of mind, a nobility of character, and a stability of purpose that is seldom seen in our day. The Bible has in it all the power and intelligence of God. But we can not derive this from the Word of God without taxing the mind, without meditating upon its contents as we read it. My friend, if you would become acquainted with the Saviour, study the Scriptures. Keep your Bible with you. As you have opportunity, read it; fix the texts in your memory.

The secret of the apostle Paul's strength was his personal application of the Scriptures to himself. When the prophet Ananias came to him, he quoted Isa. 49:6: "I will also give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation unto the end of the earth." In believing that the Spirit of God inspired these words and applying them to himself lay Paul's strength. He lived until he saw the fulfilment of Col. 1:23.

It is when we take the Scriptures and personally apply them to our own heart, meditate upon them, and act in harmony with them, that they unconsciously impart to us strength of intellect. It is then we will go forward in the strength of God; for it is God that is in the word, and circumstances bow in submission to the will of the soul. One day without food brings physical weakness. One day without taking some scripture to meditate upon brings barrenness of soul. We can not live spiritually, we can not grow in grace, without meditating upon the word until it becomes the magnet of the soul. It should be the first thought in the morning, the last thought at night. In our waking moments, some rich promise, or some Bible thought, will, like a magnet in the midst of steel shavings, draw us from evil.

"My first thought shall be of Jesus,
To greet the rising day;
My last thought shall be of Jesus,
When twilight fades away."

The Law of God and the True Sabbath

A Bible Reading

SWIN SWINSON

1. What is the character of the law of God? Ps. 19:7; Rom. 7:12, 14.

2. What is the character of God? — Holy, just, good, true, perfect, spiritual. 1 Peter 1:16.

3. If the character of God can not be changed, can his law be changed? — Surely not.

4. Then is not the law of God and his character the same? Rom. 8:7, 8.

5. Did the death of Christ make void the law? Rom. 3:31. Faith in the death of Christ and the cross will establish the law in the heart of the believer.

6. What will he oppose who opposes the law of God? Rom. 8:7. He also opposes the atonement effected on the cross.

7. If it is a sin to oppose God, is it not a sin to oppose his law? 1 John 3:4.

8. Is the Sabbath of Jehovah part of God's law? Luke 23:56.

9. For whom was the Sabbath made? Mark 2:27, 28.

10. When was it made? Gen. 2:1-3.

11. What are the benefits derived from the true Sabbath? Eze. 20:12, 20; Isa. 58:13.

12. If the Sabbath was to be a benefit unto man even after the fall, and all benefits come to us through Christ since the fall, through whom does the Sabbath blessing come? — Through Christ.

13. Did Jesus keep the commandments? John 15:10.

14. Who are we following when we keep the seventh day instead of the first day of the week? — Jesus our Lord.

15. Through whom were all things created? — Christ. Eph. 3:9; Heb. 1:1, 2; Col. 1:16, 17.

16. Who rested on the seventh-day Sabbath? — Christ.

17. Who blessed the seventh-day Sabbath? — Christ.

18. Who sanctified the seventh-day Sabbath? — Christ.

19. Who by these three acts made it the Sabbath? — Christ, associated with the Father.

20. What have we then? — A blessed, holy, sanctified, seventh-day, Christian Sabbath; for Christ is its Author.

21. Under what authority does the first day of the week come in? — Under the authority of the Catholic Church.

22. "What warrant have you for keeping the Sunday preferable to the ancient Sabbath, which was the Saturday? Ans.— We have for it the authority of the Catholic Church and apostolical tradition." — "Catholic Christian Instructed," page 202.

23. "Have you any other way of proving that the church has power to institute festivals of precepts? Ans.— Had she not such power, she could not have done that in which all modern religionists agree with her — she could not have substituted the observance of Sunday, the first day of the week, for the observance of Saturday, the seventh day, — a change for which there is no Scriptural authority." — "Doctrinal Catechism," page 174. "But you may read the Bible from Genesis to Revelation, and you will not find a single line authorizing the sanctification of Sunday. The Scriptures enforce the religious observance of Saturday, a day which we never sanctify." — "Faith of Our Fathers," by James Cardinal Gibbons, page 111.

24. What does Jesus say to such testimonies? Matt. 15:9.

25. Will God regard our prayers if we knowingly trample on his holy law? Prov. 28:9.

26. Did Jesus teach that the seventh-day Sabbath should be kept this side of the cross? — Yes. Matt. 24:20.

27. When was Jerusalem overthrown? — A. D. 70.

28. Did the apostles meet on the seventh day to hold religious service? Acts 13:14, 27.

29. What day did the Gentiles keep? Acts 13:42-44. This was in the year A. D. 45.

30. What did Paul do at Corinth? Acts 18: 4, 11.

31. What was Paul's custom? Acts 17:2.

32. Whom was he following? — Christ, his example. Luke 4:16.

33. Who is to blame for the trampling of the sign and seal of God's law under foot? Eze. 22:25-28.

Rest In the Lord

(Ps. 37:7)

"REST in the Lord!" I calmly wait;
My cross points to the pearly gate.
E'en though I deeply mourn, heart-broken,
Yet shall hope's trustful words be spoken:
"My Loved is mine!" (Cant. 2:16) whate'er he send
Will prove a blessing in the end.

He loves me deeply, tenderly,
He came, from sin to rescue me,
Sprang into death's dark, yawning portal,
To bring life's light to me, the mortal.
Faithful is he, and ever kind,
In him I full abundance find.

I know thy love, my faithful God!
And should I suffer cross or rod,
Were all my days consumed in anguish,
Or if my flesh and heart must languish:
Thy will, my Lord, is always best,
In thy love let my soul find rest.

"Go Ye Into All the World, and Preach the Gospel"

INDEXED

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE truth for this time is to be proclaimed to all peoples, all nations. The question before us is, How shall this work be done? Shall we take hold of it listlessly and indifferently, doing it as a routine, or shall we enter into it with the same spirit in which Christ entered into it, putting into its accomplishment every power of mind and body?

If we take up this work as drudgery, failing to remember that it is the Lord's work, which we are to do to his name's glory, to bring light to those in darkness, we shall not find much satisfaction in the doing of it. Such service is a mere form. The hand and mind work in a formal way, but the heart is not in it. Such service brings no refreshing to the worker; for he feels no real interest in it.

My brethren and sisters, take up this work as the Lord's work, doing it with thoughtfulness and patience. This is real service, which the Master will approve. Work with a clear sense of the obligation resting upon you, knowing that angels of God are present, to set the seal of heaven to faithfulness, and to condemn unfaithfulness in any form.

Taking hold courageously of the work that needs to be done, and putting the heart into it, makes the work a pleasure, and brings success. Thus God is glorified.

We each have a work to do. We may be of different nationalities, but we are to be one in Christ. If we allow peculiarities of character and disposition to separate us here, how can we hope to live together in heaven? We are to cherish love and respect for one another. There is to be among us the unity for which Christ prayed. We have been bought with a price, and we are to glorify God in our bodies and in our spirits.

When you are given a duty to perform, do not ask whether it will glorify you, or whether it will show your wisdom and judgment to be superior to that of your fellow workers. Take up the duty with an eye single to the glory of God, in living sympathy with the object to be gained. Hold communion with Christ in God, knowing that the work in which you are engaged has been given you by the Master, and that by its faithful performance you are to glorify him.

As you faithfully do your work, your mind will be assimilated to the mind of Christ. By prayer and supplication seek for the promised blessing. Ask God to give you a true comprehension of the work to be accomplished. Do not allow yourself to be drawn away or hindered by any counter-influence. Act faithfully your part in bringing blessing to your fellow men. Praise God for the privilege of co-operating with him in his work. As you put your whole heart into the work to be done, you will enter into true companionship with your fellow workers. You will see Christ in your brethren.

God does not mean you to look upon any work that he has given you as drudgery. Lift your hearts and voices in praise to him. All duties are irksome into which the heart is not brought. There is a great work to be done, and into the doing of this work we are to put our whole hearts. The duties that the Lord places in our way we are to perform, not as a cold, dreary exercise, but as a service of love. Bring into your work your highest powers and sympathies, and you will find that Christ is in it. His presence will make the work light, and your heart will be filled with joy. You will work in harmony with God, and in loyalty and love and fidelity.

We are to be sincere, earnest Christians, doing faithfully the work placed in our hands, and looking unto Jesus, the author and finisher of our faith. Our reward is not dependent upon our seeming success, but upon the Spirit in which our work is done. As canvassers or evangelists, you may not have had the success you have prayed for, but remember that you do not know and can not measure the result of faithful effort.

Let the fear of God influence you, not the fear of man. Use all the tact and skill at your command in giving the truth to those who know it not. Remember that all around you there are souls perishing in sin. Be as true as steel to principle, and put your whole heart into the work of winning souls to Christ. Speak and act in such a way that at the last great day Christ can say to you, "Well done, good and faithful servant; thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

An advance work is to be done in our conferences. Our churches are to be aroused to take up aggressive warfare. We are to consecrate soul and body to God. We are to hunt and fish for souls. We are God's witnesses, and every power of the being is to be put to use in his service. Sing his praises. Pray with and for souls. So order your life and conversation that through association with you souls will be convicted and converted. Do not forget that every worker needs a daily conversion, a daily fitting up for service. Let Christ dwell in your hearts by faith. Give back to God his treasures. Distribute his bounties. Learn daily of Christ, that your hearts may be meek and lowly. Remember that the Lord has rich blessings for all who will lay hold upon him.

"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." The powers of the whole being are to be employed in unselfish service. Every talent is to be used. Improve the future better than you have the past. Put your talents out to the exchangers; for Christ is hungry for souls.

The Lord's workers are now to exercise every capability in preparing for his coming. We are to work while the day lasts; for the night cometh, in which no man can work. Let every one seek to prepare the King's highway. Take up the stumbling-blocks. Show that you are God's property. The heart is to be purified from all dross. The thoughts and affections are to be brought into obedience to the Lord's will.

I speak to our church-members in every place. You must reach a higher standard of consecration to God. If you will seek the Lord, putting away all evil speaking and all selfishness, and continuing instant in prayer, the Lord will draw nigh to you. It is the power of the Holy Spirit that will give efficacy to your efforts and your appeals. Humble yourselves before God, that in his strength you may rise to a higher standard.

We have no time to lose. Every moment is precious. We know not how soon our cases may pass in review before God. Brethren and sisters, for Christ's sake purify your souls by obeying the truth, that you may have clear spiritual discernment. Leave not one duty undone. Arise and move forward on your upward march. Can you afford to be careless and indifferent, at the risk of losing heaven? Wake up, wake up! You need keen perceptions, that you may understand how to be laborers together with God. Let there be no uncertainty. Postpone no duty. Work to the point. Error of every species will come in, and unless your mind is clear, unless you know and practise the truth, Satan will take advantage of you, and you will be led away by his sophistrics. You must know the meaning of practical godliness. Our only safety is union with Christ. If you are abiding in him, the fruit you bear will be unto righteousness.

There is to be deep searching of heart. Ask yourselves, "On what foundation am I building?" We are to live Christlike lives. Not a thread of selfishness is to be woven into the pattern. Christ is to be our all and in all. By the sanctification that he gives, we are to bear witness to the world that we are children of God.

Take deep drafts of the water of life. Then you will flourish in the Lord. A great work is to be done in a short time. Arouse the energies of your soul, and work for time and for eternity. Put all that you have and are into this glorious enterprise, saying, "This one thing I do, forgetting those things which are behind, and reaching forth unto those things which are before, I press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus."

Lay aside every weight, and the sin that doth so easily beset, and run with patience the race set before you. Press on toward perfection. Then you will have success in your service. The message that you bear will be a living message: for you will be filled with the earnestness of the Spirit.

The Day of Pentecost

F. C. GILBERT

Much labored effort has been and is being put forth to show that the Pentecost of Acts 2 occurred on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday. In fact, there is a growing tendency to believe that Pentecost and the other feasts given to the Israelites, always occurred on the same day of the week. One special reason for this doubtless is a desire to prove that the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, is the day that Christians should observe for the Lord's day, or Sabbath, instead of the seventh day, which the Lord gave originally, and which was confirmed by the Lord Jesus both in his life and by his death. John 15:10.

Now all the feasts which God gave to Israel occurred annually, and were to be observed only at the time when they were due, save the Passover, which was allowed to be kept the same day of the month in the second month, by those who, on account of ceremonial uncleanness, were unable to keep it in the first month. Num. 9:1-14.

The origin of the feasts is given as follows: "Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year. Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread: . . . and the feast of harvest, the first-fruits of thy labors, . . . and the feast of ingathering." Ex. 23:14-17; 34:23; Lev. 23:4, 5, 10, 26-32, 33, 34, 37. Thus it is clear that the Passover, feast of first-fruits or feast of weeks (Deut. 16:16), and the feast of harvest occurred but once a year. Ex. 13:10; 23:16.

The Bible recognizes twelve months to the year. See 1 Chron. 27:1-15. The months were regulated by the new moons. In fact, the Hebrew word for month is the identical word for new moon. There is but one Hebrew word, Cho-desh, which means new moon, and which also means month. To this very day the orthodox Jews observe the Rosh Cho-desh, beginning of the new moons, otherwise called months. Therefore, these feasts, whenever they came, were regulated not by the days of the week, but according to the times of the new moons, or months. It is evident to every thinking person that the new moons could not fall on the same day of the week as they came one by one; therefore the months could not begin the same day of the week, month by month, as they came. Consequently the yearly feasts could not come on the same day of the week, year by year, as they came. The Bible plainly says they are annual feasts, governed by the revolutions of the year. Ex. 34:22, margin. The word "end" in this last verse referred to, is Te-koo-fa, the identical word which in Ps. 19:6 is translated circuit. It literally means "revolution."

Now with this in view, let us examine what the Scripture says concerning the "Pentecost," or "feast of weeks," "feast of first-fruits." Acts 2:1; Deut. 16:16; Lev. 23:9, 10; Ex. 23:16. It is also known as the "feast of the fiftieth day," the "feast of the conclusion," the "season of the giving of our law." See Josephus, "The Jewish War," book 2, chap. 3, par. 1. All these terms of this feast are recognized by the Jews even to the present day. The command concerning this feast is given in Leviticus 23, as follows: "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the first-fruits of your harvest unto the priest: and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it. And ye shall offer that day when ye wave the sheaf an he lamb without blemish of the first year for a burnt offering unto the Lord. . . . And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath, from the day that ye brought the sheaf of the wave offering; seven sabbaths shall be complete: even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat offering unto the Lord." Verses 9-16.

Here the Lord states that they were to count to them seven sabbaths complete, which literally is seven full weeks complete (verse 15. Hebrew Sheva Shab-bathos T'me-moth, seven perfected or completed weeks), from the day they brought the wave sheaf. This seventh full week, which was begun the day after the sabbath, was to reach to Pentecost.

Now the question involved is, What does this sabbath in verse 15 refer to? By reading verses 7, 8, and comparing them with verses 34, 35, 38, 39, it will be seen that the first and last days of every feast were to be days of holy convocation, also said to be sabbaths. The people were to perform no servile work in them; but they were to rest on those days from their labors. Thus the first day of the Passover was a sabbath, a day of rest from toil, irrespective of the day of the week.

The Passover began on the fourteenth day of Abib, afterward called Nisan. Deut. 16:1; Esther 3:7. The lamb was slain on that fourteenth day, between the two evenings, between twelve and six. Ex. 12:6, margin. The night following was to begin the first sabbath of the feast, for the day in the Bible begins at sunset. Gen. 1:5, 8, etc.; Deut. 16:6; Mark 1:32. The lamb being offered on the fourteenth day in the afternoon, the evening following would begin the fifteenth day of Nisan, or the first sabbath of the Passover. This would continue till the evening of the next day. When the sun would set this next day, irrespective of the day of the week, three men with baskets in their hands, and with sharp sickles, would cut down the sheaf, after they had asked several questions of the bystanders, in order to bring out the distinctiveness of the ceremony.

Now the Lord Jesus Christ, just before he was crucified, said to the disciples that after two days was the Passover. Matt. 26:1, 2. He greatly desired to eat this last Passover with them before he suffered. Luke 22:15. So the disciples came to him, at the proper time, and asked him where he would like to have them prepare for him to eat the Passover. Matt. 26:17. He gave them their instructions, and they made ready the Passover. Verse 19. When the proper time came, he sat down with the twelve. Verse 20.

It is therefore evident that the Saviour ate the Passover at the proper time with his disciples. The disciples knew when the Passover had to be slain, even though they did not then recognize that Christ was to be offered as the paschal lamb to fulfil the type. The typical lamb was killed, therefore, according to the law, on the fourteenth day of Nisan. But this was on Thursday, for the next day, the day he was crucified, was the preparation for the Sabbath of the Lord. Luke 23:54, 56. It was always allowable that when the Sabbath of the Lord immediately followed any festival sabbath, necessary preparations be made on this festival sabbath for the rest of Jehovah. This was universally recognized among the Jews at the time of Christ, and is extant to this present day.

The Saviour ate the Passover on the fourteenth, and was crucified on the fifteenth, which was the first sabbath of the Passover. About the time the Saviour was taken down from the cross, at the beginning of the Sabbath of the Lord, the wave sheaf was cut, thus showing that he was a type of the wave sheaf also, the first-fruit. The next day therefore, the sixteenth of Nisan, was the beginning of the counting of the Omer, or the seven weeks, which culminated on the last day of the seventh week from this time. The first day of the seven weeks was the seventh-day Sabbath, the Sabbath of Jehovah; the day after the last day of the seven weeks must also have been the Sabbath of Jehovah. Lev.

Give Me Jesus

C. H. KESLAKE

Give me Jesus, Rose of Sharon,
Lily of the valley sweet;
Give me Jesus, Bread of heaven,
Freely I this Bread would eat.

Give me Jesus, gentle Shepherd,
Faithful Leader of the flock;
Give me Jesus, Rock of Ages,
Proof against sin's rudest shock.

Give me Jesus, Stem of Jesse,
Root of David, Morning Star;
Give me Jesus, Light of heaven,
Shining through the gates ajar.

Give me Jesus, King of Salem,
Prince of Peace, of Righteousness;
Give me Jesus, he will gladly
Clothe me with salvation's dress.

Give me Jesus, Lamb most holy,
Gift of God before the fall;
Give me Jesus, slain for sinners,
Offered for the sins of all.

Give me Jesus, only Jesus,
He alone can satisfy;
Give me Jesus, blessed Jesus,
Give me Jesus, or I die.

Give me Jesus, interceding
Now for me at God's right hand;
Give me Jesus, he will guide me
Safely to the promised land.

Give me Jesus, Stone of Israel,
Rock of Ages cleft for me;
Give me Jesus, in his keeping
I am safe eternally.

A God of Knowledge, by Whom Actions Are Weighed

MRS. E. G. WHITE

The Lord is a God of knowledge. In his Word, he is represented as weighing men, their development of character and all their motives, whether they be good or evil. Hannah, the mother of Samuel, the child granted her by God in answer to her earnest petition, said, "The Lord is a God of knowledge, and by him actions are weighed." David declared, "Men of low degree are vanity, and men of high degree are a lie: to be laid in the balance, they are altogether lighter than vanity." Isaiah said, "Thou, most upright, dost weigh the path of the just." Solomon wrote, "All the ways of a man are clean in his own eyes; but the Lord weigheth the spirits."

(1) [It is for the eternal interest of every one to search his own heart, and to improve every God-given faculty. Let all remember that there is not a motive in the heart of any man that the Lord does not clearly see. The motives of each one are weighed as carefully as if the destiny of the human agent depended upon this one result. We need a connection with divine power, that we may have an increase of clear light and an understanding of how to reason from cause to effect. We need to have the powers of the understanding cultivated, by our being partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust. Let each one consider carefully the solemn truth, God in heaven is true, and there is not a design, however intricate, nor a motive, (1) however carefully hidden, that he does not clearly understand. He reads the secret devisings of every heart. Men may plan out crooked actions for the future, thinking that God does not understand; but in that great day when the books are opened, and every man is judged by the things written in the books, those actions will appear as they are.

David in the Psalms writes, "O Lord, thou hast searched me, and known me. Thou knowest my downsitting and mine uprising, thou understandest my thoughts afar off. Thou compassest my path and my lying down, and art acquainted with all my ways. For there is not a word in my tongue, but, lo, O Lord, thou knowest it altogether. Thou hast beset me behind and before, and laid thine hand upon me. . . .

"If I say, Surely the darkness shall cover me; even the night shall be light about me. Yea, the darkness hideth not from thee; but the night shineth as the day: the darkness and the light are both alike to thee."

The Lord sees and understands all dishonesty in planning, all unlawful appropriation in any degree of property or means, all injustice in man's dealing with his fellow men.]

Commentary, Vol. 3 p. 1160 (1)

There are many who need now to consider the words, "Tekel; Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting." God's holy, everlasting, immutable law is the standard by which man is to be tried. This law defines what we shall do and what we shall not do, saying, Thou shalt, and, Thou shalt not. This law is summed up in the two great principles, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself."

This means just what it says. O how few will be prepared to meet the law of God in the great day of judgment! If the work of individual preparation for which the Lord calls were carried on in the home circle and in the church, how much suffering, how much sin, would be avoided!

My brethren, day and night, and especially in the night season, this matter is presented to me. "Tekel; Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting." How do we stand before God at this time? We may be sincere, and yet greatly deceived. Saul of Tarsus was sincere when he was persecuting the church of Christ. "I verily thought," he declared, "that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus." He was sincere in his ignorance. But after Christ had revealed himself to him, he declared, "What things were gain to me, those I counted loss for Christ. Yea doubtless, and I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord."

If we are not cleansed by the blood of Christ, we are altogether wanting. We know that there is no one, however earnestly he may be striving to do his best, who can say, "I have no sin." He who would say this would be under a dangerous deception. "If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us." How then can we escape the charge, "Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting"? We are to look to Christ. At infinite cost he has covenanted to be our representative in the heavenly courts, our advocate before God.

Weighed in the balances, and found wanting. Man, weighed against God's holy law, is found wanting. We are enlightened by the precepts of the law, but no man can by them be justified. Weighed and found wanting is our inscription by nature. But Christ is our Mediator, and accepting him as our Saviour, we may claim the promise, "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

"My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world. And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar, and the truth is not in him. But whoso keepeth his word, in him verily is the love of God perfected: hereby know we that we are in him. He that saith he abideth in him ought himself also so to walk, even as he walked.

"Brethren, I write no new commandment unto you, but an old commandment which ye had from the beginning. . . . Again, a new commandment I write unto you, which thing is true in him and in you: because the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth. He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is none occasion of stumbling in him. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes.

"I write unto you, little children, because your sins are forgiven you for his name's sake. I write unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I write unto you, young men, because ye have overcome the wicked one. I write unto you, little children, because ye have known the Father. I have written unto you, fathers, because ye have known him that is from the beginning. I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one.

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever.

"Little children, it is the last time: and as ye have heard that antichrist shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby we know that it is the last time. They went out from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us, they would no doubt have continued with us; but they went out, that they might be made manifest that they were not all of us. But ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things. I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth."

How important that we, living as we are at the very close of this earth's history, should be very careful to put away our own individual sins, so that we shall not grieve the heart of Christ. Let each one, old or young, be faithful in dealing with himself, lest he shall stumble along in darkness, making grievous mistakes, and thus helping others to make mistakes.

"Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ? He is antichrist, that denieth the Father and the Son. Whosoever denieth the Son, the same hath not the Father; [but] he that acknowledgeth the Son hath the Father also. Let that therefore abide in you, which ye have heard from the beginning. If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father.

"And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life. These things have I written unto you concerning them that seduce you. But the anointing which ye have received of him abideth in you, and ye need not that any man teach you: but as the same anointing teacheth you in all things, and is truth, and is no lie, and even as it hath taught you, ye shall abide in him. And now, little children, abide in him; that, when he shall appear, we may have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming. If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him."

He who denies the personality of God and of his Son Jesus Christ, is denying God and Christ. "If that which ye have heard from the beginning shall remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father." If you continue to believe and obey the truths you first embraced regarding the personality of the Father and the Son, you will be joined together with him in love. There will be seen that union for which Christ prayed just before his trial and crucifixion: —

"That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us: that the world may believe that thou hast sent me. And the glory which thou gavest me I have given them; that they may be one, even as we are one: I in them, and thou in me, that they may be made perfect in one; and that the world may know that thou hast sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me."

Christ is glorified in his saints. He, the propitiation for their sins, will be glorified in all who believe in him as their Saviour, all who commit themselves and their interests to his guidance. They are on Christ's side, known by the manifestation that Christ makes through them of his power to save. They obtain victory after victory over the world, the flesh, and the devil. They are made perfect in their victory through Christ.

Shall We Buy Mining Stock?

FRANCIS M. WILCOX

These are days of peril; not alone in so-called spiritual ways, but in every phase of human experience. The spirit of speculation is rife in the land. Speculative philosophy is seeking to turn away thousands from the truth of God. We see the same spirit of idle speculation in the commercial world. As never before, men are investing their money in idle schemes which hold out great promise of sudden wealth.

And this temptation assails the believers in this message as well as the men and women of the world. Every device will be invented by Satan whereby the means of this denomination shall be tied up, and thus our needy missions be robbed of the support which God designs his people to afford them. If Satan can induce Seventh-day Adventists to invest their means in some patent right, some new invention, some mining scheme, or in the thousand and one worldly inducements which present themselves, he is most highly pleased. And the fact that thousands have invested their means in such ways, and lost their all, seems to have no deterring influence in preventing others from rushing heedlessly on in the same worldly ventures.

We are forcibly reminded of this by letters recently received from some of our conference officers in the East, making inquiry as to whether it is advisable for our brethren and sisters to invest their means in mining interests in Colorado, in answer to alluring advertisements which are being sent to them. We have responded to these letters, advising that under no circumstances should investments be made in these enterprises until our brethren had satisfied themselves by thorough personal investigation as to their reliability.

But a thorough investigation would be difficult for the majority of our brethren to make. Totally unacquainted with mining operations, they would therefore be almost wholly dependent upon the representations made by others; thus they would be largely at the mercy of wild speculators, who, while perhaps perfectly honest in their faith in the outcome of the venture, and perhaps members of the Seventh-day Adventist Church, would be so drunken with the spirit of speculation that they could not carefully and correctly weigh the question in all its bearings.

We have known Seventh-day Adventists to withdraw thousands of dollars from our institutions, where they were receiving a reasonable rate of interest, and where their money was accomplishing good for the cause of God, and invest it in mines in Colorado, with no returns whatever except mining stock, which is absolutely worthless. The fact that these mines were operated by Seventh-day Adventists, did not make the investment one whit more safe or successful.

Hence we wish to say to our brethren and sisters throughout the country everywhere, Beware of every scheme and representation which would lead you to withhold or withdraw your money from the cause of God to invest it in mines or other questionable enterprises, where in the majority of cases you will be sadly disappointed in the realization of your hopes.

Says our Saviour, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal: but lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is, there will your heart be also."

In harmony with this plain scripture injunction, much has been said in the writings of the spirit of prophecy on this subject. While many quotations might be made, the following extract from page 665, Vol. II, of "Testimonies for the Church," contains the central thought of all: —

"A flattering prospect may be presented to invest in patent rights, or some other supposed brilliant enterprise, around which Satan throws a bewitching enchantment. The prospect of getting more money, fast and easily, allures them. The reason that, although they had resolved to put this money into the treasury of God, they will use it in this instance, and will greatly increase it, and will then give a larger sum to the cause. They can see no possibility of a failure. Away goes the means out of their hands, and they soon learn, to their regret, that they have made a mistake. The brilliant prospects have faded. Their expectations are not realized. They were deceived. Satan outgeneraled them. He was more shrewd than they; and he managed to get their means into his ranks, and thus deprive the cause of God of that which should have been used to sustain it in extending the truth, and saving souls for whom Christ died. They lost all they had invested, and

In My Dreams

ELIZA H. MORTON

IN my dreams I have seen the heavens
Aglow with a flood of light,
And my eyes have beheld my Saviour
Descending with angels bright.
I have seen his face in its beauty,
His hands with the nail-marks there,
And the wound in his side for sinners —
A vision most wondrous, fair.

In my dreams I have seen a city
With streets of the purest gold,
And with stones in glittering splendor
That walls of jasper uphold,
And with gates of pearl in their gleaming,
Wide open for you and me.
O city of God in thy glory —
A city where all are free!

In my dreams I have seen the righteous
Caught up by an angel band,
And I would I had words to tell it
To make you all understand;
But no tongue can describe that meeting,
No painter can paint that scene.
Like a flash in the dark 'twas given,
A picture upon a screen.

Ah, those dreams are dreams to remember,
Like etchings in frames of white
They are hung in the chamber of silence
To brighten the hours of night;
They'll come true, those dreams, in the future:
They're all in a Book that is given
To guide us in paths that are upward,
That end at the gate of heaven.

A Holy People

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"HEAR my voice, O God, in my prayer; preserve my life from fear of the enemy. Hide me from the secret counsel of the wicked; from the insurrection of the workers of iniquity: who whet their tongue like a sword, and bend their bows to shoot their arrows, even bitter words: that they may shoot in secret at the perfect: suddenly do they shoot at him, and fear not. They encourage themselves in an evil matter: they commune of laying snares privily; they say, Who shall see them? They search out iniquities; they accomplish a diligent search: both the inward thought of every one of them, and the heart, is deep.

"But God shall shoot at them with an arrow; suddenly shall they be wounded. So they shall make their own tongue to fall upon themselves: all that see them shall flee away. And all men shall fear, and shall declare the work of God; for they shall wisely consider of his doing. The righteous shall be glad in the Lord, and shall trust in him; and all the upright in heart shall glory."

This scripture will be literally fulfilled. Everything is to be shaken that can be shaken, that those things that can not be shaken may remain. I am amazed as I consider the past, present, and future of the people of God. The Lord will have a pure, holy people,— a people who will stand the test. Every believer needs now to search his heart as with a lighted candle.

We may well ask the question asked by the lawyer, "What shall I do to inherit eternal life?" Christ said to him, "What is written in the law? how readest thou?" The answer came, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and with all thy mind; and thy neighbor as thyself." And Christ said, "Thou hast answered right: this do, and thou shalt live."

The Sinner's Only Hope

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." God is our creator, benefactor, preserver. The author of all good, he is able to fulfil his purpose in the creation of human beings.

The wickedness that fills our world is the result of Adam's refusal to take God's word as supreme. He disobeyed, and fell under the temptation of the enemy. "Sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." God declared, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." And, apart from the plan of redemption, human beings are doomed to death. "All have sinned, and come short of the glory of God." But Christ gave his life to save the sinner from the death sentence. He died that we might live. To those who receive him he gives power that enables them to separate from that which, unless they return to their loyalty, will place them where they must be condemned and punished.

Christ is the sinner's only hope. By his death he brought salvation within the reach of all. Through his grace all may become loyal subjects of God's kingdom. Only by his sacrifice could salvation be brought within man's reach. This sacrifice has made it possible for men and women to fulfil the conditions laid down in the councils of heaven.

Christ came to this earth and lived a life of perfect obedience, that men and women, through his grace, might also live lives of perfect obedience. This is necessary to their salvation. Without holiness no man shall see the Lord.

Before us is held out the wonderful possibility of being like Christ — obedient to all the principles of the law of God. But of ourselves we are utterly powerless to attain to this condition. All that is good in man comes to him through Christ. The holiness that God's Word declares we must have before we can be saved is the result of the working of divine grace as we bow in submission to the discipline and restraining influence of the Spirit of truth.

Man's obedience can be made perfect only by the incense of Christ's righteousness, which fills with divine fragrance every act of true obedience. The part of the Christian is to persevere in overcoming every fault. Constantly he is to pray to the Saviour to heal the disorders of his diseased soul. He has not the wisdom and strength without which he can not overcome. They belong to the Lord, and he bestows them on those who in humiliation and contrition seek him for help.

The work of transformation from unholiness to holiness is a continuous work. Day by day God labors for man's sanctification, and man is to co-operate with him by putting forth persevering efforts in the cultivation of right habits. The way in which we are to work out our own salvation is plainly specified in the first chapter of Second Peter. Constantly we are to add grace to grace, and as we do this, God will work for us upon the plan of multiplication. He is always ready to hear and answer the prayer of the contrite heart, and grace and peace are multiplied to his faithful ones. Gladly he grants them the blessings that they need in their struggle against the evils that beset them. Those who listen to the counsels of his Word shall not want any good thing.

The reason that many who once knew and loved the Saviour are now in darkness, wandering far from him, is because in self-confidence and self-sufficiency they have followed their own inclinations. They walked not in the way of the Lord — the only way of peace and happiness. By disobedience they cut themselves off from receiving his blessings, when by obedience they might have gone forward in his strength.

The abundant evidence given by God that he desires the salvation of all, will be the condemnation of those who refuse the gift of heaven. At the last great day, when all will be rewarded or punished according to their obedience or disobedience, the cross of Calvary will appear plainly before those standing before the Judge of all the earth to receive sentence for eternity. They are made capable of comprehending something of the love that God has expressed for fallen human beings. They see how greatly he has been dishonored by those who have continued in transgression, choosing sides with Satan, and showing contempt for the law of Jehovah. They see that obedience to this law would have brought them life and health, prosperity and eternal good.

To-day angels are sent to minister to those who shall be heirs of salvation, to help them to escape from the thraldom of Satan's power, and stand as faithful volunteers in the army of him who in their behalf came to this world and endured suffering and affliction. Each human being is given the freedom of choice. It is his to decide whether he will stand under the black banner of rebellion, or under the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel. With deep solicitude heaven watches the conflict between good and evil. None but the obedient can enter the gates of the city of God. Upon those who choose to continue in transgression, the death sentence must at last be pronounced. The earth will be purified from their misdoings, their defiance of God.

"Yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be: yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be." "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. . . . They shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts."

Those who refuse to conform their characters to the divine similitude can never enter the city of God. They have cut themselves off from the happiness, and hope, and peace, and joy that might have been theirs. Had they accepted the grace of Christ, they would have been made strong to resist the temptations of the enemy; and they would at last have been received into the holy city as sons and daughters of God, to be eternally blessed, to live a life measuring with the life of God.

But the mournful words that God spoke of Israel, he will be obliged to speak of many, many living on the earth to-day: "My people would not harken to my voice; and Israel would none of me. So I gave them up unto their own hearts' lust: and they walked in their own counsels." God would have rejoiced to number them with the saints in light, but he could not; for they refused all his invitations and appeals. He says, "O that my people had harkened unto me, and Israel had walked in my ways! I should soon have subdued their enemies, and turned my hand against their adversaries. The haters of the Lord should have submitted themselves unto him: but their time should have endured forever. He should have fed them also with the finest of the wheat: and with honey out of the rock should I have satisfied thee."

The Divine Standard of Character

God's law is the transcript of his character, and those only who obey this law will be accepted by him. Every departure from obedience to the law of God is rebellion. It is for the highest interest of man to obey the law of God; for conformity to the principles of this law is essential to the formation of a righteous character. The rules of life that the Lord has given will make men pure and happy and holy. Those only who obey these rules can hear from the lips of Christ the words, "Come up higher."

(1) Idolaters are condemned by the word of God. Their folly consists in trusting in self for salvation, in bowing down to the works of their own hands. God classes as idolaters those who trust in their own wisdom, their own devising, depending for success on their riches and power, striving to strengthen themselves by alliance with men whom the world calls great, but who fail to discern the binding claims of his law.

God will more than fulfil the highest expectations of those who put their trust in him. He desires us to remember that when we are humble and contrite, we stand where he can and will manifest himself to us. He is well pleased when we urge past mercies and blessings as a reason why he should bestow on us higher and greater blessings. He is honored when we love him, and bear testimony to the genuineness of our love by keeping his commandments. He is honored when we set apart the seventh day as sacred and holy. To those who do this the Sabbath is a sign, "that they (2) might know," God declares, "that I am the Lord that sanctify them." Sanctification means habitual communion with God. There is nothing so great and powerful as God's love for those who are his children.

Jeremiah and Zedekiah

S. N. HASKELL

Jeremiah prophesied in the days of Josiah, Jehoahaz, Jehoiachin, and Zedekiah. It was Zedekiah that went into captivity under the hand of Nebuchadnezzar. Zedekiah was vacillating in character. He professed to believe the testimonies of Jeremiah, and would often surrender himself to them, but would afterward swerve to the popular sentiment of the people.

The book of Jeremiah is a compilation of personal testimonies to these rulers and to the people that went into captivity. Oftentimes the curtain would be rolled back before the prophet's mind, and he would see the end of this world and the condition of the people of God in the closing scenes of this world's history.

Zedekiah would frequently inquire of the prophet if the Lord had any word for him and his people. On a certain occasion when this inquiry was made, the prophet told him that there was word from the Lord, and that he was not to be deceived, saying, "The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us: for they shall not depart. For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained but wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire." Because of this personal testimony given the king, the prophet was put into a dungeon, for there were many who heeded his words.

Through the influence of one Ebedmelech, an Ethiopian, the king repented of what he had done to Jeremiah and ordered him taken from the dungeon. "So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him up out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison." Zedekiah repented of the course he had pursued and was anxious to do the will of the Lord, and so he asked the prophet if there was any word of the Lord for him. The prophet said there was, and the king swore unto him secretly, saying, "As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hands of these men that seek thy life." When he thus made a covenant to follow out the words of the Lord, the following promise was made to the king: "If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt live, and thine house: but if thou wilt not go forth to the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand. And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me." (3) The prophet became exceedingly anxious that Jerusalem might be saved from the judgments that God had threatened would come upon the city, and he besought the king, saying, "Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, which I speak unto thee: so shall it be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live." The prophet assured him that everything that he feared would come upon him if he did not go forth. But Zedekiah was a weak man. He yielded to the popular sentiment and did not go forth, but was destroyed, and so was Jerusalem, and the people went into captivity.

From this history we learn several important facts. First, the threatened judgments of God are conditional, as are his promises. If we obey God, we live; if we disobey, we die, and bring upon ourselves swift destruction. Second, the testimony of the Lord, in adapting itself to the situation, appeared to be contradictory because the people changed, and what would apply to the king before he repented, would not apply when he repented. And so when the Lord said that Jerusalem would be destroyed, it was on condition that the people continued in their sinful course. Third, the Lord was anxious to save the king and the people from the judgments that he had said would come upon them. The prophet's very soul was drawn out that they might be saved, but the conclusion of it all was that the king feared the people, surrendered to the people, and practically took back the covenant that he made with the prophet, and brought upon himself and upon the people the judgments threatened.

"Come Ye Yourselves Apart . . . and Rest Awhile"

MRS. M. A. LOPER

God says to us sometimes, "My child, come thou
Apart and rest awhile, and be with me.
Thou art too busy, hast too many cares,
To learn the lessons that I have for thee."

Sometimes affliction's hand upon us falls,
That we may heed the invitation given;
'Tis then we lay aside our cares and toils,
And turn our straying thoughts to God and heaven.

But how unjust to use the loaf of time
In service of, not Christ, but self and sin,
And when it seems life's end is drawing near,
To give the last remaining crumb to him.

'Tis best to serve God faithfully each hour,
To learn his lessons, and his goodness tell
To others in the paths of sin. Then come
What will, if life or death, all will be well.

Search the Scriptures

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I HAVE a decided message from the Lord for the people who claim to believe the truth for this time. I can but present before them their danger. There are many who, though members of the church, are unconverted, having lost their first love. God will not accept any excuse for backsliding, for continuing in a cold, lifeless condition spiritually. Christ has given every encouragement for his disciples to grow in grace. "Come unto me," he says, "all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

If you remain servants of sin, the result of the consequence will rest upon you; for you have had light. We are not to turn from the One mighty in counsel to ask guidance of men. Let those who are inclined to do this read and receive the Bible as the word of God to them. The Bible is the voice of God to his people. As we study the living oracles, we are to remember that God is speaking to his people out of his Word. We are to make this Word the man of our counsel. "Search the Scriptures," Christ said; "for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me." If we realized the importance of searching the Scriptures, how much more diligently we would study them! With awe we would take up the inspired Word, and with earnest desire search its pages, beginning a new life of genuine experience in the things of God. The Scriptures would be read and studied as the sure evidence of God's will concerning us.

The Bible is to be studied with special interest; for it contains the most valuable information that finite beings can have, pointing out the way in which we are to prepare for the coming of the Son of man in the clouds of heaven, putting away sin, and putting on the white robes of character that will give us entrance into the mansions that Christ told his disciples he was going to prepare for them. "If I go" away, he said, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."

If we do not receive the Word of God as food for the soul, we shall miss the greatest treasure that has been prepared for men and women; for the Word is a message to each and every soul. Christ declares that those who make its truths a part of their lives are eating his flesh and drinking his blood. If obeyed, it gives spiritual life and strength. The pure, spiritual current that enters the life in a living experience is eternal life to the receiver.

God's Word is our light. It is Christ's message to his heritage, who have been bought with the price of his blood. It was written for our guidance, and if we make this Word our counselor, we shall never walk in strange paths. Our words, whether we are in the home or associating with those outside the home, will be kind, affectionate, and pure. If we study the Word, and make it a part of our lives, we shall have a wholesome experience, which will always speak forth the truth. We shall search our hearts diligently, comparing our daily speech and tenor of life with the Word, that we may make no mistake. With the example of Christ Jesus before us, none need make a failure of the life-work.

In our daily experience, we shall be safe in criticizing ourselves in the light of the great moral standard of righteousness which never changes. "The law of the Lord is perfect, converting the soul," and when we bring our lives into harmony with the life of Christ, it will be seen that we are eating the flesh and drinking the blood of the Son of God. The spiritual life is built up from the food given to the mind; and if we eat the food provided in the Word of God, spiritual and mental health will be the result.

Eternal interests are involved in this matter. From a diligent study and faithful practise of the principles of the Word of God, we shall obtain the highest of all education. The Word must not be neglected for other interests. No other food can build up the spiritual life. My brethren and sisters, do not depend upon minister or physician to create your experience for you. The Word of God is to be your counselor. I am deeply in earnest, because this instruction, in most forcible words, has been given me to give to our church-members.

We are each deciding our eternal destiny, and it rests wholly with us whether we shall gain eternal life. Shall we live the lessons given in the Word of God, Christ's great lesson book? It is the grandest, and yet the most simply arranged and easily understood study book ever provided for human beings. It is the only book that will prepare men and women for the life that measures with the life of God.

Christ is the only judge of the fitness of human beings to receive eternal life. The gates of the holy city will open to those who are humble, meek, lowly followers of his, those who learn in his school, and receive from him the eternal life insurance policy, forming characters after the divine similitude.

One night I was standing before a congregation, calling their attention to the way to obtain the life insurance policy by living upon the plan of addition. Read the first chapter of Second Peter. I now call upon all who desire to obtain the eternal life insurance policy to take the Word of God as their guide. Let them not listen to the words of men who are not studying the Word with the determined purpose of carrying out the principles of the teaching of Christ, but who have come to suppose that they can be a law to themselves. If those who suppose this continue to carry on the same kind of character building that they have carried on, they will at last find themselves outside the gates of the city, with that company who think that they can take the city, and hold it as their property, though they have no right to it. They are disqualified by disobedience for being received into the kingdom of God as loyal citizens.

Let all who shall read these words, all to whose notice they shall come, remember that they are truth,— a solemn, earnest warning. I know that in the hearts of our people there is a large work to be done. O how grateful I should be if I could see a deep, thorough work accomplished in the hearts of all! Purification of soul is needed. Let us begin at once to take out of our hearts the root of bitterness. Let us consider the time in which we are living, the nearness of the end, and the work that God expects us to do.

To be successful in life's race, we must keep our faces toward the future. Everything good is set before the Christian, nothing but his sins behind him. He who tries to walk or run with face turned backward is very likely to encounter trouble.

Revive Thy Work

ELIZA H. MORTON

REVIVE thy work, O Lord, we pray,
Cast not aside.
Our feet are wandering in a maze,
Be thou our guide.

The days are growing short and dark,
Thy coming near,
A storm is gathering in the East,
Hearts fail with fear.

The hosts of evil are abroad,
Be thou a wall
About thy people, and a hedge,
Lest many fall.

The sparks men kindle will deceive
Us with their glow,
Unless the Spirit gives us power
The truth to know.

Revive thy work within our hearts
Till self is dead,
And on the words of love and life
Our souls are fed.

Come thou within, thy knock we hear,
O welcome Guest!
Thy presence leaves no place for sin,
Or vague unrest.

Thy work will be revived when all
Thy chosen stand
As soldiers ready to obey
Their King's command.

Our talents and our time and wealth
To thee belong.
O let thy Spirit do its work
And make us strong!

The Truth as It Is in Jesus

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THERE are many in this age of the world who act as if they were at liberty to question the words of the Infinite, to review his decisions and statutes, indorsing, revising, reshaping, and annulling at their pleasure. We are never safe while we are guided by human opinions, but we are safe when we are guided by a "Thus saith the Lord." We can not trust the salvation of our souls to any lower standard than the decisions of an infallible Judge. Those who make God their guide and his word their counselor, behold the lamp of life. God's living oracles guide their feet in straight paths. Those who are thus led do not dare to judge the word of God, but ever hold that his word judges them. They get their faith and religion from the word of the living God. It is the guide and counselor that directs their path. The word is indeed a light to their feet and a lamp to their path. They walk under the direction of the Father of light, with whom is no variableness, neither shadow of turning. He whose tender mercies are over all his works makes the path of the just as a shining light, which shineth more and more unto the perfect day. (1)

[The word of God is to be our spiritual food.] "I am the bread of life," Christ said; "he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst." The world is perishing for want of pure, unadulterated truth. Christ is the truth. His words are truth, and they have a greater value and a deeper significance than appears on the surface. All the sayings of Christ have a value beyond their unpretending appearance. Minds that are quickened by the Holy Spirit will discern the value of these sayings. They will discern the precious gems of truth, though they may be buried treasure.

How needful for all who are workers in the cause of God to ponder these things, that they may guard against self-sufficiency. If men are self-sufficient, the Lord leaves them to their own human wisdom. We are not to trust in self, or make self our god. Pride, selfishness, and all desire for self-exaltation place human agents in a position where the Holy Spirit can not work with them. In no case can the Holy Spirit co-operate with the methods and plans of self-sufficient men. It is not for any one to seek to be a great preacher or a wonderful evangelist. All who realize the dignity and elevated character of the message they bear will hide in Christ, realizing that their security and efficiency come from God.

Men may turn from one doctrine to another, and yet know nothing of the meaning of the words, "A new heart also will I give you." Accepting new theories merely does not bring new life into the soul, even though the church that is entered may be established on the true foundation. A connection with the church does not take the place of conversion. To have one's name placed on the church roll is not of the least value unless the heart is truly changed.

This question is a serious one, and should be fully entered into, and its meaning realized. Men may be members of a church. Apparently they may work religiously, performing a round of prescribed duties from year to year, and still remain unconverted. There are those who write in regard to religious matters. But although they delight to do this work in defense of Christianity, they may yet be unconverted. A man may preach pleasing, entertaining sermons, but he may be far from Christ as regards genuine experience. He may be self-sufficient, and exalted to the pinnacle of greatness, yet never have experienced the inward work of grace that transforms the character. Such a one is deceived by his connection and familiarity with the sacred truths of the gospel, which have reached the intellect, but have gone no deeper. The truth has not been brought into the inner sanctuary of the soul.

By his conscience every honest Jew was convinced that Jesus Christ was the Son of God, but the heart, in its pride and ambition, would not surrender. When the truth is held as the truth only by the conscience, when the heart is not stimulated and made receptive, the mind only is affected. But when the truth is received as truth by the heart, it has passed through the conscience, and captivated the soul by its pure principles. It is placed in the heart by the Holy Spirit, who reveals its beauty to the mind, that its transforming power may be seen in the character.

Unless a man is renewed in the spirit of his mind by the transforming power of the Holy Spirit, he will become restless and dissatisfied, because he has not died to self. "Come unto me," Christ said, "all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Again Christ says, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross daily, and follow me." Without me ye can do no good thing, any more than could Cain. Of what advantage is any system of religion to one who has not been transformed in character by the Holy Spirit's power. It is as saying without doing. It is a confession of faith, without works.

He who really believes the truth will live a life of unselfishness; for the truth is elevating, refining, and sanctifying in its influence. The true minister of the gospel will not stand before the people to speak smooth words, to cry, Peace and safety. He realizes the dangers that threaten the soul, and he presents the truth as it is in Jesus. The truth comes from his lips clear, plain, decided, as if he fully believed that the words spoken will be a savor of life unto life or of death unto death. The words of the minister who knows that he has the Spirit and power of God, will awaken the conscience of his hearers.

Truth must become truth to the receiver, to all intents and purposes. It must be stamped on the heart. "With the heart man believeth unto righteousness; and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind, and with all thy strength." This is the service that God accepts. Nothing short of this is accounted by him as pure and undefiled religion. The heart is the citadel of the being, and until that is wholly on the Lord's side, the enemy will gain constant victories over us through his subtle temptations.

If the life is given into its control, the power of the truth is unlimited. The thoughts are brought into captivity to Jesus Christ. From the treasure of the heart are brought forth appropriate and fitting words. Writing to Timothy, Paul says, "Hold fast the form of sound words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. That good thing which was committed unto thee keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us."

The Faith I Live By, p. 20 (1)

"All that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution," he says again. But this should not intimidate one soul. What can give such sunshine to the soul as the evidence of sins forgiven? What can impart true nobility if it is not the restoration of the moral image of God in man? Whence can peace come to the soul if not from the Prince of Peace? To what source can we look for help but to him who can give us light in the midst of darkness?

Christ has promised to send us the Comforter, whose work it is to establish the kingdom of God in the soul. Full and abundant is the provision that has been made that we may have mercy, grace, and peace. Why, then, do human beings act as if they entertained the idea that the truth is a yoke of bondage? — It is because the heart has never tasted and seen that the Lord is good. The soul that cherishes the love of Christ is full of freedom, light, and joy in Christ. In such a soul there are no divided thoughts. The whole man yearns after God. He goes not to men for counsel, to know what is duty, but to the Lord Jesus, the Source of all wisdom. He searches the Word of God, that he may find out what standard has been set up.

Can we ever find a surer guide than the Lord Jesus? True religion is embodied in the Word of God, and consists in being under the guidance of the Holy One in thought, word, and deed. He who is the Way, the Truth, and the Life, takes the humble, earnest, wholehearted seeker, and says, Follow me. He leads him in the narrow way to holiness and heaven. Christ has opened this path for us at great cost to himself. We are not left to stumble our way along in darkness. Jesus is at our right hand, proclaiming, "I am the Way." And all who decide to follow the Lord fully will be led in the royal path, yea more, in the path cast up for the ransomed of the Lord to walk in.

God calls upon his people to reveal him. Shall the world manifest principles of integrity that the church does not maintain? Shall a selfish desire to be first be shown by the followers of Christ? Shall not the principles cherished by them be unselfish, laid upon the true foundation, even Christ Jesus? What material shall we bring to the foundation? Shall we bring wood, hay, and stubble, or gold, silver, and precious stones? Shall we not distinguish sharply between the chaff and the wheat? Shall we not realize that we must receive the Holy Spirit in our hearts, that it may mold and fashion the daily life?

"Down amid the depths of heathen darkness
There are heroes true and brave,
Shrinking not from death, or toil, or danger,
They have gone to help and save.
But hear them crying, 'Do not leave us
'Mid these dreadful depths to drown;
Let us feel your arms of prayer around us,
Hold the ropes as we go down.'"

Morning and Evening Worship

S. N. HASKELL

The sanctuary service was taken from the view given Moses of the heavenly sanctuary, and the counterpart of that service consists of Christian duties which are in harmony with Christ's work in heaven. The highest type of Christianity is faith and works. Faith without works is dead, being alone. These works are to keep step with Christ's work in heaven.

There were three articles of furniture in the first apartment in the earthly sanctuary — the table of showbread, or "bread of his presence," the candlestick with its seven lamps, and the golden altar of incense. Heb. 9:2; Ex. 40:4, 5. The services connected with each of these articles taught essential, practical truths for every Christian. It is impossible to co-operate with Christ in his work as our high priest without a knowledge of these truths. In view of this fact, the prophet said, "Wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of salvation: the fear of the Lord is his treasure." Isa. 33:6.

What lesson was taught by the altar of incense and its service? It was the work of the priest to burn sweet incense upon the golden altar when he dressed the lamps every morning and evening. Ex. 30:7, 8. During this ceremony the whole multitude of the people were without, praying. Luke 1:9-11. It was at the time of this service that the angel Gabriel appeared to Zacharias and announced the birth of John. Luke 1:11-15.

Several events are associated together, namely, the offering of the morning and evening burnt offering, the offering of incense, the trimming of the lamps, and the morning and evening worship on the part of the people. Here lies the foundation of morning and evening worship in families, with a promise of God's special blessing. The families that neglected family worship in the days of Jeremiah were classed among the heathen, as shown by the following: "Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not upon thy name: for they have eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate." Jer. 10:25.

The judgments of the Lord fell upon those who burned strange incense. Lev. 10:1-3. But David prays, "Let my prayer be set forth before thee as incense; and the lifting up of my hands as the evening sacrifice." Ps. 141:2. Daniel considered praying three times a day, with his face toward Jerusalem, of such importance that rather than compromise this privilege he went into the lions' den. Daniel 6. Over one hundred psalms testify to the fact that David was a man of prayer and praise. "Evening, and morning, and at noon, will I pray, and cry aloud: and he shall hear my voice." Ps. 55:17. Again, "O come, let us worship and bow down: let us kneel before the Lord our Maker." Ps. 95:6.

In heaven there is an altar and censer with incense, and a service conducted by our great High Priest answering to this earthly morning and evening prayer. "There was given unto him much incense, that he should offer it with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. And the smoke of the incense, which came with the prayers of the saints, ascended up before God out of the angel's hand." Rev. 8:3, 4; 5:8. The incense represents the righteousness of Christ that makes our prayers acceptable in God's sight. Much incense is added, so when family worship is instituted on earth, the prayers of the family ascend, and Christ adds much of his righteousness, which makes them acceptable before God.

Christ rose early in the morning to pray. Cornelius had his season for prayer, and while praying was visited by the angel and instructed to send for Peter. The angel found Peter during his noon-time season of prayer. Acts 10. Peter and John attended the regular hour of prayer at the temple. Acts 3:1. Elijah and the prophets of old had their regular seasons of prayer. It was at the time of the evening oblation that the Lord answered Daniel's prayer. The Lord will hear prayer at all times, but he that regards morning and evening worship will find that the Lord especially regards it, and at such times there is an abundant supply of grace given to impart strength and wisdom to overcome the temptations of Satan.

"He Goeth Before Them"

T. E. BOWEN

It is said of the true shepherd, "He goeth before them." The sheep need the shepherd to guide them. They love to follow, but do not know the way.

All this is speaking of the Great Shepherd. He knoweth his sheep. "When he putteth forth his own sheep, he goeth before them, and the sheep follow him: for they know his voice." The sheep do not have to be told their true shepherd is before them. This they know. And, furthermore, it is said, "A stranger will they not follow." They will not follow him simply because he is a stranger.

There is great significance in all this just now. Some people are getting terribly perplexed because the people of God will not follow them. They blame everything and everybody except the right cause — themselves. The trouble is significantly apparent. They have the scent of the stranger upon their garments. Their voice betrays them.

Christ goeth on before his people. The Good Shepherd's voice can be heard ahead calling, "This is the way," "follow me." He is still on the old highway cast up for the remnant of the Lord to walk in, even the "path of his commandments." And rejoicingly his people are following. It requires true humility of soul to follow the Lord. Simply ad-

Church of the living God, awake!
  Arise, go forth at his command;
Behold the bonds of darkness break;
  The morning is at hand.

Then shall thy beauty win the earth,
  And alien hearts shall mercy crave,
When those who name the Name go forth
  To witness and to save.

Go forth in the eternal strength;
  One soul redeemed shall overweigh
All wealth and pomp and fame at length —
  Go work for God to-day!

His love would bid thee sloth forsake;
  Thy love shall bid his kingdom come;
Church of the living God, awake,

*The Word Made Flesh

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not. . . . And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth."

This chapter delineates the character and importance of the work of Christ. As one who understands his subject, John ascribes all power to Christ, and speaks of his greatness and majesty. He flashes forth divine rays of precious truth, as light from the sun. He presents Christ as the only Mediator between God and humanity.

(1) The doctrine of the incarnation of Christ in human flesh is a mystery, "even the mystery which hath been hid from ages and from generations." It is the great and profound mystery of godliness. "The Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us." Christ took upon himself human nature, a nature inferior to his heavenly nature. Nothing so shows the wonderful condescension of God as this. He "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son." John presents this wonderful subject with such simplicity that all may grasp the ideas set forth, and be enlightened. (2)

(1) Christ did not make believe take human nature; he did verily take it. He did in reality possess human nature. "As the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he also himself likewise took part of the same." He was the son of Mary; he was of the seed of David according to human descent. He is declared to be a man, even the Man Christ Jesus. "This Man," writes Paul, "was counted worthy of more glory than Moses, inasmuch as he who hath builded the house hath more honor than the house." (2)

(3) But while God's Word speaks of the humanity of Christ when upon this earth, it also speaks decidedly regarding his pre-existence. The Word existed as a divine being, even as the eternal Son of God, in union and oneness with his Father. From everlasting he was the Mediator of the covenant, the one in whom all nations of the earth, both Jews and Gentiles, if they accepted him, were to be blessed. "The Word was with God, and the Word was God." Before men or angels were created, the Word was with God, and was God.

(4) The world was made by him, "and without him was not anything made that was made." If Christ made all things, he existed before all things. The words spoken in regard to this are so decisive that no one need be left in doubt. Christ was God essentially, and in the highest sense. He was with God from all eternity, God over all, blessed forevermore.

(5) The Lord Jesus Christ, the divine Son of God, existed from eternity, a distinct person, yet one with the Father. He was the surpassing glory of heaven. He was the commander of the heavenly intelligences, and the adoring homage of the angels was received by him as his right. This was no robbery of God. "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way," he declares, "before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting, from the beginning, or ever the earth was. When there were no depths, I was brought forth; when there were no fountains abounding with water. Before the mountains were settled, before the hills was I brought forth; while as yet he had not made the earth, nor the fields, nor the highest part of the dust of the world. When he prepared the heavens, I was there: when he set a compass upon the face of the depth."

(4) There are light and glory in the truth that Christ was one with the Father before the foundation of the world was laid. This is the light shining in a dark place, making it resplendent with divine, original glory. This truth, infinitely mysterious in itself, explains other mysterious and otherwise unexplainable truths, while it is enshrined in light, unapproachable and incomprehensible.

"Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." "The people which sat in darkness saw great light; and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." Here the pre-existence of Christ and the purpose of his manifestation to our world are presented as living beams of light from the eternal throne. "Now gather thyself in troops, O daughter of troops: he hath laid siege against us: they shall smite the Judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek. But thou, Bethlehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel; whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." "We preach Christ crucified," declares Paul, "unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God."

(5) That God should thus be manifest in the flesh is indeed a mystery; and without the help of the Holy Spirit we can not hope to comprehend this subject. The most humbling lesson that man has to learn is the nothingness of human wisdom, and the folly of trying, by his own unaided efforts, to find out God. He may exert his intellectual powers to the utmost, he may have what the world calls a superior education, yet he may still be ignorant in God's eyes. The ancient philosophers boasted of their wisdom; but how did it weigh in the scale with God? (6) Solomon had great learning; but his wisdom was foolishness; for he did not know how to stand in moral independence, free from sin, in the strength of a character molded after the divine similitude. Solomon has told us the result of his research, his painstaking efforts, his persevering inquiry. He pronounces his wisdom altogther vanity.

By wisdom the world knew not God. Their estimation of the divine character, their imperfect knowledge of his attributes, did not enlarge and expand their mental conception. Their minds were not ennobled in conformity to the divine will, but they plunged into the grossest idolatry. "Professing themselves to be wise, they became fools, and changed the glory of the uncorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds, and four-footed beasts, and creeping things." This is the worth of all requirements and knowledge apart from Christ.

"I am the Way, the Truth, and the Life," Christ declares; "no one cometh unto the Father, but by me." Christ is invested with power to give life to all creatures. "As the living Father hath sent me," he says, "and I live by the Father; so he that eateth me, even he shall live by me. . . . It is the spirit that quickeneth; the flesh profiteth nothing; the words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Christ is not here referring to his doctrine, but to his person, the divinity of his character. "Verily, verily, I say unto you," he says again, "The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live. For as the Father hath life in himself; so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; and hath given him authority to execute judgment also, because he is the Son of man."

The plan of salvation was designed to redeem the fallen race, to give them another trial. Christ was appointed to the office of Mediator from the creation of God, set up from everlasting to be our substitute and surety. Before the world was made, it was arranged that the divinity of Christ should be enshrouded in humanity. "A body," said Christ, "hast thou prepared me." But he did not come in human form until the fulness of time had expired. Then he came to our world, a babe in Bethlehem.

(1) No one born into the world, not even the most gifted of God's children, has ever been accorded such demonstration of joy as greeted the Babe born in Bethlehem. Angels of God sang his praises over the hills and plains of Bethlehem. "Glory to God in the highest," they sang, "and on earth peace, good will toward men." O that to-day the human family could recognize this song! The declaration then made, the note then struck, the tune then started, will swell and extend to the end of time, and resound to the ends of the earth. It is glory to God, it is peace on earth, good will to men. When the Sun of Righteousness shall arise with healing in his wings, the song then started in the hills of Bethlehem will be re-echoed by the voice of a great multitude, as the voice of many waters, saying, "Allelujah, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth."

(2) By his obedience to all the commandments of God, Christ wrought out a redemption for man. This was not done by going out of himself to another, but by taking humanity into himself. Thus Christ gave to humanity an existence out of himself. To bring humanity into Christ, to bring the fallen race into oneness with divinity, is the work of redemption. Christ took human nature that men might be one with him as he is one with the Father, that God may love man as he loves his only begotten Son, that men may be partakers of the divine nature, and be complete in him.

The Holy Spirit, which proceeds from the only begotten Son of God, binds the human agent, body, soul, and spirit, to the perfect, divine-human nature of Christ. This union is represented by the union of the vine and the branches. Finite man is united to the manhood of Christ. Through faith human nature is assimilated with Christ's nature. We are made one with God in Christ.

The Spirit of Prophecy in the Church

D. H. KRESS, M. D.

In the past God's people have been reproved for wrong-doing by prophets sent from God, but in many instances they refused the message and messenger, claiming to be right, or righteous, and not in need of the warning or correction. Jeremiah was cast into a dungeon because he dared to tell the king of Israel that his ways were not right. John was beheaded for the same reason.

Many are led astray by trusting to impressions. This is never a safe course. A self-satisfied spirit is no surety or evidence of being right. How, then, may we know whether we are right or wrong? There need be no uncertainty about this: "To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." If our impressions or actions are not in harmony with both the law and the testimony of God's Spirit, we may rest assured that they are wrong and not to be relied upon; for the righteousness of God is "witnessed by the law and the prophets." Rom. 3: 21. If our course is right, the law will witness to it, and so will the spirit of prophecy.

Anciently, when the people did evil before the Lord and forsook the law unconsciously, thinking they were doing right and keeping the law, the record says: Thou "testifiedst against them, that thou mightest bring them again unto thy law." Neh. 9:29. This reveals both the object and the need of the spirit of prophecy in the church, "that thou mightest bring them again unto thy law." The law could not witness that they were right until they believed the prophets.

The remnant which keep the commandments of God have the testimony of Jesus Christ to witness to God's righteousness. Without the testimony of Jesus Christ there is danger of deception, danger of mistaking our own righteousness for God's righteousness, and being satisfied with it. Man may claim to be right, but if the righteousness which he claims is not witnessed by the law and by God's Spirit in his prophets, it is not God's righteousness; it can be nothing more than self-righteousness.

The children of Israel claimed to keep God's law, they claimed to be righteous; but when they were corrected, instead of acknowledging that they were wrong, they went about justifying their course or establishing their own righteousness, and stoned the prophets because they would not witness to it.

God still, as anciently, corrects his people by his Spirit in his prophet. To all who will take heed and refuse to trust in their impressions, or their own righteousness, and will do according to all God commands, it will be said, as it was to Noah, "Thee have I seen righteous." The Lord, through his law and the spirit of prophecy, will witness to his own righteousness still. When in possession of it, there can be no condemnation. We know we are righteous, not because we feel righteous, but because God pronounces our course righteous. "Who shall lay anything to the charge of God's elect? It is God that justifieth. Who is he that condemneth?"

God's Strong Reasons

S. N. HASKELL

ALMOST every man has some strong personality. There are reasons for this. Such a thing does not come by chance. These strong personalities fit men and women for some specific work. It may be a good work, or it may be a bad work. God takes an account of this in the judgment. He says, "I will make mention of Rahab and Babylon to them that know me: behold Philistia, and Tyre, with Ethiopia; this man was born there. And of Zion it shall be said, This and that man was born in her: and the Highest himself shall establish her. The Lord shall count, when he writeth up the people, that this man was born there." Ps. 87:46.

The early influences of a man's life, and even those before his birth, have much to do in making these strong characteristics. All this God recognizes, and when a religious reform is to be brought about, he has even sent his angel to instruct mothers how to live and how to train their children. Judges 13; Luke 1:11-17. Because of this no man can take glory to himself. Sometimes God has used wicked men to do a great work for him. Cyrus, the Persian king, furnishes a striking example of this. Yet Cyrus never knew the Lord. Isa. 45:1-5.

A knowledge of these circumstances and conditions that reveals, before they are born, what these men will do is God's strong reason why men should believe in him. He challenges all false gods and unbelief of every kind upon this point. "Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob. Let them bring them forth, and show us what shall happen: let them show the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them; or declare us things for to come. Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods: yea, do good, or do evil, that we may be dismayed, and behold it together." Isa. 41:21-26.

This knowledge of future results, from present conditions and their relation to the future, is a divine characteristic of the Creator of the heavens and the earth. None can reveal this but he who knows the past, the present, and the future. It is One who can control circumstances that shapes character, that will fit men for a certain work when they seek him. Such a Being can give warnings through his prophets. His prophets are his mouthpiece. 2 Chron. 36:12. It is not in man of himself, but it is the gift that God has placed in his church, for the benefit of his people. "Where there is no vision, the people perish." Prov. 29:18. "If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream." Num. 12:6. God's people are destroyed for lack of knowledge; and because they reject knowledge, he will reject them. Hosea 4:6. "Believe his prophets, so shall ye prosper." 2 Chron. 20:20.

"The Old, Old Story"

Let no strange fire be kindled
On the altar of the Lord!
Or oil, unbeaten, mingled
In sacrifice be poured;
For God most high is jealous
Of wisdom man assumes,
His righteous wrath is zealous
Lest human pride presumes.

All hail the blessed Jesus,
Earth's lowly paths that trod.
Who died, from death to save us —
Now on the throne of God!
Go, go proclaim his glory —
The cradle, cross, and crown;
Go tell the old, old story,
Till all the Saviour own.

Behold! the day is breaking —
The glory shining forth!
The Gentile nations shaking
Through all the wide, wide earth!
What fills the world with glory,
Makes human wisdom dross?
The same, the old, old story
Of Jesus and the cross!

Depending on Christ

MRS. E. G. WHITE

Let not those connected with the Master's service look to men of large ability to do their work for them. God stands behind the one who does his best. Let the workers rely on divine power, and God will impress the hearts of those for whom they labor. Great good may be accomplished by the sincere, humble worker, who realizes that success does not depend on appearances, but on the One who has given him his commission.

The reason that the number of workers is so much smaller than it should be is that men are looking at their supposed weakness, and putting their trust in those whose appearance and capabilities will, they suppose, bring success. Thus spiritual consumption is brought into the church, and souls are dying because the spiritual life-blood is poisoned. Men have depended on men till they are strengthless.

God desires a different mold placed on his work. Let men go forth to labor, trusting in the Lord, and he will go with them, convicting and converting souls. One worker may be a ready speaker, another a ready writer; another may have the gift of sincere, earnest, fervent prayer, another the gift of singing. Another may have special power to explain the word of God with clearness. And each gift is to become a power for God because he co-operates with the worker. To one God gives the word of wisdom, to another knowledge, to another faith. But all are to work under the same head. The diversity of gifts leads to a diversity of operations, "but it is the same God which worketh all in all."

Let no man despise the supposed lesser gifts. Let all go to work. Let no one fold his hands in unbelief because he thinks that he can do no mighty work. Cease looking at self. Look to your Leader. In meekness, sincerity, and love do what you can. Do your best in faith, and out of weakness you shall be made strong. God will certainly bless whole-hearted workers.

The world is enshrouded in the darkness of error. Satan and his angels are urging on their warfare against the truth. We must have help. But the help we need will not come from human beings. We must look to him who has said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." "These signs shall follow them that believe: In my name they shall cast out devils; they shall speak with new tongues; they shall take up serpents; and if they drink any deadly thing, it shall not hurt them; they shall lay hands on the sick, and they shall recover." "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

Claim this promise, instead of going to men for help. There stands among you the Mighty Counselor of the ages, inviting you to place your confidence in him. Shall we turn from him to uncertain human beings, who are as wholly dependent on God as we ourselves are? Have we not fallen far below our privileges? Have we not been guilty of expecting so little that we have not asked for what God is longing to give?

In a variety of figures matters have been presented to me regarding the church-members who are dwarfed in spirituality because they do not look to Jesus, their ever-present help in time of trouble. I see men bearing a heavy burden of responsibility, but they are not gaining the strength of hope and courage by exercising faith in God. The promise is, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." But when in trouble they think that they must go to earthly friends, telling them their troubles, and begging for help. Under trying circumstances, unbelief comes in, and the way seems dark. And all the time Jesus, the great Burden-bearer, stands beside them, saying, Come unto me, and I will give you the rest for which you are longing. Why do we turn from him?

My brethren and sisters, show more confidence in Jesus. Turn not from the waters of Lebanon to seek refreshing at broken cisterns, which can hold no water. Have faith in God. Praise him with heart and voice. God demands heart and life service. Reach higher and still higher, and catch divine rays from him who is light and peace and joy and gladness. Do not wait for some one more ready of speech, but do what you can in the meekness of the great Master, who gave his life for you, that his joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full.

There are many souls in the darkness of error. There is abundant work for all who know the truth. Approach the people in a persuasive, kindly manner, full of sympathy and love. Christ is ever passing by, with grace and power that will enable you to present the gospel of salvation. Reach out after the souls ready to perish. Call the attention of the people to the Lamb of God, who takes away the sin of the world.

No human words can express the preciousness of the ministration of the word and the Holy Spirit. No human tongue can portray to the finite mind the value of receiving by living faith the blessing that is given as Jesus of Nazareth passeth by. Many have a deep sense of need,— a need that earthly riches or pleasure can not supply; but they know not how to obtain that for which they are longing.

The gospel of Christ is from beginning to end a gospel of saving grace. It is a distinctive and controlling idea. It will be a help to the needy, light for eyes that are blind, and a guide to the souls seeking for the sure foundation. Full and everlasting salvation is within the reach of every soul. Christ is waiting and longing to speak pardon, and to impart the freely offered grace. He is watching and waiting, saying, as he said to the blind man at the gate of Jericho, What wilt thou that I should do unto thee? I will take away your sins, and wash you in my blood.

In the highways and byways of life there are souls to be saved. The blind are groping in darkness. Give them the light, and God will bless your efforts.

Christ is our Leader. He presents before his soldiers the plan of the battle. He points out the imminent peril of the conflict, and enjoins every one to count the cost. As he shows us the preparation that we must make for the battle, he assures us that we shall have divine assistance. In our human weakness, we shall be enabled to do the deeds of omnipotence.

Christ takes his soldiers to an eminence, and shows them the vast confederacy arrayed against them. He reminds them that they are not warring against flesh and blood, but against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. He reminds them that they are fighting for eternal life. The heavenly universe are marshaled for the conflict, with Christ, the Commander of the forces of heaven, at their head. Infirmities compass humanity, but in the strength that Christ gives, we may be more than conquerors. "Be of good cheer," he declares; "I have overcome the world."

"Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? shall tribulation, or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword? As it is written, For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter. Nay, in all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us. For I am persuaded, that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

The First Apostasy

G. B. THOMPSON

SIN had its origin with Lucifer, the light-bearer and attendant of God's throne. It originated with one who was a leader, a commander among the angelic host, and who stood next in power and authority to the only begotten Son. The heart of this exalted angel became lifted up because of his beauty. Though perfect from the day he was created, there came a change. He began to admire himself. Pride and self-exaltation came into his heart, and becoming dissatisfied with his exalted position, he sought equality with his Creator. And the disaffection which was in his heart he spread among the angelic host, and nearly one half this sinless company, sympathizing with him, were cast out of heaven. Here is a mystery no human mind can understand. How sin could thus originate is inexplainable; but the fact remains, nevertheless.

It is exceedingly interesting, as well as timely, to trace the working of this subtle and mysterious apostasy in its incipient stages. The Spirit of God has opened before us some of the steps taken by the covering cherub in instigating this terrible rebellion. I will quote a few extracts: —

"But little by little, he [Lucifer] began to seek his own honor, and to employ his powers to attract attention and win praise to himself." — "Great Controversy," page 317.

As stated, selfishness and pride lay at the bottom of the strife and commotion which had entered to mar the harmony among the angelic host. Yet while fomenting discord and strife, and seeking to overturn the government of heaven, and set up a government of his own instead, Lucifer denied that he had any such intentions.

"He had artfully presented his side of the question, employing sophistry and fraud to secure his objects. His power to deceive was very great. By disguising himself in a cloak of falsehood, he had gained an advantage. All his acts were so clothed with mystery, that it was difficult to disclose to the angels the true nature of his work. Until fully developed, it could not be made to appear the evil thing it was; his disaffection would not be seen to be rebellion. Even the loyal angels could not fully discern his character, or see to what his work was leading.

"Lucifer had at first so conducted his temptations that he himself stood uncommitted. The angels whom he could not bring fully to his side, he accused of indifference to the interests of heavenly beings. The very work which he himself was doing, he charged upon the loyal angels. It was his policy to perplex with subtle arguments concerning the purposes of God. Everything that was simple he shrouded in mystery, and by artful perversion cast doubt upon the plainest statements of Jehovah." — "Patriarchs and Prophets," page 47.

This tells the story in brief. Lucifer's tremendous powers of deception were largely increased by the artful disguise with which he clothed himself. Though at war with his Creator, he posed as a loyal angel. He denied the charges preferred against him, and claimed that he had in no way changed, but was seeking to have such improvements made in the management of the universe as would tend to a better form of government, and he was therefore in no way responsible for the discord and strife which had come in to mar the serenity of heavenly affairs. With high and pretentious claims he concealed the iniquitous designs which filled his heart.

But while openly professing loyalty to the truth, secretly, and with mysterious sophistry, he continued sowing the seeds of rebellion, and strengthening his hold on the sympathies of the angels. And under this mask he was able to lead millions of the holy and pure angels, with clear intellects and minds capable of penetrating deep problems, into open revolt against God.

We are also instructed concerning the charges which he preferred against the Creator.

"The discord which his own course had caused in heaven, Satan charged upon the government of God. All evil he declared to be the result of the divine administration. He claimed that it was his own object to improve upon the statutes of Jehovah." — Ibid., page 48.

The real reason for the discord was his departure from the divine precepts. But this Lucifer denied, and, blinded by sin, he assigned another reason. He set forth as the reason for his actions that there was a great wrong in the organization of the government of heaven. The plan in the heavenly court, it seems, was for some one to stand at the head of administrative affairs, and the Son had been placed in this high position. This system of organization was contrary to Lucifer's ideas, so a difficulty developed in heaven.

"As one aggrieved, he related the preference God had given Jesus to the neglect of himself. He told them that henceforth all the sweet liberty the angels had enjoyed was at an end; for had not a ruler been appointed over them, to whom they from henceforth must yield servile honor? He stated to them that he had called them together to assure them that he no longer would submit to this invasion of his rights and theirs; that never would he again bow down to Christ; that he would take the honor upon himself which should have been conferred upon him, and would be the commander of all who would submit to follow him and obey his voice." — "Spirit of Prophecy," Vol. I, page 19.

Disguising the fact that in his heart he coveted the position held by the Son of God himself, he represented to the angels that this form of government was monarchical, and an absolute tyranny. That which we now call the papacy he claimed had been established, in principle, in the management of the heavenly government, and that to submit to this arrangement would be to have their liberties abridged.

"The Son of God warned and entreated him not to venture thus to dishonor his Maker, and bring ruin upon himself. But instead of yielding, Satan represented to those who loved him, that he had been wrongly judged, that his dignity was not respected, and that his liberty was to be abridged." — "Great Controversy," page 317.

While in his heart envy and jealousy were urging him on in his rebellious course, he stood before the heavenly family as the great exponent and defender of liberty. It was liberty he wanted for himself and those with whom he had been associated in the work of the divine administration. But while disguising himself under the mask of standing in defense of the rights of the angels, and against a system of tyranny which he claimed was in heaven, he himself had in his heart the seeds of all the despotic power which has cursed the earth since the introduction of sin.

The preceding paragraphs from the spirit of prophecy, studied in the light of the following, which has recently come to us from the same source, are exceedingly interesting: "God calls upon all his ministers and all his medical workers to be on guard. Those who are following the devising and the plans and the subterfuges of the one so determined to have his own way are misrepresenting their Heavenly Father; for God is not instructing him. Evil angels are leading him on to do a work similar to that which was begun in heaven."

What God Requires of His People

C. M. SNOW

WE have long been looking for a time to come when the work of the enemy would be so systematized and centralized that the forces of this world and the numerous Christian churches could be directed by one head. We have come to a place now where we can see that this very work is being rapidly wrought out. We see the backward movement along religious liberty lines that foretokens the religious persecution which the book of Revelation tells us will be brought to bear upon all of God's people in the close of this dispensation.

There is a great upheaval in the religious affairs of the Old World at the present time; and while, at times, it may appear that religious liberty principles are triumphing in certain parts, we can see underneath and through it all the masterful manipulations of our great enemy.

The Surrendered Life

Is it hard for the flower when summer comes
To turn its face to the sun?
Is it hard for the flaming red orb to sink
When its course for the day is run?
Is it hard for the dew to moisten the earth
When night's dark shade doth fall?
Is it hard for the bird to answer again
The note of its mate's sweet call?

Or merely for man is it hard to achieve
The will of the Mind above —
For man who both daily and hourly receives
Fresh proof of the Father's love?
Is the only strong straining against God's will
To be on the part of his child?
While everything, joyous, fulfils his behest,
From mart of the tangled wild?

All life that is fully surrendered to God
Sweeps on with a step serene,
Moved by the bounding, unlimited force
That throbs in the earth's fresh green.
Thus, as tree and flow'ret in forest and glade
Adorn, without effort, the sod,
The fragrance and power may be felt of a life
Wholly surrendered to God.

Be Vigilant

MRS. E. G. WHITE

I HAVE a positive message from the Lord to those who are standing as watchmen in the Lord's cause. There must be an earnest contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. If you weaken your presentation of evidence in regard to the dangers of the present time, you will lose an advantage that should be maintained. Hold fast to the One who has given you power to become the children of God. Let your life be hid with Christ in God. Satan is not dead. He is not indifferent or careless. He is working with all deceivableness of unrighteousness, striving to lead men and women to deny the faith and enter the path where he leads the way.

Many who profess godliness are asleep. They do not discern between righteousness and unrighteousness. Some have cherished unconsecrated traits of character till they are spiritually blind. O that every one would believe and live the truth as it is in Jesus! "Learn of me," said the greatest Teacher the world has ever known, "and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light." The lesson that every soul needs to learn is to copy the perfect pattern. The lessons of the King of peace, when practised, reveal that Christ's ways are ways of pleasantness and all his paths are peace.

Many who suppose that they are fitted to give counsel and instruction to others need first to learn from the Great Teacher what is truth. Many who think that they are wise enough to teach others are building upon a sandy foundation. Such need to offer to the Lord Jesus Christ the prayer, "Lord, teach me thy way." Obedience to the truth will sanctify the soul, making men and women Christlike in thought, word, and deed. The Lord calls for earnest, whole-hearted, sensible men and women, whose habits and practises and ideas are brought into conformity to the Word, and who are ever ready to stand in defense of the truth.

"I beseech you, brethren, mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them. For they that are such serve not our Lord Jesus Christ, but . . . by good words and fair speeches deceive the hearts of the simple. For your obedience is come abroad unto all men. I am glad therefore on your behalf: but yet I would have you wise unto that which is good, and simple concerning evil. . . . Now to him that is of power to stablish you according to my gospel, and the preaching of Jesus Christ, according to the revelation of the mystery, which was kept secret since the world began, but now is made manifest, and by the scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, made known to all nations for the obedience of faith: to God only wise, be glory through Jesus Christ forever." Rom. 16:17-27.

No Change in the Message

I have been instructed that the messages given in the past are to be revived, and that it is essential that as brethren and sisters, we be joined together in the bonds of sacred union in the accomplishment of the work before us. The world knows very little of the truths that we believe, and in clear, straight lines the message for this time must be given to all the world. The message comes to me, "Wake up the watchmen. Let every one now come into working order."

Certain ones are presented before me, with a representation of their words and works and influence. I am not to retract one word of the message I have borne. My message is, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked." In the near future all will be judged. Very soon every hidden thing will be brought to light. O how untiringly the mystery of iniquity has worked! How many souls there are who will be lost as the result of the evil working of human agencies.

I am instructed that by pen and voice I must bear a straight, clear testimony, and that I must never call sin righteousness. The apostle declares, "And I, brethren, when I came to you, came not with excellency of speech or of wisdom, declaring unto you the testimony of God. For I determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified. And I was with you in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling. And my speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit, and of power: that your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God."

The Lord permits the present condition of things to exist in order that those who have had an experience in proclaiming the truth may now rehearse the past experience of God's servants, and bring to the front the testimonies that are more valuable than gold.

"Be Strong in the Lord"

We are to do as we are instructed in the following scriptures: —

"Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the Spirit, which is the word of God." Eph. 6:10-17.

"If there be therefore any consolation in Christ, if any comfort of love, if any fellowship of the Spirit, if any bowels and mercies, fulfil ye my joy, that ye be like-minded, having the same love, being of one accord, of one mind. Let nothing be done through strife or vainglory; but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves. Look not every man on his own things, but every man also on the things of others. Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross. Wherefore God also hath highly exalted him, and given him a name which is above every name: that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth: and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Phil. 2:1-11.

"Wherefore, my beloved, as ye have always obeyed, not as in my presence only, but now much more in my absence, work out your own salvation with fear and trembling. For it is God which worketh in you both to will and to do of his good pleasure. Do all things without murmurings and disputings: that ye may be blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." Verses 12-15.

Presenting the Evidences Received

My brethren, the value of the evidences of truth that we have received during the past half century, is above estimate. These evidences are as treasure hidden in a field. Search for them. Study the Bible truths that for fifty years have been calling us out from the world. Present this evidence in clear, plain lines. Those who have been long in the truth, and those who have recently received the truth, must now dig for the buried heavenly treasure. Let every man work to the point. Study the Word of God. Revive the evidences given in the past. "Search the Scriptures," Christ said; "for in them ye think ye have eternal life: and they are they which testify of me."

Those who stand before the people as teachers of truth are to grapple with great themes. They are not to occupy precious time in talking of trivial subjects. Let them study the word, and preach the word. Let the word be in their hands as a sharp, two-edged sword. Let it testify to past truths, and show what is to be in the future.

Christ came from heaven to give to John the great, wonderful truths that are to shape our lives, and that by us are to be proclaimed to the world. We are to keep abreast of the times, bearing a clear, intelligent testimony, guided by the unction of the Holy Spirit.

A Plea for Unity

One thing we must not do: we must not draw away from our brethren, ministers or physicians, who have been following the Lord, and who have demonstrated that the Lord is with them. To those standing at the head of the work I would say, Come close to your brethren. Do not pick up suppositions and make them facts. We need to use tenderness and true courtesy in our dealings with one another. We are to strive earnestly to win souls, and to remove the difficulties that are causing division. The Lord forbid that we should neglect this part of the work. We are not to repel men, but to draw them to Christ. I bear this message to every one, Come close to the ones who are tempted, and try to remove the impressions made by the enemy.

The true work of grace in the heart will unite believers to Christ and to one another. They become partakers of the divine nature, escaping the corruption that is in the world through lust. They are one with Christ in God. And as he loves his Son, the Father loves the members of the fallen human race who are changed from sin to holiness.

This is the wonderful representation given in the prayer recorded in the seventeenth chapter of John. It is the privilege of men and women to have an enduring union with Christ, a union that opens to them the source of rich and eternal happiness, which outlives all earthly, sinful enjoyment.

Those who become one with Christ in God are under the sanctification of the Holy Spirit. Their lives blend with the life of Christ. True believers in Christ, his servants, chosen of God and precious, will speak and act in such a way as to reflect light, to the saving of many souls. They will receive power from God to become his children, accepted in the Beloved, acknowledged and rewarded as the purchase of the blood of Christ. They will receive their reward in the great day when every one is judged by the things written in the book.

I am instructed to say that we are to continue to stand on affirmative ground. Strong, decided testimonies in favor of the truth are to be borne, but we are to give no occasion for any one to charge us with being inconsiderate or unjust. We are to do all we possibly can to win souls to Christ. He went through the shame and agony of the death on the cross to save souls to whom Satan was holding out every inducement to allure them to his side. The Lord's standard-bearers are to carry the work forward with power, yet in Christlike love for souls. They are to show a decided care for those who are being drawn away. They are to urge them to face about. They are to fight for the souls of those for whom Christ has died. Too often there is shown an inclination to stand apart from those who need to be helped. Let us remember that every soul that is led to return to the first love is a soul gained for Christ. Let us not pass on in indifference, leaving the tempted ones to become the prey of the enemy. We are to watch for souls as they that must give an account.

I say to all, Press together, press together. Be very critical in regard to yourselves, but exercise all the tenderness of Christ toward your brethren. I entreat the Lord's people to cease to criticize one another, and to give themselves to the proclamation of the truth for this time. The Spirit of God is being withdrawn from the earth, and drunkenness, insanity, revelry, and crime are rapidly increasing. There is before us a terrible crisis. The lives of many will go out in darkness. We need now to bow before God in true humility of soul; for the day of clouds and thick darkness is fast approaching.

The last great conflict is before us; but help is to come to all who love God and obey his law, and the earth, the whole earth, is to be lighted with the glory of God. "Another angel" is to come down from heaven. This angel represents the giving of the loud cry, which is to come from those who are preparing to cry mightily, with a strong voice, "Babylon the great is fallen, is fallen, and is become the habitation of devils, and the hold of every foul spirit, and a cage of every unclean and hateful bird."

We have a testing message to give, and I am instructed to say to our people, Unify, unify. But we are not to unify with those who are departing from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. With our hearts sweet and kind and true, we are to go forth to proclaim the message, giving no heed to those who lead away from the truth.

Let those who shall read these lines wash their robes of character and make them white in the blood of the Lamb. We are to go forth under the Holy Spirit's guidance, studying how to save souls. We are to put our entire trust in the Lord Jesus, and pray and talk and work in faith.

How Is a True Prophet Known?

It is not by any one test alone that we determine whether or not a prophet is a prophet of the Lord. Neither can he be judged by a human standard. His prophecies are not arraigned at the bar of human reason. If so, then human reason is set above the prophet. Who by searching can find out God? "Canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is as high as heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than hell; what canst thou know? the measure thereof is longer than the earth, and broader than the sea. If he cut off, and shut up, or gather together, then who can hinder him? for he knoweth vain men: he seeth wickedness also; will he not then consider it? for vain man would be wise, though man be born like a wild ass's colt." Job 11:7-12.

The true prophet further unfolds the plans of God. There is an infinity in the plans of God. The mysteries of the past, and the present, and the future are all alike outspread before God. A prophet is a mouthpiece for God. The relation of a true prophet of God to God was illustrated by the relation of Moses and Aaron. "And the Lord said unto Moses, See, I have made thee a god to Pharaoh: and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet." "Thou shalt speak unto him, and put words in his mouth: and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what ye shall do. And he shall be thy spokesman unto the people: and he shall be, even he shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God."

The Bible has given many tests of a true prophet. These tests are found here and there all through the Bible. To study this question from the Bible standpoint is to study the life and character of the prophets of the Bible; for a prophet in one age of the world is the same as a prophet in any other age of the world. God has never left this world without a prophet or a priest. There have been times when there has been no

Watching for the Master

LONG has the world, the Master's rule disowning,
  Hating his presence and his holy sway,
Cried, "Where is now the promise of his coming,
  And where the signs of the long-promised day?"

But still above the scoff, and taunt, and laughter,
  The still small voice ariseth, "Watch and pray;"
And still to cheer the hours of lonely waiting,
  "Behold, I come," I hear the Master say.

It may be that the night will yet grow darker,
  It may be that the storms are not yet spent;
It may be that the times will wax more evil,
  Earth braving heaven and scorning to repent.

It may be that the church's eye shall weary,
  That hope, so long deferred, at last shall faint,
That dark delay the buoyant heart may sadden,
  And shake the faith of many a weary saint.

Still as we hear the Master's daily saying —
  "Behold, I come: awake, arise, prepare!"
For but a little, then there sounds the summons,
  "Ascend, my saints, to meet me in the air!"

Then end at once our weary days of watching;
  Cometh the vision and the vernal day,
Cometh the Master to the waiting household;
  'Tis sunlight bursts, the shadows flee away.

Error and darkness hide their heads forever,
  Truth, life, and righteousness make up our morn;
Earth shall at last arise in holier splendor
  Than when at first in perfect beauty born.

A Message to Church-Members

MRS. E. G. WHITE

GOD has instructed me to say to his people, ministers and lay members, "Take your stand on higher ground. Move steadily onward and upward in the path that Jesus trod. Do not trust in your own opinions. Sanctification through the truth is your only safety." The Lord God of Israel would have his people stand in his strength, and in his might, receiving to impart. He will uphold and sustain those who serve him with mind and heart and strength.

We need to understand what it means to put on Christ, what it means to have an experimental knowledge of the grace of Christ, and a continually increasing faith.

Speaking of the mystery "which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God," Paul says, "Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery; . . (1) to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be made known by the church the manifold wisdom of God." Not only to those living in this world, but to the principalities and powers in heavenly places is the church on this earth to reveal the glory of God.

A Royal Name

God chose from among the Gentiles a people for himself, and gave to them the name of Christian. This is a royal name, given to those who join themselves to Christ. It is of this name that James is speaking when he says, "Do not rich men oppress you, and draw you before the judgment-seats? Do not they blaspheme that worthy name by the which ye are called?" And Peter says: "If any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf." "Rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye; for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified."

O that God's people would take him at his word, and lay hold of the wonderful treasure of knowledge opened to them! O that they could realize the simplicity of the faith and love that means so much to them!

Words of Instruction

"The elders which are among you," Peter says, "I exhort, who also am an elder, and a witness of the sufferings of Christ, and also a partaker of the glory which shall be revealed." He who is chosen to fill the office of elder is not, because of this, to become self-exalted. Let him remember that the office does not make the man, but that before angels and before men he is to honor his office.

"Feed the flock of God which is among you, taking the oversight thereof, not by constraint, but willingly; not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind; neither as being lords over God's heritage, but being ensamples to the flock."

The teachers of the word of God are first to learn of Christ, that in spirit and word and act they may represent him.

"And when the chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away."

"Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder. Yea, all of you be subject one to another, . . . for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Humble yourselves therefore under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time." You may sometimes feel that you are wronged, abused, misjudged, but looking to Jesus, remember the words, "Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

Our Example and Our Rule

We have before us the highest, holiest example. In thought, word, and deed Jesus was sinless. Perfection marked all that he did. He points us to the path that he trod, saying, "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

We have a perfect rule — the word of the living God. This word he has given us as our guide and counselor. The psalmist says, "Thy word have I hid in mine heart, that I might not sin against thee." And in Paul's letter to Timothy we read, "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

Christians, those who are to represent God in the world, are not to seek for doctrines that are new and strange. They are not to pry into the mysteries of the future life. Their part is to make their life in this world such as God can approve. They are to practise the lessons that God has given.

Different Instrumentalities

God has not given to any one man all the knowledge and wisdom. He entrusts to different ones the different gifts needed for the accomplishment of the work to be done in this world.

When God gave Moses instruction regarding the building of the tabernacle, he said: —

"See, I have called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah: and I have filled him with the Spirit of God, in wisdom, and in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship. . . . And I, behold, I have given with him Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan: and in the hearts of all that are wise hearted I have put wisdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee."

Many of God's people are to go forth with our publications into places where the third angel's message has never been proclaimed. The work of the canvasser-evangelist, whose heart is imbued with the Holy Spirit, is fraught with wonderful possibilities for good. The presentation of the truth, in love and simplicity, from house to house, is in harmony with the instruction that Christ gave his disciples when he sent them out on their first missionary tour. By songs of praise, humble, heartfelt prayers, and a simple presentation of truth in the family circle, many will be reached. The divine worker will be present to send conviction to hearts. "I am with you alway," is his promise. With the assurance of the abiding presence of such a helper, we may labor with faith and hope and courage.

Every church should be a light in the world. If there is in your church a deadness, a stagnation, come together, as the disciples did before the day of Pentecost, and plead with God until you receive the light of life. Then let the light shine to all around you. Do not go on from week to week, from year to year, without knowing whether or not you are in the love of God. When Jesus went away, he promised to send the Holy Spirit, and we have a right to claim that promise. God wants us to work in the power of the Spirit. He wants us to be guided and controlled by the living, abiding principles that will keep us in the truth.

God has not placed any soul on the judgment-seat. We are not to dissect the work and character of others. Each one has enough to do to attend to the work that has been given him. Every one is to bear his burden in the place where he has been appointed to labor, doing his work with the perfection that will give character and influence to the cause of God. This is what the Lord expects of every conference president. It is what he expects of every worker in every line, and of every church-member. Each one is to stand at his post of duty. When God's people act their part, in their appointed places, there will come to them a freedom, a light, a power, that will enable them to endure the seeing of him who is invisible.

Does God Forsake an Old Prophet?

Any humane government pensions its old soldiers. A responsibility is felt to look after every dependent family whose husband and father has served the government faithfully until old age has come upon him. Provision was made in the law of Moses for those who had officially served the Lord fifty years. God never leaves his people because they are old, if they have continued faithfully in his service. "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." These were the words of David in his old age. The prophet Isaiah uttered the following: "Thus saith the Lord that made thee, that formed thee from the womb, which will help thee: Fear not, O Jacob, my servant." Again, "Harken unto me, O house of Jacob, and all the remnant of the house of Israel, which are borne by me from the belly, which are carried from the womb: and even to your old age I am he; and even to hoar hairs will I carry you: I have made, and I will bear; even I will carry, and will deliver you." Such is the character of the God of the Bible. It is the God that I am serving and have served for over half a century. I love him, for he first loved me. It is a common thing for man to be deceived, but we can not deceive God. When God calls a man or a woman to stand in the forefront of the battle for over two thirds of their lifetime, then in their old age do you think that God will leave them to the buffetings of Satan?

There are two principles in the work of God that should never be forgotten. God never had two leading prophets at the same time. There were often many prophets in Israel. At one time there were over seventy. There are eighteen mentioned in the New Testament. He never has been in such straits as to confine himself to one when he chose to speak through more then one; and yet he never has set an aged prophet aside when faithfulness has marked his life. David was an old man, and he committed very grievous sins, but God established his testimony even upon his death-bed. No one took his place until he closed his eyes in death. There were other prophets while he lived, even when driven from his throne because of his sin, but none of them took his place. God gave him an opportunity to repent, which he did, and the Lord restored him to his throne. The story of this is familiar to the readers of this paper.

Another principle should never be forgotten. To speak against any prophet whom God has given the most prominent place in his work has always been a grievous sin, even if he did do things which to the eyes of men seem strange. Miriam and Aaron, both prophets, tried it with disastrous results. Nothing but the prayers of Moses restored Miriam from her leprosy that came in consequence of it. Numbers 12. In the New Testament history, the apostle Paul occupied a place much like that occupied by Moses in the Old Testament. There were other prophets and apostles in the church at the same time. There were a number of prophets in Corinth; for they had all the gifts in the church at one time. On one occasion some of these prophets got out of place; so the apostle wrote them some very plain instruction upon this point. The gift of prophecy does not destroy the sense of propriety; but it seemed to do so with some of these prophets. They had forgotten, if they ever knew, that the spirits of prophets were subject to the prophets, and that they were all subject to the leading prophet, the one who had been the instrument in the hands of God of bringing the church into existence. After laying down these principles, which would bring order out of the confusion that existed, Paul then concludes the fourteenth chapter of First Corinthians with these words: "If any man think himself to be a prophet, or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write unto you are the commandments of the Lord. But if any man be ignorant [or deny this principle], let him be ignorant. Wherefore, brethren, covet to prophesy, and forbid not to speak with tongues. Let all things be done decently and in order."

It is God's order, when he has a prophet in the position of responsibility, that he is responsible for him and will not forsake him. And if his Spirit should rest upon others, they, too, will respect and honor the leading prophet with that honor and respect that will give their testimonies due weight. These principles are as eternal as the throne of God. They will be established in the last days and confirmed. God does not inculcate the worship of any man, but when he chooses an instrument to work through, he does not forsake him even in his old age.

The Real Issue *

I received a letter this week containing a question. For some time I was in doubt whether I ought to pay any attention to it. But as it is a question many others in Battle Creek are asking, and it is one in which thousands of people in this city are interested, it has seemed best that I should try to answer it. I believe it to be an honest inquiry, and I will endeavor to answer it honestly. The letter reads as follows: —

"Dear Brother Farnsworth: Will you be so kind as to state in a word what you understand to be the real issue in the controversy here in Battle Creek? Is it money, administration, doctrine, or what is it? If you would briefly answer this from the pulpit, you would greatly oblige one who is seriously involved, and many others for whom he writes."

I sincerely hope that nothing I shall say will have a tendency to create strife. You will bear me witness, brethren, that since coming here I have not engaged in controversy with any one. I did not come here for that purpose. I have not done so in the past, and do not intend to do so in the future.

If I should simply give my opinion as to what is involved in the present perplexity, it would be worth very little. The opinion of any other man might be even better than mine. But I take it for granted that this congregation believes the Testimonies the Lord is sending us, and that what is stated in them is authoritative, and so in answer to this inquiry I shall read considerable from them.

What is the issue in this controversy? I read from a Testimony which was written in 1903, and which has recently been printed in "Series B, No. 7." I might read some of later date, but I read this purposely because it has been so long before the people.

"I am now authorized to say that the time has come to take decided action. The development seen in the cause of God is similar to the development seen when Balaam caused Israel to sin just

The Great Commission

HARK, how the great commission —
The Master's charge sublime —
His promise of fruition,
Rings through this latest time!
"All power to me is given,
Your King and risen Lord,
All power in earth and heaven,
Go, therefore, speak my word!

"Go ye to every nation,
And teach ye in my name
The gospel of salvation,
Ye ministers of flame!
Lo, I am with you ever,
Unto the ages' end,
My Spirit fails them never —
The heralds whom I send!"

The church in deadly slumber
Hears not, all unawaked;
Nor fills she up the number
Of precious souls elect
From every tribe and kindred,
Where'er are found the lost;
She goes not forth unhindered
To gather in God's host!

Hark to Christ's last commission,
His resurrection tone!
"Sin's full and free remission,
Teach this and this alone!"
The church has ONE vocation,
But ONE her labors here —
To spread the great salvation,
Till Christ himself appear!

The Great Controversy

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THE warfare that began in heaven did not end there. When Satan was cast out, there were cast out with him a large number of angels whom by his sophistry he had led to rebel against God. They came to this earth, and the same deception by which Satan caused the fall of the angels, he practised upon Adam and Eve. They fell under his temptation, and ever since there has been waged an unceasing, desperate conflict between good and evil. This earth is the scene of the conflict, the field of the battle between the forces of Satan and the forces of Christ. Until the end there will be warfare between satanic agencies and those who accept Christ, those for whom he gave his life, that they might have power to obey the law of God. This conflict, which is outlined in the Word of God, concerns us individually, and in it we are now to be intensely interested.

When Adam apostatized, he placed himself on Satan's side; his nature became evil, and he became separated from God. Had there been no interference on the part of God, Satan and man would have formed an alliance against heaven, and together they would have carried on a battle against God. There is not a natural enmity between fallen angels and fallen man. Naturally both are united in rebellion against good. Evil, wherever it exists, will always league with evil against good, so that naturally fallen angels and fallen men are linked in a desperate companionship.

But as soon as man transgressed, God gave the promise that he would put enmity between Satan and the seed of the woman. This promise is the key that opens to the world the grand plan of redemption. When Satan had succeeded in causing the fall of our first parents, he supposed that the whole of the human race would come under his control, that he and his sympathizers could induce men to join them in rebellion, as he had induced the angels to join him. He thought that he would have human beings as his allies against heaven, and that he could dethrone the Omnipotent One, and once more take his place in heaven.

When Satan heard the word, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed," he knew that man would be given power to resist his temptations. He realized that his claim to the position of prince of the newly created world was to be contested, that One would come whose work would be fatal to his evil purposes, that he and his angels would be forever defeated. His assurance of certain power, his sense of security, was gone. Adam and Eve had yielded to his temptations, and their posterity would feel the strength of his assaults. But they would not be left without a helper. The Son of God was to come to the world, to be tempted in our behalf, and in our behalf to overcome.

There is enmity between fallen human beings and Satan only as man places himself on God's side, and yields obedience to the law of Jehovah. This brings to him power to withstand Satan's attacks. It is through Christ's sacrifice that man is enabled to obey. "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." The Son of God, bearing human nature, and tempted on all points as we are tempted, met and resisted the assaults of the enemy. And in his strength human beings can gain the victory, meeting the tempter, yet not overcome by his artifice and his presumptuous presentations. By accepting Christ as a personal Saviour, men and women can stand firm against the temptations of the enemy. Human beings may have eternal life if they will accept the principles of heaven, and allow Christ to bring the heart and mind into obedience to the law of Jehovah.

Christ saw the meaning of Satan's wiles, and till the end of his test and trial, he stood firm in his resistance, refusing to swerve from allegiance to God. He took his stand on the foundation of truth, and from this foundation he would not move, even for the offer of the whole world and the glory of it, which Satan promised should be his if he would fall down and worship him.

The way in which Satan tempted Christ, he is to-day tempting every soul. He seeks to hold men under his reasoning. The Saviour warns us against entering into controversy with him or his agencies. We are not to meet them except on the Bible ground, "It is written." The less that we have to do with the arguments of those who are opposed to God, the firmer will be our foundation. We are to repeat as seldom as possible the sentiments of Satan's forming. Let every tempted soul keep looking at the principles that are wholly from above, remembering the promise, "I will put enmity between thee and the woman." Ministers, physicians, church-members, enmity against Satan is a gift from God, and the power provided by God is your efficiency.

The plain evidence given in the Word is the evidence that we are to present. The words that God has given, it is safe for us to speak to the opposing forces. "It is written" was the only weapon that Christ used in his contest with Satan.

It is by loyalty to God's law that every soul who shall enter the pearly gates into the city of God will be tested. The Saviour has worked out the salvation of every one who will receive him and believe in him. Christ is to be received by faith, in the full belief that he is the propitiation for our sins. He took upon himself the iniquities of the fallen race, and suffered in the sinner's stead. To lay hold by faith upon Christ, to become a partaker of the divine nature, is the sinner's only hope. Through the efficacy of the atonement made, man may return to his allegiance. Through accepting the righteousness of Christ, he may become loyal to the law of God, united to the Father and the Son.

In the great controversy now going on, God's servants are to put on every piece of the gospel armor, and fight manfully for him. We are wrestling with no human foe. God calls upon every Christian to enter the warfare and fight under his leadership, depending for success on grace and help from above. In God's strength we are to go forward. Never are we to yield ground to Satan. Why should we not, as Christian warriors, stand against principalities and powers, and against the rulers of the darkness of this world? Satan will place temptation before us. He will try by stratagem to overcome us. But in the strength of Christ we may stand firm as a rock to the principles of heaven.

In this warfare there is no release. Satan's agents never pause in their work of destruction. Those who are in Christ's service must guard every outpost. To save perishing souls from ruin is our object. This is a work of infinite greatness, and man can not hope to obtain success in it unless he unites with the divine Worker.

The terrible condition of the world to-day would seem to indicate that apparently the death of Christ has been almost in vain: that Satan has triumphed. The great majority of the world's inhabitants belong to Satan's kingdom. Satanic agencies are not yet subdued. Christ has not yet set up his kingdom on the earth. "We see not yet all things put under him."

But we have not been deceived. Notwithstanding the apparent triumph of Satan on the earth, Christ is carrying forward his work in the heavenly sanctuary. The word of God portrays the wickedness and corruption that should exist in the world in the last days. As we see the fulfilment of prophecy, our faith in the final triumph of Christ's kingdom should be increased. We should go forth with courage to do our appointed work.

"Seeing then that we have a great high priest, . . . Jesus the Son of God, let us hold fast our profession. For we have not an high priest which can not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities; but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

The Test of Discipleship

H. J. FARMAN

"But if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Rom. 8:9, A. R. V. "Born of the Spirit," "in the Spirit," "led by the Spirit of God," "walk by the Spirit," "live by the Spirit," "hear what the Spirit saith to the churches," and many similar expressions are familiar to the students of Scripture, and clearly express the Christian's experience. Nothing is more imperative than to know that we are Christians, and one of the important evidences is thus expressed: "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God." Verse 16. Having the Spirit of Christ is the test of Christianity, and all other graces follow in their order, as "the obedience of faith" wrought out in love. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control; against such there is no law." And why no law against such? — Because "they that are of Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with the passions and the lusts thereof." Gal. 5:22-24.

No more important questions can be settled by each individual than these: Have I the Spirit of Christ, or have I not? Am I cherishing, following, and obeying the Spirit? Shall I, through the Spirit's power, ever and always so live that the Holy Spirit will witness with my spirit that my ways please him? Upon the right settlement of these and other like questions, depends our future usefulness in the third angel's message. Altogether too much time has now run to waste in careless indifference, as if we had a millennium in which to prepare for the Saviour's coming, when indeed he is now about to lay aside his priestly robes, put on the garments of vengeance, and come to this earth. Are we ready?

It has been, and is, Satan's studied plan to keep God's people from enjoying the presence and power of the Holy Spirit; for should they possess it, his subjects would be continually taken from him, and his end would speedily come. O that this might be so! and it will be so, whether or not we have the Holy Spirit. The writer believes the time has fully come when decisive measures are being taken by the Father to bring his people to himself, where the Holy Spirit can guide them; and those who refuse thus to be drawn to God, will follow their own spirit to death. How dreadful to be left to one's self without the Spirit of God! yet there is but one of two conditions to occupy, namely, to be in possession of the Spirit, or to be without it; there is no middle ground to occupy, it is either one thing or the other; we either have it, or we have it not. We can quickly settle this question by the Word of God, and our own lives, which must be in harmony with it. Here are some of the evidences: "If any man is in Christ, he is a new creature: the old things are passed away; behold, they are become new." 2 Cor. 5:17. "But ye are not in the flesh but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwelleth in you." Rom. 8:9. "And if Christ is in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the spirit is life because of righteousness. . . . So then, brethren, we are debtors, not to the flesh, to live after the flesh: for if ye live after the flesh, ye must die; but if by the Spirit ye put to death the deeds of the body, ye shall live. For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, these are the sons of God." Verses 10-14.

Reader, have you the Spirit of God? If not, ask, seek, knock, and find. Luke 11:9-13. Make speedy application of the promises of God concerning his gift of the Holy Spirit, lest he say to you, "My Spirit have ye grieved away for the last time."

Does the Testimony of a Prophet Change?

The more we study the nature and character of the prophets, the more we shall see that they are mortal men like all other members of the human family, and they themselves are not infallible, but the voice of God spoken through them is infallible. Elijah was a prophet of God, but he "was a man subject to like passions as we are." He represents all other prophets. Notwithstanding this, "The prophecy came not in old time by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." The Spirit of God controls men, but men do not control the Spirit of God. God meets men where they are, and when they turn to seek him, their attitude toward God determines God's attitude toward them. The Jews brought upon themselves swift destruction by rejecting Christ and treating him as an enemy. Their attitude was that Christ was an enemy, and that if they let him alone, the Romans would come and take away their city.

To Ahab God said, "Him that dieth of Ahab in the city the dogs shall eat; and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat. But there was none like unto Ahab, which did sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the Lord, whom Jezebel his wife stirred up. . . . It came to pass, when Ahab heard these words, that he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and lay in sackcloth, and went softly. And the word of the Lord came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying, Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself before me? because he humbleth himself before me, I will not bring the evil in his days: but in his son's days will I bring the evil upon his house." 1 Kings 21:24-29. If the humbling of the heart of Ahab postponed this awful calamity on the king, it would have done the same for his sons. God's threatenings are conditional upon the repentance of the individual who is in the wrong. It was the same with Zedekiah.

A prophet went out to meet Asa, "and said unto him, Hear ye me, Asa, and all Judah and Benjamin: The Lord is with you, while ye be with him; and if ye seek him, he will be found of you; but if ye forsake him, he will forsake you." Asa had a great victory when he cried unto the Lord in his weakness. But afterward he relied upon his own wisdom and united with his enemies. Through prosperity he became lifted up. For this the Lord reproved him, and said: "From henceforth thou shalt have wars. Then Asa was wroth with the seer, and put him in a prison-house; for he was in a rage with him because of this thing. And Asa oppressed some of the people the same time." Then it was that God forsook him. Repentance always moves the arm of God. Threatenings come because of departures from God. In this sense the testimonies may be said to change, but it is because men change. God always deals in mercy, and meets men where they are.

The Lord lays down one principle of his government that should never be forgotten: "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it; if that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil I thought to do unto them. And at what instant I shall speak unto a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it; if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then I will repent of the good, wherewith I said I would benefit them." Jer. 18:7-10. God always works on this principle. He is not arbitrary in his requirements. Men are free moral agents. His prophets reprove for deep-seated wrongs in the hearts of his people. Circumstances always appear to make the case perplexing. All this is permitted of the Lord, as stubbornness exists in the

God in Redemption

NOAH W. VINCENT

God is supremely good,
And all his ways are right;
His words shall be my daily food,
His will my chief delight.
God wills the death of none;
His great salvation's free.
He offers pardon in his Son
To-day to you and me.

Christ bought us with his blood;
He longs to make us pure,
To bring us, holy, near to God,
Our crown and welcome sure.
But if we choose to die,
He gives us our vile choice;
Others the Lamb will glorify,
And in our stead rejoice.

O come to Christ to-day,
Your refuge, life, and friend!
God will draw near to help you pray,
The Holy Spirit send.
Our hearts he will make pure,
And help will still be given
That we may to the end endure,
Brought safe to God and heaven!

Christ's loving welcome heed;
There's hope for you to-day;
To him in trustful prayer make speed,
Fail not by more delay.
Our faith and love we show
In acts that cheer and bless;
Reflecting Christ — so may we know
Our Lord our righteousness!

The New Life in Christ

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"And you hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; wherein in time past ye walked according to the course of this world, according to the prince of the power of the air, the spirit that now worketh in the children of disobedience; among whom also we all had our conversation in times past in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind; and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others."

But a change came. You were convicted and converted. Did you then exercise the faith that works by love and purifies the soul, or did you continue to follow the same evil habits and practises that you followed before your conversion? If you were genuinely converted, you turned away from all wrong. The mind which has been placed in the control of Christ, and on which he has wrought by his grace, becomes refined, purified, elevated.

"But God, who is rich in mercy, for his great love wherewith he loved us, even when we were dead in sins, hath quickened us together with Christ (by grace ye are saved), and hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness toward us through Christ Jesus."

Let us consider the representation that God wants us to make before angels and before men. By helpful words, purity of actions, nobility of principle, the Christian is to reveal Christ. "We are his workmanship, created in Christ Jesus unto good works, which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Those who obey these words will show what a belief in the truth that Christ came to impart, will do for human beings.

"Wherefore remember," Paul says, "that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called Uncircumcision by that which is called the Circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that at that time"— before light broke into the darkened chambers of the soul —"ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world: but now in Christ Jesus ye who sometimes were afar off are made nigh by the blood of Christ."

The apostle desired those to whom he was writing to remember that they must reveal in their lives the glorious change wrought in them by Christ's transforming grace. They were to be lights in the world, by their purified, sanctified characters exerting an influence counter to the influence of satanic agencies. They were ever to remember the words, "Not of yourselves." They could not change their own hearts. And when by their efforts souls were led from the ranks of Satan to take their stand for Christ, they were not to claim any credit for the transformation wrought.

God's workers to-day are to remember this. The great change that is seen in the life of a sinner after conversion is not brought about by any human goodness. "He that glorieth, let him glory in the Lord." Let those who are brought to repentance declare that it is only because of the goodness of God that they have been led to Christ.

He who is rich in mercy has imparted his grace to us. Then let praise and thanksgiving ascend to him, because he has become our Saviour. Let his love, filling our hearts and minds, flow forth from our lives in rich currents of grace. When we were dead in trespasses and sins, he quickened us into spiritual life. He brought grace and pardon, filling the soul with new life. Thus the sinner passes from death to life. He now takes up his new duties in Christ's service. His life becomes true and strong, filled with good works. "Because I live," Christ said, "ye shall live also."

I ask every church-member to consider the words, "ye must be born again." Are you living the new life in Christ? Are you doing his work? Are you honoring him by showing the great blessing that is found in standing under his banner? Are you so grateful to Christ for his redeeming love, so faithful and true to his service, that your heart can not be haughty, selfish, self-centered? Is watching unto prayer a part of your daily life?

The truly converted man has no time to think or talk of the faults of others. His lips are sanctified, and as God's faithful witness he testifies that the grace of Christ has transformed his heart. He realizes that he can not afford to talk discouragement and unbelief; he can not afford to be harsh and faultfinding. He has not received orders from God to punish the erring by heaping abuse upon them.

My brethren and sisters, be afraid to find fault, afraid to talk against your fellow beings, lest you lose the sense that you are dedicated to the service of God, and that as a faithful servant you must keep his interests in view. You are to live a life that will convince others that you are a child of God, under the training of the Captain of your salvation, that you may be prepared for active service. You have enlisted to fight against Satan's forces, and you have no time to fight against your fellow soldiers.

God calls upon his church to awake to their duty, to show themselves true and loyal to the Captain of their salvation. They are to follow his example, and learn what it means to be faithful to him who loves them, and who has given them a place in his army.

Not to Destroy, But to Save

Envy, evil surmising, backbiting, and faultfinding,— let these not be named among Christ's disciples. These things are the cause of the present feebleness of the church. We have a perfect Pattern, even the life of Christ. It is to be our eager desire to do as he has done, to live as he lived, that others, by seeing our good works, may be led to glorify God. The blessing of heaven will rest upon those who try to help others by doing the work that Christ came to do.

God gave his only begotten Son to die for a race of rebels, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life. Why should we not walk and work in the way that God has marked out? Why should any one please the enemy by tearing down another's work, using the powers God has given him to kill hope and drive souls into discouragement? In every church there are young men and women who need the help of a strong, compassionate hand-clasp, of a loving, Christlike interest that will not let them go. Let there be an end to bickering over little things. Cease to speak words that do no good, and come close to those who have erred. Take hold of them, and draw them to Christ. Give Satan no chance to enter our ranks.

Angels are sent from the heavenly courts, not to destroy, but to watch over and guard imperiled souls, to save the lost, to bring the straying ones back to the fold. "I came not to condemn, but to save," Christ declared. Have you, then, no pitying words to speak to the straying? Will you let them perish, or will you reach out to them a helping hand? Right around you there are souls who are in danger of perishing. Will you not with the cords of love draw them to the Saviour? Will you not cease your reproaches, and speak words that will inspire them with faith and courage?

God's Message to Us

"For this cause I Paul, the prisoner of Jesus Christ for you Gentiles, if ye have heard of the dispensation of the grace of God which is given me to you-ward: how that by revelation he made known unto me the mystery, which in other ages was not made known unto the sons of men, as it is now revealed unto his holy apostles and prophets by the Spirit; that the Gentiles should be fellow heirs, and of the same body, and partakers of his promise in Christ by the gospel: whereof I was made a minister, according to the gift of the grace of God given unto me by the effectual working of his power. Unto me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ; and to make all men see what is the fellowship of the mystery, which from the beginning of the world hath been hid in God, who created all things by Jesus Christ: to the intent that now unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places might be known by the church the manifold wisdom of God, according to the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord."

This is the message that I am commissioned to bear to you: You are to take the words addressed by Paul to the church at Ephesus as if addressed to you personally. By alienation, disunion, and diversity of opinion, Satan has hindered the work outlined in the words of the apostle. Had believers put self out of sight, had they refused to carry out the plans devised by Satan to hinder the work of God, how much farther advanced we might now be! For years messages have been sent pointing out the work to be done. But this work has not been accomplished. Believers have stood directly across the path of its accomplishment, blocking the way by envy, evil surmisings, and faultfinding. They have sought the highest place. Commercial business has absorbed the attention and consumed the means that ought to have been given to the proclamation of the message of salvation. Thank God, something has been done, but a thousand times more might have been done than has been done. The enemy has brought in a variety of things to occupy the minds of believers. Time is fast passing, the work is still undone, and the world is growing worse and worse. And yet in mercy the Spirit of God is still striving with souls. Brethren and sisters, I call upon you to put on the whole armor of God. Those who have never heard the reasons of our faith are now to be reached. Many are waiting for a message from God's Word. Go to them, and tell them where we are standing in the history of this world.

The end is near, and the message contained in the third chapter of Ephesians is the message that I am bidden to give to believers. A world-wide work is to be done. We are now to go to work in earnest to proclaim the truth. The Voice said, "Lift up your voice like a trumpet, and show my people their transgressions, and the house of Jacob their sins. They are hindering the proclamation of the last message of warning."

Paul carried a burden that we ought now to be carrying. A great work is to be done, and it is to be done in a short time. O, how much there is to do, and how many there are who for various reasons are not engaged in God's work! Satan is devising plans to keep the Lord's forces out of the work. He does not want people to be aroused to a realization of the swift judgments that are coming upon the world.

My brethren and sisters, let us arouse to an understanding of our true position. God will not be trifled with. He has spoken in judgments to arouse those who for years have worked at cross-purposes with him. These judgments were not mere casualties. They were the reproof of God to his people. I entreat those who have, as it were, defied God to his face, no longer to dishonor him by clinging to their own way. Let us now take up the work of God intelligently and unitedly, proclaiming as with one voice the message of warning and salvation. Let us heed the word of the Lord, lest coming suddenly, he find us unready. There will be no second probation. Now, while it is called to-day, if we will hear the voice of the Lord, and turn fully to him, he will have mercy upon us, and abundantly pardon.

The Crisis

S. N. HASKELL

THAT there is a crisis before the people of God is evident. In Revelation 13 we have the final conflict brought to view. It is the beast and his image which are exalted by laws contrary to the law of God. The mark of the beast will be enforced on the people of God. This is from without. It will be a crisis that will come upon every soul who lives. "If any man," says the message. This draws a line between the people of God and the world. But a fiercer conflict is within, in the church itself; and this is over the spirit of prophecy. "Prophesying serveth not for them that believe not, but for them which believe." "The dragon was wroth with the woman, and went to make war with the remnant of her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ." "And the testimony of Jesus is the spirit of prophecy." Here are two things that call forth the hatred of Satan — the commandments of God and the spirit of prophecy. This principle is not new, for it is the same principle that existed in the days of the apostles.

Paul's epistles, which afterward were compiled in the book called the New Testament, were first sent around to individual churches. Some believed them, and some did not. It drew a line in the early church. But they remain, and now the Christian world acknowledges them to be inspired of God. The apostle Peter, in speaking of them, said, "Even as our beloved brother Paul also according to the wisdom given unto him hath written unto you; as also in all his epistles, speaking in them of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction." 2 Peter 3:15, 16.

There were two points the brethren at that time questioned: first, the apostle was influenced by others; second, a position that always goes with criticism — there was a distinction to be drawn between letters and epistles. As to this latter point a moment's reflection will convince any candid mind that in the New Testament, as well as in the Old Testament, a testimony of God is the same as a letter. The terms are synonymous. 2 Cor. 3:1-3; Jer. 29:1, 4. In this last instance what Jeremiah calls a letter begins with "Thus saith the Lord," etc.

The apostle distinctly declares, "It hath been declared unto me of you, my brethren, by them which are of the house of Chloe, that there are contentions among you." If some of the latter-day critics were there, they would say, It was this letter of Chloe that influenced the apostle to write this first epistle of Corinthians. And this was true. How strange that it was put in the Bible and comes down to us as if it were as much inspired as Daniel, Isaiah, or Jeremiah! Yet so it is. And the second epistle corrected this error on the part of the brethren at Corinth; for they were troubled in the same manner. It was really the private letters of the household of Chloe that showed the apostle that the state of things existed which he had seen in vision would exist. So the first epistle to the Corinthians was as much inspired as any other portion of the Bible; and those who were earnestly seeking light did not cast his epistle aside. The Lord had shown him the dangers and difficulties that would arise in the church. So it is, and ever has been. God shows his prophets what will be, and then when circumstances arise, or the prophet has his attention called to it by private letters, he writes what he has seen. It is the same among the people of God to-day who have drifted away from the old landmarks, and who follow their own understanding. The apostle referred to this in his second epistle, and said they called his writing letters. And then adds, "Let such an one think this, that, such as we are in word by letters when we are absent, such will we be also in deed when we are present." 2 Cor. 10:9-11. The Pillar of the Cloud

"ALL sunshine makes the desert,"
The Arab proverb says;
The verdure and the harvest
Come through the rainy days;
The flowers in their fragrance,
The forests in their pride,
Come through the clouds that darken,
The storm which rages wide.

"All sunshine makes the desert."
The soul that knows not pain
Lies in its careless blisses,
And barren must remain.
Not till the storm-clouds gather,
Not till the tempests break,
Can seeds of greatness quicken,
Can powers of good awake.

"All sunshine makes the desert."
The highest ends of life
Lie not within its raptures,
But on through stress and strife;
And all our noblest powers
Of faith and hope and love
Come with the falling showers
From out God's heaven above.

Filled With the Fruits of Righteousness

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"AND this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and in all judgment; that ye may approve things that are excellent; that ye may be sincere and without offense till the day of Christ; being filled with the fruits of righteousness, which are by Jesus Christ, unto the glory and praise of God."

The Lord presents before his finite creatures no impossibilities. Our Heavenly Father claims not at our hands that which we can not perform. He desires his people to labor earnestly to carry out his purpose for them. They are to pray for power, expect power, and receive power, that they may grow up into the full stature of men and women in Christ Jesus.

Not all the members of the church are cultivating personal piety; therefore they do not understand their personal responsibility. They do not realize that it is their privilege and duty to reach the high standard of Christian perfection. God is not well pleased when all the burden-bearing is done by a few members of the church, whose physical and spiritual powers are taxed to the utmost of their ability in their effort to counteract the influence of the worldly minded, halting, doubting ones. If those so lacking in piety and earnestness would seek to learn the lessons contained in God's Word, and would feel it their duty to practise these lessons, there would be more power in the church. Every member would seek to improve his talents. The light would not be hidden under a bushel, but placed on a candlestick, and its clear, steady rays would shine forth to dispel the darkness.

We are in great need of the pure, life-giving atmosphere that nurtures and invigorates the spiritual life. We need greater earnestness. The solemn message given us to give to the world is to be proclaimed with greater fervency, even with an intensity that will impress unbelievers, leading them to see that the Most High is working with us, that he is the source of our efficiency and strength.

We are not accomplishing one third of what God desires us to accomplish, because careless, ease-loving church-members shirk responsibilities, leaving them to be borne by a few willing ones. But God has not appointed a few to do all the praying, all the watching, all the believing, all the warning and entreating, while the majority look on, taking no part in the great work.

Many who claim to be children of God are only a burden to the church. God has given them capabilities which, if properly used, would enable them to be a great help in his work. He expects them to be colaborers with Christ. Their inexcusable indolence is causing them to be recorded in the books of heaven as unfaithful servants. The "well done" will be spoken to those only who are earnest, faithful workers.

Shall this state of indifference continue from year to year? Are we looking forward to the latter rain, confidently hoping for a better day, when the church shall be endued with power from on high, and thus fitted for work? The latter rain will never refresh and invigorate the indolent, who do not use the powers God has given them. Is Christ always to be disappointed in the beings he has redeemed at an infinite cost?

The power of a higher, purer, nobler life is our great need. God's people are to be filled with holy joy, that its radiance may shine forth from them, brightening the pathway of others. What power, what peace, what joy, the soul may have that is united with Christ. The divine splendor is revealed to those who commune with him who is the source of power.

We know little of the peace and happiness and joy of heaven. We need more efficiency. We need to receive from Christ the water of life, that it may be in us a well of water, refreshing all who come within the sphere of our influence.

It is not spiritual laziness that will bring us near to God, but Christian devotion, personal piety, intelligent advancement in the knowledge of Christ. We shall be filled with the fruits of righteousness. There is a higher standard for us to reach. The world has too much of our thought, and the kingdom of heaven too little.

God has given us talents to be used in the upbuilding of his kingdom. Are we betraying this solemn trust? Do we ask ourselves the question, How am I using the talents my Lord has given me? Have you given to earthly things strength of purpose, tact, and skill, and to God only a feeble, diseased service? Will he accept this at your hand? Shall the eternal be made secondary to the temporal?

Are we doing our appointed work? Are we showing forth in our lives the praises of Him who has called us out of darkness into his marvelous light? Is Christ dwelling in our hearts? Are we not falling far short in our duty? If we are doers of the word, and not hearers only, we shall be whole-hearted in our efforts to make his name a praise in the earth.

Christ tells us to pray with unshaken faith, "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven." These words will surely be fulfilled. Work to the utmost of your ability to answer this prayer. You will then feel so weighty a responsibility resting upon you that you will put away from you all selfishness, all sloth, all indifference. You will rid yourselves of all that Satan could take advantage of in his efforts to defeat Christ's prayer.

We have no time to listen to the suggestions of the foe. [At our baptism we pledged ourselves to break all connection with Satan and his agencies, and to put heart and mind and soul into the work of extending the kingdom of God. All heaven is working for this object. The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are pledged to co-operate with sanctified human instrumentalities. If we are true to our vow, there is opened to us a door of communication with heaven,—a door that no human hand or satanic agency can close.] (1)

We are to despair at nothing in the line of progression. Moral and spiritual perfection, through the grace and power of Christ, is promised to all who believe. At every step we are to ask for the help of Christ. He is the model we are to follow in character building. He calls for deeds, not words, saying, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "Do unto others as you would they should do unto you"—this is to be our rule of life. Christ is the source of light, the fountain of life. He brings us to his word, and from the tree of life presents to us leaves for the healing of the nations. It is his purpose that human beings, purified and sanctified, shall be his helping hand. He leads us to the throne of God, and gives us a prayer to offer to him. When we live this prayer, we are brought into close contact with Christ; at every step we touch his living power. In our behalf he sets in operation the all-powerful agencies of heaven.

My brother, my sister, are you carrying a burden for the unsaved? Do you know what it means to be a Christian? Not ministers only, are to know what saith the Lord. All are permitted to enter the door opened by the sacrifice of Christ. Not ministers only, but all who take their stand under the blood-stained banner of Prince Emmanuel, are to work for the Master, presenting to the sin-sick the wonderful gospel remedy.

Is your faith practical? Are you doing what the Bible tells you to do? Are you using all your powers in an effort to bring the lost sheep back to the fold? There are thousands upon thousands in ignorance who might be warned. Pray as you have never prayed before for the power of Christ. Pray for the inspiration of his Spirit, that you may be filled with a desire to save those who are perishing. Let the prayer ascend to heaven, "God be merciful unto us, and bless us; and cause his face to shine upon us; that thy way may be known upon earth, thy saving health among all nations."

The Great California Earthquake

A Sunday in Oakland and San Francisco —April 22, 1906

ABDIEL

The streets of Oakland were like a holiday-celebration occasion — crowded. Special police and State militia were in evidence everywhere. Nearly every other man one met wore a badge, sometimes two and three and four — "Special Police," "Relief Committee," the "Red Cross," and that of the particular order, perhaps, to which he belonged. And then there were many officials, some decidedly officious, others meeting the demands of the occasion with coolness and courtesy.

Some of the streets were closed with ropes and special police. Buildings were dangerous, some of them much worse than they appeared to be. Great brick, stone, and wood cornices were in the streets, splendid plate-glass windows were shattered, and erstwhile solid brick and stone walls were broken and unsafe. All the fine school buildings of Oakland were greatly damaged.

The church parlors of all houses of worship at all available were converted into soup kitchens and bedrooms for the refugees from San Francisco. Oakland, though wounded, was nobly forgetting her own injuries for the sake of others who had lost their all. Said the director of the Chabot Observatory, "I told them that the reception and assembly rooms of the observatory were open." While walking a little way with two young men, each with a roll of blankets swung over his shoulder, we were met by a lady who said, "Excuse me, gentlemen, are you in need of dinner? If you are, there is a warm meal for you at the church right round the corner; and it is good, too, and perfectly free." And such we met everywhere. Thank God, the mercenary spirit of the age has not wholly dried up the milk of human kindness. Yet there will be hundreds who will abuse the hospitality of Oakland and neighboring towns, and continue to stay and feed upon their generosity when they ought to be at work, and then these cities will be charged with niggardliness.

Incidentally in this connection, San Jose suffered fearfully. Some of her finest buildings were ruined by the mighty trembler, yet thousands fled from San Francisco to that place, and the "Garden City" housed, tented, parked, and fed them, with none of the eastern supplies flowing to her. She ought to have a share in them.

"How can I get from Oakland to San Francisco?" I asked of several. "Get a pass." "How? Where? When?" "Go to the city hall, fall into line with those applying, and wait your turn. They may make you work, however. It is martial law over there; and they indiscriminately force men into service at the point of the bayonet, demanding from two to six hours' work."

Hon. C. F. Curry, California's secretary of state, was so conscripted, and made to labor, till an army official recognized him and ordered his release. The irresponsible soldier respected no one, and shot men with little or no provocation.

Yet I concluded to go. I fell into line at 7:30 A. M. Men had already been there for two hours, and there were probably a thousand ahead of me. That line lasted all day nearly. After two hours more I reached the examiners; a fourth of the line, perhaps, were turned down; the rest were granted passes for the day only. After passing this examination, we were told to pass into a room and wait till our names were called. There were a hundred, more or less, waiting. I was getting impatient to go on. A new inspiration struck me. I broke from the ranks, sent my card to the governor, an old neighbor who knew me, and in five minutes received a personal, permanent pass in and out of the military lines of San Francisco, per order of the governor, signed by Adjutant-General Lauchs, and I was off.

I had heard of the city's desolation, of the work wrought by earthquake and fire. I had witnessed ruins and gazed upon pictures of more extensive ruins of the gray and olden past, but the terrible realities of San Francisco eclipsed them all. Those I had seen only as ruins. "The Queen City of the West" I had known in her glory and pride. The language of my heart was, "My God, what destruction, what desolation, what ruin, thou has permitted to come!" Only the language of the prophets of old is adequate to tell of the awfulness of the scene.

And yet when one had known the feel of the earthquake, he did not wonder. During the twenty-eight seconds — which to some measured minutes — it seemed as if no building could endure the strain. The gyratory twisting, the swift, beating waves, the up-and-down pounding, the commingling of every conceivable motion in swift and awful violence, blanched the stoutest heart, and caused strong men to cry like babies, women to scream and faint, and some persons to go stark, staring mad.

Acres and acres of great ruined buildings loom before me through the smoky atmosphere, like specters of a forgotten past; square miles of a once populous city south of Market Street have been swept by the fire fiend, so that all that is left is a few chimney-stacks, iron telegraph poles, and now and then the broken walls of a building.

The fire has burned down many buildings, dynamite has shattered many walls, but all the damage — estimated all the way from two hundred million to five hundred million dollars — was the result of that twenty-eight seconds. One church, St. Dominic's, a huge structure on Steiner Street, seems to be utterly wrecked. One of its high towers stands a mere skeleton, stripped of everything, the other is also a skeleton surmounted only by the dome of the spire, like a parasol. Another part of the church has piled its tons of brick on a large rooming house adjacent, and crushed it to the ground. On the same street there are large three-story wood houses moved four or five feet off from their foundation, still standing. In some cases buildings sank one story. Streets were upheaved, car tracks were twisted, bent at sharp angles, or otherwise distorted. Great steel girders were broken like pipe-stems.

The loss of life is probably not a unit less than one thousand. The San Francisco papers persistently minimize it, and the army officers give what is officially reported, about three hundred up to date. But we have been told of two hundred buried in one trench, very few of whom can be identified; one hundred and fifty or more were caught in the awful whirlwind of fire on Telegraph Hill and burned. This, that, and the other lodging-house went down with from scores to hundreds in them. The odor of burning flesh is still in evidence in many places, where no wholesale meat shops or horse stables existed. Sometime God's books will tell the whole story. Till then we wait. So far as I am able to learn, none of our own people suffered serious physical injury. For this let us thank God.

The extent of the earthquake in any kind of severity was from near San Luis Obispo on the south, where hot springs burst forth, to north of Ukiah. Its width was a narrow strip along the coast range; and yet it was recorded at Johns Hopkins University, at Baltimore. Professor Burckhalter, of Oakland, called it a great earthquake, ranking as the ninth in violence in a scale of ten.

The earthquake has its usual number of freaks. It is common to find buildings utterly shattered, and close to them others no stronger unharmed. One part of a building is ruined, another part is uninjured. There is nothing which so clearly solves all these problems as the Word of the Lord, "The earth shall wax old as doth a garment." One of the characteristics of old garments is their weak and strong places. Of course we know that the primal cause is sin; and sin is bearing its full fruitage.

The feeling of many when it came was, "It is the last day;" "It is the

A Little Way From This

MRS. MARY V. NOWLIN

A little way from this and it will all be ended,—
The sorrow, the crying, and the pain;
A little way from this the broken hearts be mended,
And we shall find the smiles we lost again.

A little way from this, some fair and golden morning
Shall we behold the snow-white cloud arise;
And it will have for its most beauteous adorning,
All, all the glory of the upper skies.

Behold, with clouds He cometh, and every eye shall see;
None from the glorious view will be shut out.
Some will cry, "O rocks, O mountains, fall on me!"
And some will greet their Master with a shout.

A little way from this, O weary, sad hearts weeping
For loved and lost that you have buried deep,
The trump will sound, and the dear ones sweetly sleeping
Will wake forever from their dreamless sleep!

A little way from this the harp strings mutely waiting
For fingers, O so tired and worn with pain!
Will vibrate with a song past human power relating,
And heaven will thrill with one harmonious strain.

A little way from this, the pearly gates wide swinging
And everlasting doors uplifted high,
The "nations who have kept the truth" will welcome, singing
The glory of their King as they pass by.

Day, O, long expected, hope of all the ages,
The hope that lights the tomb, and dries the tear!
O day of glad fruition, foretold in sacred pages,
A little way from this, and thou art here!

A little way from this — but now to know the meaning,
But now to know the cleansing and the power,
And for our strength each day on Jesus to be leaning,—
O, sweet will be the coming of that hour!

And glad will be the meeting with earthly loves long parted —
We've ever missed them from the accustomed place —
To clasp the vanished hand that left us broken-hearted,
But gladder far to see Him face to face!

The San Francisco Earthquake

MRS. E. G. WHITE

While at Loma Linda, the second night after the dedication of the sanitarium, there passed before me a most wonderful representation. During a vision of the night, I stood on an eminence, from which I could see houses shaken like a reed in the wind. Buildings, great and small, were falling to the ground. Pleasure resorts, theaters, hotels, and the homes of the wealthy were shaken and shattered. Many lives were blotted out of existence, and the air was filled with the shrieks of the injured and the terrified.

The destroying angels of God were at work. One touch, and buildings so thoroughly constructed that men regarded them as secure against every danger, quickly became heaps of rubbish. There was no assurance of safety in any place. I did not feel in any special peril, but the awfulness of the scenes that passed before me I can not find words to describe. It seemed that the forbearance of God was exhausted, and that the Judgment day had come.

The angel that stood by my side then instructed me that but few have any conception of the wickedness existing in our world to-day, and especially the wickedness in the large cities. He declared that the Lord has appointed a time when he will visit transgressors in wrath for persistent disregard of his law.

At about one o'clock I awoke, and was impressed to write out some things regarding the supreme rulership of God, and the sacredness of his law. When I met my secretary early in the morning, I told her that wonderful representations had been passing before me in the night season. After breakfast, we received a message asking us to go to Los Angeles by the afternoon train; but I was unable to take any part in preparing for the journey. I was as one dazed by the awful scenes that had passed before me.

We went to Glendale, near Los Angeles, and the following night, April 17, further representations passed before me. I seemed to be in an assembly, setting before the people the requirements of God's law. I read the scriptures regarding the institution of the Sabbath in Eden at the close of the creation week, and regarding the giving of the law at Sinai; and then I showed that the Sabbath was to be observed "for a perpetual covenant," as a sign between God and his people forever, that they may know that they are sanctified by the Lord, their Creator.

Then I dwelt upon the supreme rulership of God above all earthly rulers. His law is to be the standard of action. None are to pervert their senses by intemperance, or by yielding their minds to satanic influences; for this makes impossible the keeping of God's law. While the divine Ruler bears long with perversity, he is not deceived, and will not always keep silence. His supremacy, his authority as Ruler of the universe, must finally be acknowledged, and the just claims of his law vindicated.

Much more instruction regarding the long-sufferance of God, and the necessity of arousing transgressors to a realization of their perilous position in his sight, was repeated to the people, as received from my instructor.

Wednesday morning, April 18, I was to speak in the church at Los Angeles, where the Southern California Conference was assembled. As we neared the church, we heard the newsboys crying, "San Francisco destroyed by an earthquake!" With a heavy heart I read the first hastily printed news of the terrible disaster.

Two weeks later, on our homeward journey, we went by the way of San Jose, Mountain View, and San Francisco. As we traveled northward, we saw some of the effects of the earthquake; and when we entered San Jose, we could see that large buildings had collapsed, and that others had been seriously damaged.

At Mountain View, the new post-office and some of the largest stores in the town had been leveled to the ground. Other buildings had partially collapsed, and were badly wrecked. When we saw the fallen walls of the Pacific Press, we were sad at heart; but we could not help rejoicing over the fact that no lives were lost. Here, as also in San Francisco, the Lord mercifully spared his children.

We were glad to learn that the proposal of our brethren in Washington, that the situation of our institutions at Mountain View and in San Francisco should be presented in all our churches, met with general favor, and that all will be invited to contribute something toward a fund for their relief. We believe that our people will respond liberally in offerings to meet the present necessities of our institutions that have suffered. There is no necessity of urging our people to help these institutions; for we believe that all will respond with gifts, and with a tribute of thanksgiving to God for his protecting care over his children.

In this their hour of need, the managers of the Pacific Press are not idle. They have enclosed their building, and are now repairing the damaged rooms inside. The machinery was injured but little, and very soon the presses were at work. The office is now busy with the publication of a special edition of The Signs of the Times, containing an account of the earthquake, and some articles regarding the meaning of such disasters. A commendable effort is being made to give this Earthquake Special a large circulation, and to accompany its distribution with many books and tracts.

Just now, when people are thinking seriously, literature on the meaning of the signs of the times, wisely circulated, will have a telling effect in behalf of the truth. At this time, when awful calamities are sweeping away the most costly structures as if by a breath of fire from heaven, many sinners are afraid, and stand trembling before God. Now is our opportunity to make known the truth to them.

Brethren and sisters, will you put on the Christian armor? "Your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace," you will be prepared to walk from house to house, carrying the truth
(1) to the people. Sometimes you will find it trying to do this kind of work; but if you go forth in faith, the Lord will go before you, and will let his light shine upon your pathway. Entering the homes of your neighbors to sell or to give away our literature, and in humility to teach them the truth, you will be accompanied by the light of heaven, which will abide in these homes.

God's judgments are abroad in the land. Shall we allow these things to come upon the world without telling the people the meaning of these terrible calamities, and how every one may escape from the wrath to come? Shall we let our neighbors remain in darkness without a preparation for the future life? Unless we ourselves realize where we stand, the day of God will come upon us as a thief.

Time is precious. The destiny of souls is in the balance. At infinite cost a way of salvation has been provided. Shall Christ's great sacrifice be in vain? Shall the earth be entirely controlled by satanic agencies? The salvation of souls is dependent on the consecration and activity of God's church. The Lord calls upon all who believe in him to be workers together with him. While their life shall last, they are not to feel that their work is done. Until the time comes when Christ shall say, "It is finished," his work for the saving of souls will not decrease, but will grow in importance, and be far-reaching.

On our way home from Mountain View, we passed through San Francisco, and for an hour and a half viewed the destruction wrought in that great city. Buildings that were supposed to be proof against disaster, are lying in ruins. In some instances buildings were partially sunken into the ground. The city presents a most dreadful picture of the inefficiency of human ingenuity to frame fire-proof and earthquake-proof structures.

San Francisco has been laid low, but other cities still remain standing. The mercy of God is shown by his long forbearance. He is holding back his judgments, waiting for the message of warning to be sounded to all. There are many who have not yet heard the testing truths for this time. The last call of mercy is to be given more fully to our world. The Word of God portrays the wickedness and corruption that will exist in the world in the last days. As we see the fulfilment of prophecy, our faith in the final triumph of Christ's kingdom should be increased. We should go forth with courage to do our appointed work.

The Lord is soon to come. In fire and flood and earthquake, he is warning the inhabitants of this earth of his soon approach. O, that the people may know the time of their visitation! We have no time to lose. We must make more determined efforts to lead the people of the world to see that the day of judgment is near at hand. Carefully prepared literature on the significance of the scenes we are now witnessing, is to be circulated everywhere. Our understanding is to be quickened by the Holy Spirit. O, if our people would feel as they should the responsibility resting upon them to give the last message of mercy to the world, what a wonderful work would be done! A thousand times more work for God might be accomplished if all his children would fully consecrate themselves to him, using their talents aright.

A Strong Foundation

JOHN M. HOPKINS

"IF the foundations be destroyed, what can the righteous do?" Ps. 11:3.

"Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal, The Lord knoweth them that are his." 2 Tim. 2:19.

The church of Christ is spoken of in the Scripture as a temple, or a spiritual house. Now the question arises, Upon what foundation does this temple rest? Is the foundation strong and secure?

In the first place, the foundation of all is the character of God. He is the fountain, the source, the life, of all things. He is the perfection of truth, the perfection of holiness, the perfection of wisdom, of love, of power, and of strength. Not only is he the source of all these perfect qualities, but he is all this inherently; and not only for to-day, but from eternity to eternity. This is God. And David declares, "Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God." Ps. 90:2.

This is God in character; this is God in eternity. This is the strong foundation. He is the foundation, and the whole Christian church rests upon this foundation. It rests upon infinite wisdom, upon infinite strength, upon infinite truth, upon infinite love, upon infinite justice; it rests upon the eternity of God.

And all this blessedness was manifested to the world in the person of Jesus Christ, the Son of God, the Son of man. Of him the prophet Isaiah declares: "Therefore thus saith the Lord God, Behold, I lay in Zion for a foundation a stone, a tried stone, a precious corner-stone, a sure foundation." Isa. 28:16. Of him Paul says: "And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone." Eph. 2:20.

Of the Son it is said: "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fulness dwell." Again: "For in him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." And next follows the blessed assurance: "And ye are complete in him, which is the head of all principality and power." Col. 1:19; 2:9, 10.

Here, then, beloved in the Lord, is the Christian's strong foundation. It is in Christ, the living expression of the eternal God among men. And all this was expressed by Christ in his teaching, in his knowledge and understanding of the very thoughts and motives of men, in the mighty miracles he wrought, in the acts of love and mercy he performed for the suffering, in his godlike fortitude under temptation and trial, in the judgment-hall, upon Calvary, in his triumphant death and resurrection, and in his glorious ascension.

And now, beloved, as God is true, as Christ is true, as Christ for us met and vanquished the foe in every assault he made upon him,— as Satan could not overthrow this strong foundation then, no more can he now.

Wherever you are, my brother, my sister, you stand upon this strong foundation, so that you may boldly say, "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me." Heb. 13:6. "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and be troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof." Ps. 46:1-3.

As sin increases, as the controlling Spirit of God is withdrawn from the earth, just so rapidly will these destructive agencies now working in the earth increase in frequency and power. And as spiritual wickedness increases, the Holy Spirit will be withdrawn from the hearts of men, and they, with their leader, Satan, will make the way of the righteous more and more difficult.

We have already quoted a part of Isa. 28:16. The remaining part of the text reads: "He that believeth shall not make haste." Verse 17 reads: "Judgment also will I lay to the line, and righteousness to the plummet: and the hail shall sweep away the refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow the hiding-place."

The "winds" of false doctrines and political strife are indeed blowing, and will blow more furiously. Those who "keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus," in these closing hours of probation are the special objects of Satan's hatred and destructive power. Deception in every form must be met and resisted. But the Lord's people can meet it only with the truth, in the name, and strength, and wisdom of God. And here is the sure, the strong foundation. Let us, in our closets upon our bended knees, study the Word of our God. Let us make sure that our house is built upon the rock Christ Jesus, always knowing, always rejoicing, in the blessed assurance that "the foundation of God standeth sure."

"Christ In You"

HAS some one seen Christ in you to-day?
Christian, look to your heart, I pray;
The little things you have done or said —
Did they accord with the way you prayed?
Have your thoughts been pure and your words been kind?
Have you sought to have the Saviour's mind?
The world with a criticizing view
Has watched — but did it see Christ in you?

Has some one seen Christ in you to-day?
Christian, look to your life, I pray;
There are aching hearts and blighted souls
Being lost on sin's destructive shoals,
And perhaps of Christ their only view
May be what of him they see in you.
Will they see enough to bring hope and cheer?
Look to your light! Does it shine out clear?

A Call for Greater Consecration

INDEXED

MRS. E. G. WHITE

ALL day yesterday a very heavy burden rested upon me, and last night I could not sleep after one o'clock. We seemed to be assembled in council meeting, where many things were being considered. The Spirit of the Lord came upon me, and I spoke very earnestly to those present. I will now endeavor to write out some of the things that have been burdening my mind. The Lord has preserved my life for some wise purpose, and has given me instruction upon many points regarding the past, present, and future history of Seventh-day Adventists.

We are now passing through a crisis. This is not an ordinary period in our history. We need now to understand the leadings of providence. None of us should take ourselves under our own supervision, to follow our own desires. In this important time, we are to seek diligently to know the way of the Lord, and be sure that we are following our divine Leader. God is our counselor, and we are to follow the light that he gives in his Word.

We see the conflict going on in Battle Creek, and we are to meet the situation in the right way. Every man and woman connected with the work of God is now, while manifold voices are heard, to ask for grace to discern the right way and to understand the Voice among voices. Christ says, "Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Have we responded to his knock? Have we opened the door, and said, "Come in, thou blessed of the Lord; wherefore standest thou without?" Are we desirous of the presence of the heavenly guest? Are we willing to be instructed as workers together with God, willing to be educated, trained, and disciplined in his way for his service? Are we willing to lay aside our individual preferences, in order to follow the Lord's way and do the Lord's will? Are we seated at his feet, as learners in his school? Do our lives express the desire, "Show me thy ways, O Lord; teach me thy paths. Lead me in thy truth, and teach me: for thou art the God of my salvation; on thee do I wait all the day."

I am instructed to speak to all our ministering brethren, saying, Have you in faith asked God for that consecration that will lead to self-denial and self-sacrifice? Many do not move in the confidence of a living assurance that Christ is pleading before the Father as our Intercessor. Christ has identified himself with our necessities, and is able to supply every peculiar need of our weakness. During his life on this earth, he took the attitude of a suppliant, an earnest petitioner, seeking at the hand of the Father a fresh supply of strength, that he might be invigorated and refreshed, and come forth with words of encouragement and lessons of consolation to impart to human beings. His words are to brace every soul for duty and strengthen every soul for trial. As Christ, in his humanity, sought strength from his Father, that he might be enabled to endure trial and temptation, so are we to do. We are to follow the example of the sinless Son of God. Daily we need help and grace and power from the Source of all power. We are to cast our helpless souls upon the One who is ready to help us in every time of need. Too often we forget the Lord. Self gives way to impulse, and we lose the victories that we should gain.

If we are overcome, let us not delay to repent, and to accept the pardon that will place us on vantage-ground. If we repent and believe, the cleansing power from God will be ours. His saving grace is freely offered. His pardon is given to all who will receive it. But the pride of unbelief often rises in the heart, and the sinner turns from the light, and loses the strength that God is so willing to bestow. If he continues in this course, his mind becomes full of criticism of others who do appreciate the light the Lord has given them. But will his criticism of others lessen the mistakes and errors that he in his self-sufficiency has committed? He is dissatisfied with himself, and every word that appears like a reflection on his course he resents.

God will always accept confession, if the evil that has been done is repented of. Our Heavenly Father makes the declaration, "As I live, . . . I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked should turn from his way and live." Over every sinner that repents, the angels of God rejoice with songs of joy. Not one sinner need be lost. Full and free is the gift of saving grace. Every one may have the salvation that the Lord Jesus will bestow abundantly on all who bring his love into their life-work.

"Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." We are living in the day of preparation. We must obtain a full supply of grace from the divine storehouse. The Lord has made provision for every day's demand.

(1) [Ministers and physicians, in your work you are bearing weighty responsibilities. Let not your thoughts become cheap or common or selfish, for want of the grace of Christ. Our preparation for the home above must be wrought out in this life. The grace of Christ must be woven into every phase of the character.

I am to say to all who claim to be converted, Are your hearts truly changed, and are you watching unto prayer, preserving a thoughtful, consistent course of action, that you may have, not a semblance of religion, but the precious, genuine article? Ministers and physicians, when you accepted Christ, did you experience a deep sense of spiritual need? How much it means to you who are to be ministers of righteousness, to accept the heavenly gift of light and love and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit. You are to be imbued with such love for Christ that you will yield to him your whole affections, surrendering your life to him who gave his life for you. Imbued with the love of Christ, you are to be constrained to perform acts of unselfish service until such acts become your life practise. Daily growth into the life of Christ creates in the soul a haven of peace; in such a life there is continual fruit-bearing.

Brethren and sisters, we need the reformation that all who are redeemed must have, through the cleansing of mind and heart from every taint of sin. In the lives of those who are ransomed by the blood of Christ self-sacrifice will constantly appear. Goodness and righteousness will be seen. The quiet, inward experience will make the life full of godliness, faith, meekness, patience. This is to be our daily experience. We are to form characters free from sin — characters made righteous in and by the grace of Christ. Thus we shall reveal pure and undefiled religion to a world that has not now in the midst of it a Saviour in human form, constantly manifesting his power to heal others' woes. Much depends upon our individual course of action. We should each live in the world the life of a true Christian, that our words and acts may be such as to win souls to Christ. Our hearts are to be cleansed from all impurity in the blood shed to take away sin.

When ministers adorn the doctrine of Christ our Saviour, and when physicians reveal in words and works, and in their influence the healing grace of Christ, when the Saviour is revealed as the One altogether lovely, a great work will be done in behalf of other souls. God calls for truth in the inner sanctuary of the soul, that the whole being may be a representation of the life of Christ.]

This matter has been thus presented to me over and over again, and I am instructed to write the same. It is now daylight, and I must take up other matters that have been presented to me in connection with that which I have written. [I entreat my brethren and sisters who are ministers or physicians, to work out in their lives the precious principles of truth, that others may take knowledge of you that you have been with Jesus, and have learned of him who is pure and holy and undefiled, without rebuke in a sinful and corrupt generation. Then many will be turned to the Lord through the earnest efforts made in their behalf by those who know the truth.]

The Earthquake Appeal *

An announcement has already been sent out through the columns of the Review and Herald that on Sabbath, May 19, 1906, an opportunity would be given to our people in the United States to contribute to a fund for the relief of the Pacific Press Publishing Company of Mountain View, Cal., and other institutions located in San Francisco, upon which a great calamity has fallen. And indeed this is a great calamity, or at least it appears so to us, who can not always see deeply into God's workings; though, from what we have already learned of God's goodness and mercy, even when visiting heavy chastisements and afflictions upon us, we may confidently believe that, in his own good time and way, he will yet give to his people opportunities and blessings which will far outweigh the losses sustained from the great earthquake and fire.

A Fitting Appeal

It seems highly fitting at this time that such a call as this should be made: —

1. For many years the Pacific Press Publishing Company has stood as a strong, self-supporting light bearer of the third angel's message. Many years ago Elders James White and J. N. Loughborough, and other stalwart pioneers of this cause, crossed the Rocky Mountains, and, foreseeing by faith the possibilities before a publishing house located on the Pacific Coast, they set to work to establish the Pacific Press, and laid its foundations deep in sacrifice and labor.

And now, while this institution, the second of our publishing houses, was in the midst of some of its heaviest financial struggles, a blow was permitted to fall upon it which certainly will appeal most eloquently to the sympathy and generosity of all who love the work which this institution represents.

2. About two years ago, in response to the Lord's counsel that our large institutions move out of the cities, and seek country locations, the Pacific Press moved out by faith, and established its offices in Mountain View, a small town about forty miles southeast of San Francisco. This move was made at great expense, and at a great sacrifice of the earnings of the institution. Two years of struggle, accompanied by considerable loss, much of which was the natural result of such a change, have passed since then, and the Pacific Press was, little by little, working up to a solid standing place, when suddenly out of the earth came this unexpected blow, which in a few seconds of time left the Pacific Press building very largely a wreck.

3. When this same blow fell upon the city of San Francisco and the adjacent towns, this great country, with its mighty resources, flew to their relief. In a few hours trains loaded with cooked food, clothing, tents, medical supplies, and nurses, were hurrying on their way from Los Angeles, Denver, Portland, Chicago, Boston, and, in fact, from nearly every great city in the United States. At Seattle a ship was quickly loaded with provisions, and with every blanket and tent that could be found in the city, and under steam and sail was rushed to the scenes of distress.

It was surely fitting for the prosperous wealthy people of a great country like this to fly thus to the rescue of a once great metropolis which lay in ruins and in ashes, while her four hundred thousand people were scattered, homeless and hungry, in the parks and on the surrounding hills.

When men of the world are moved with such generosity by the needs of a sister city, is it not even more fitting that the children of God should contribute of their abundance to the needs of these institutions which God has been using for many years as facilities for carrying the message to the world? God has blessed us with bountiful harvests for several years, and enabled many of his people to gather in an abundance to their storehouses. And now he opens before us a door of opportunity and privilege which enables us to contribute something from our abundance toward the relief of those in need.

4. We are not unmindful of the fact that, only a little more than one year ago, the General Conference was in serious financial distress, and a letter was written to the far West, to one of the members of the Conference Committee, setting forth the serious difficulties of the situation. One Sunday morning at chapel exercises, this letter was read in the Pacific Press chapel. From long training and practise in the art of giving, the employees of the Pacific Press had learned how to respond to such needs. Voluntarily from the company of workers came the proposition that a fund be started immediately at the Pacific Press office, and that these funds be forwarded immediately to the General Conference. And, further, it was proposed that this movement be extended to all parts of the United States, and that the gifts gathered should be sent in the hands of the delegates to the General Conference as a "surprise party" for that occasion.

By quick movements the resolution was carried into effect, and many thousands of dollars were carried to the General Conference by the delegates. The One Hundred Thousand Dollar Fund was quickly made up, until it beautifully overflowed with the generous gifts. Now the Pacific Press is in need. The chapel where this generous movement started is badly shattered, and will it not be highly fitting for God's people to send them a generous gift?

The Extent of the Loss

This has already been set before you in various articles in The Signs of the Times, the Review and Herald, and the State and union conference papers. At first, estimates could not be accurately given. And even now it is impossible to give the extent of damage, particularly in San Francisco, where the destruction was so complete, and where conditions are such as to make it difficult to secure reliable information.

But the leading brethren of the Pacific Union Conference and the Pacific Press Publishing Company have studied the situation carefully, and a conservative estimate places the loss to the Pacific Press at twenty thousand dollars, to the San Francisco branch enterprises of the St. Helena Sanitarium, thirteen thousand dollars. There were losses to other enterprises, which can not be well estimated.

But with the destruction of certain buildings, important business connections have been swept away, making it quite impossible to calculate the losses which will accrue through delays in the work, and the efforts to re-establish it upon a working basis.

A Distribution of Funds

As these losses can not be definitely given, it has been suggested that all funds collected on this occasion be sent to the General Conference Treasury, through the proper channels, and that the Executive Committee of the Pacific Union Conference be asked to appropriate the money to the Pacific Press and to other institutions in proportion as their losses and most urgent needs may appear. It is probable that this course will be pursued in the distribution of these funds.

An Appeal From the Pacific Coast

At the time of this disaster the majority of the members of the Pacific Union Conference were in southern California. Realizing the pressing need of the suffering institutions in the north, they held a council at which Brother and Sister White were present, and they decided to call a meeting in Mountain View on Wednesday, May 2, at which time they would draw up a formal appeal to the General Conference and to the Seventh-day Adventists in the United States, asking that liberal donations be sent to these institutions. This appeal was to be signed by Brother and Sister White and by the members of the Pacific Union Conference.

As the mails from the West are very slow during these days of excitement and congested traffic, the appeal has not yet reached the General Conference office, and it is necessary to send out this reading for May 19 immediately, in order that it may reach all our churches in the

God's Word

God's Word a wondrous tree I find,
And 'neath it day by day
I take the fruits that give me strength
To bear me on life's way;
A beautiful tree, large and tall,
With shelter, rest, and food for all.

God's Word a telescope I find,
And be skies dark or clear,
This trusty instrument reveals
God, and my Saviour dear;
While mirrored daily on my heart
Are splendors that can ne'er depart.

God's Word a treasure-house I find
With ev'ry treasure free;
I reach and take, I simply say:
"The Lord meant this for me."
And for my faith what joys are giv'n.
Love, and peace, and life, and heaven!

God's Word a river deep I find,
No ripple, yet a tide;
I launch my bark, and trusting sail,
My Saviour for my guide;
I view the haven of the blest,
And sweet the comfort, sweet the rest!

The Scriptures a Safeguard

MRS. E. G. WHITE

"To the law and to the testimony. If they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." The people of God are directed to the Scriptures as their safeguard against the influence of false teachers and the delusive power of spirits of darkness. Satan employs every possible device to prevent men from obtaining a knowledge of the Bible; for its plain utterances reveal his deceptions. At every revival of God's work, the prince of evil is aroused to more intense activity; he is now putting forth his utmost efforts for a final struggle against Christ and his followers. The last great delusion is soon to open before us. Antichrist is to perform his marvelous works in our sight. So closely will the counterfeit resemble the true, that it will be impossible to distinguish between them except by the Holy Scriptures. By their testimony every statement and every miracle must be stated.

Those who endeavor to obey all the commandments of God will be opposed and derided. They can stand only in God. In order to endure the trial before them, they must understand the will of God as revealed in his Word; they can honor him only as they have a right conception of his character, government, and purposes, and act in accordance with them. None but those who have fortified the mind with the truths of the Bible will stand through the last great conflict. To every soul will come the searching test, Shall I obey God rather than men? The decisive hour is even now at hand. Are our feet planted on the rock of God's immutable Word? Are we prepared to stand firm in defense of the commandments of God and the faith of Jesus?

Before his crucifixion, the Saviour explained to his disciples that he was to be put to death, and to rise again from the tomb; and angels were present to impress his words on minds and hearts. But the disciples were looking for temporal deliverance from the Roman yoke, and they could not tolerate the thought that he in whom all their hopes centered should suffer an ignominious death. The words which they needed to remember were banished from their minds; and when the time of trial came, it found them unprepared. The death of Jesus as fully destroyed their hopes as if he had not forewarned them. So in the prophecies the future is opened before us as plainly as it was opened to the disciples by the words of Christ. The events connected with the close of probation and the work of preparation for the time of trouble, are clearly presented. But multitudes have no more understanding of these important truths than if they had never been revealed. Satan watches to catch away every impression that would make them wise unto salvation, and the time of trouble will find them unready.

When God sends to men warnings so important that they are represented as proclaimed by holy angels flying in the midst of heaven, he requires every person endowed with reasoning powers to heed the message. The fearful judgments denounced against the worship of the beast and his image should lead all to a diligent study of the prophecies to learn what the mark of the beast is, and how they are to avoid receiving it. But the masses of the people turn away their ears from hearing the truth, and are turned unto fables. The apostle Paul declared, looking down to the last days, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." That time has fully come. The multitudes do not want Bible truth, because it interferes with the desires of the sinful, world-loving heart; and Satan supplies the deceptions which they love.

But God will have a people upon the earth to maintain the Bible, and the Bible only, as the standard of all doctrines, and the basis of all reforms. The opinions of learned men, the deductions of science, the creeds or decisions of ecclesiastical councils, as numerous and discordant as are the churches which they represent, the voice of the majority, — not one or all of these should be regarded as evidence for or against any point of religious faith. Before accepting any doctrine or precept, we should demand a plain "Thus saith the Lord" in its support.

Satan is constantly endeavoring to attract attention to man in the place of God. He leads the people to look to bishops, to pastors, to professors of theology, as their guides, instead of searching the Scriptures to learn their duty for themselves. Then, by controlling the minds of these leaders, he can influence the multitudes according to his will.

When Christ came to speak the words of life, the common people heard him gladly; and many, even of the priests and rulers, believed on him. But the chief of the priesthood and the leading men of the nation were determined to condemn and repudiate his teachings. Though they were baffled in all their efforts to find accusations against him, though they could not but feel the influence of the divine power and wisdom attending his words, yet they encased themselves in prejudice; they rejected the clearest evidence of his Messiahship, lest they should be forced to become his disciples. These opponents of Jesus were men whom the people had been taught from infancy to reverence, to whose authority they had been accustomed implicitly to bow. "How is it," they asked, "that our rulers and learned scribes do not believe on Jesus? Would not these pious men receive him if he were the Christ?" It was the influence of such teachers that led the Jewish nation to reject their Redeemer.

The spirit which actuated those priests and rulers is still manifested by many who make a high profession of piety. They refuse to examine the testimony of the Scriptures concerning the special truths for this time. They point to their own numbers, wealth, and popularity, and look with contempt upon the advocates of truth as few, poor, and unpopular, having a faith that separates them from the world.

Christ foresaw that the undue assumption of authority indulged by the scribes and Pharisees would not cease with the dispersion of the Jews. He had a prophetic view of the work of exalting human authority to rule the conscience, which has been so terrible a curse to the church in all ages. And his fearful denunciations of the scribes and Pharisees, and his warnings to the people not to follow these blind leaders, were placed on record as an admonition to future generations.

(To be continued)

"God Is Love"

E. J. HARVEY

"And this is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." John 17:3. "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love." "We love him, because he first loved us." "And this commandment have we from him, That he who loveth God love his brother also." 1 John 4:7, 8, 19, 21. "By this we know that we love the children of God, when we love God, and keep his commandments. For this is the love of God, that we keep his commandments: and his commandments are not grievous." Chap. 5:2, 3. "And this is his commandment, That we should believe on the name of his Son Jesus Christ, and love one another, as he gave us commandment. And he that keepeth his commandments dwelleth in him, and he in him. And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us." Chap. 3:23, 24.

God's love for us is so great "that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." John 3:16. This gift was bestowed when we had no strength to obey God's holy law, but were yet sinners, trampling under our unholy feet all his sacred requirements. Rom. 5:6, 8. Ever since we gave our hearts to him, we find that only in Christ's perfect righteousness can we be overcomers. His strength is made perfect in our weakness. In him we are complete. Christ is all. Like the poor prodigal in the far country we come home to our Father's house when we remember how great is his love. The love of God to us leads us to be forgiving to others. We love, and therefore do good, and not evil, to our fellow creatures. As many as we can lead to Christ for salvation we gladly lead. Jesus is coming soon. O, may we be enabled to turn many to him now!

The Battle Creek Schools and the Mission Fields

A. C. SELMON, M. D.

In Titus 2:12-14 the Lord's word to us is that, "We should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works." The word "peculiar" means that a thing is emphatically one's own, and hence dear. The Lord refers to the remnant, who are giving this last message, as his peculiar people. The young man or woman, who allows ambition and love of worldly honor to supplant his love for this truth, soon ceases to be "peculiar;" in fact, he does not wish to be such, but strives in every way possible to identify himself with the world. It is in large part due to this that more of our young people are not pressing into the ranks to do the work that the Lord has to be done in the world at the present time.

We who are here in some of the dark places of the earth, where even the first notes of the last-warning message have never yet been sounded, are earnestly praying that the right kind of young men and women will be raised up to re-enforce us in the work. And because of this any movement, such as that which is being carried on in connection with the medical work in Battle Creek, Mich., claiming to train missionaries for the foreign field, gives us the greatest concern. It means that the mission fields, instead of receiving re-enforcements from that center, have been, and are being, robbed of workers; since young people who should be enlisted in the work of giving the message go there and are turned aside into other lines.

Having been connected with the work there, both as a student and as a teacher, my personal experience leads me to earnestly pray, that any who are contemplating securing a preparation for the Lord's work by attending the Battle Creek schools, will give heed to the recent Testimonies and by no means go there.

Those who have been connected with the work there know that the Testimonies outline the conditions just exactly as they exist. Many who have never come in contact with the inner workings of the institution there have been and are yet greatly deceived as to the true state of affairs. All should secure and carefully read the recently published Testimonies "Series B, No. 7," regarding dangers connected with the medical missionary work, and "Series B, No. 6," regarding our youth's going to Battle Creek to obtain an education.

It reflects very much upon the spirit that pervades a school professing to train missionaries when, among those who enter the school, the great majority enter with a fixed purpose to prepare for work in a foreign mission field, but, by the time the course is finished, the zeal for foreign missions has practically vanished, and its place has been taken by an ambition for scientific work, and a desire to secure a place and position that will be recognized by the world. I have seen fellow students make shipwreck of their faith there by allowing themselves to become engrossed in the scientific work to the neglect of the daily study of the Bible. From personal experience I know that the trend of much of the teaching is to lead one to seek a scientific foundation for his faith in the Bible truths. The influence is subtle in that it leads one to magnify the importance of the so-called physical righteousness, and to lose faith and zeal in regard to the nearness of the Lord's coming and in the special message that we as a people are called upon to give.

One of the gravest dangers that the young will meet in connection with the work there is that of making light of the spirit of prophecy. Those who have never had an opportunity to know anything of the real spirit pervading the work find it very hard to understand how this can be, because of the oft-repeated avowals made by those connected with that work, that the Testimonies are both highly respected and obeyed. The facts in the case are that any one who have had an opportunity to be in the council meetings with the leaders in the work in Battle Creek know that the Testimonies are not only not regarded, but they are even made light of and scoffed at. I have heard men in these council meetings scoff at the idea that the Lord had anything to do with the burning of the sanitarium, and I have heard them express the opinion that the Testimonies were nothing more than man's opinion and judgment.

As stated in the announcement of the Battle Creek schools, "The real purpose of these schools, one and all, is to help forward the Christian altruistic movement of which the Battle Creek Sanitarium has been for more than a quarter of a century the acknowledged center." The young man or woman who is seeking a preparation that will fit him or her for greater usefulness in the work of the third angel's message will never find such a preparation in a place where the above purpose is carried out as it is in connection with the Battle Creek institutions. The life of this message is not in affiliating with the world to do humanitarian work. In the mission field are to be seen the results, or rather lack of results, of such a line of work — great medical missionary institutions being carried on with very little accomplished outside of the relief of bodily ailments. The mission field needs, first of all, men who are rooted and grounded in this truth, who realize that the Lord is soon coming, and who will give the medical work the place it should occupy; namely, using it as a means to prepare the way for the preaching of the everlasting gospel.

The True Test

In every trial of faith or of doctrine, the real issue is between the overwhelming or sufficient God-given evidence on the one hand and the conflicting appearance on the other. This appearance may seem exceedingly plausible, and there may be an apparent inconsistency between it and the fact, beyond our power to understand and explain. Our danger will be in giving heed to the appearance and ignoring and forgetting the real evidence. Our only safety, then, lies, with the Lord's help, in keeping our minds staid upon the God-given evidence in spite of appearances.

Satan is a master — a magician — in the use of appearances, and in the very perfection of heaven itself he led a third of the angels to see a terrible wrong. He made Eve see in what God had forbidden that which was "good," "pleasant," and "to be desired to make one wise." Apparently its virtue had raised a serpent to the wisdom of man, and would it not then raise Eve to the wisdom of God? Then Eve saw in the Lord an enemy, and in the serpent a friend interested in her rights and welfare. On every hand was the overwhelming evidence of God's wonderful love, but this was ignored and forgotten.

So, also, when the Israelites in the wilderness "forgat God their savior which had done great things in Egypt," they then saw in Moses only an arbitrary usurper, and in the testimony that they must die in the wilderness only a human testimony, not one from the Lord.

An Old Missionary Hymn

THINK on our brethren, Lord,
Who preach the gospel word,
In spirit free and bold,
In hunger, heat, and cold;
Thou art their strength and shield,
Help them to win the field.

Give them an open door,
With wisdom, love, and power
To tell what thou hast done
For all men to atone,
And thus in every place
They will show forth thy grace.

O Lord, before them go;
To every sinner show
What need he hath of thee,
And then most mightily
Impress upon his heart
That thou his Saviour art.

Thou Workman great and wise!
Who shall thy work despise?
Our weakness well thou know'st;
Of nothing can we boast;
But that we trust thy Word,
And know thou art our Lord.

Notes of Travel—No. 1

Journey to Southern California

MRS. E. G. WHITE

THURSDAY afternoon, April 12, I left my home near St. Helena for a short visit to southern California. Months before I had promised Elder Haskell and his wife that I would unite with them in planning for the establishment of a training-school for medical missionary evangelists, in connection with the educational work of the Loma Linda Sanitarium. Now the time had come for the fulfilment of this promise, and as the sanitariums at Loma Linda and Paradise Valley were to be dedicated about the time of the annual meeting of the Southern California Conference, it was an opportune time to visit this part of the field. Accompanying me were my son, W. C. White, my secretary, and one of my copyists. My son went by way of the Coast Line, that he might stop over a few hours at Mountain View. The other members of our party went direct by way of the San Joaquin Valley route.

As we crossed a portion of the Mojave Desert, we were reminded of the promise, "The desert shall blossom as the rose." Where one usually can see only sage-brush and cactus, there is now to be seen an abundance of grass, and acres upon acres of wild flowers of varied hues.

The Los Angeles Vegetarian Restaurant

Our train into Los Angeles was a few minutes late, and we could not make close connections with the train for Loma Linda, so we spent a pleasant hour at the vegetarian restaurant, on the corner of Third and Hill Streets. This restaurant is now conducted by the medical missionary department of the Southern California Conference, and is in charge of Brother and Sister Allen, who were stanch Roman Catholics until they attended a series of meetings held by Brother W. W. Simpson and his associates less than two years ago.

During the past few years, the Lord has given much instruction regarding the establishment of hygienic restaurants in large cities. Over and over again he has indicated that in many cities we should have small restaurants, as centers of influence, by which the attention of thinking men would be called to the principles that make us "a peculiar people." Thus many would be led to a knowledge of the message for this time.

In connection with this instruction have been given many cautions against the danger of tying up in restaurant work talent that could be utilized to better advantage elsewhere. Especially is this the danger that attends the conduct of hygienic restaurants so large that many helpers must be employed. The pressure and rush of business is liable to lead to a neglect of the work of soul saving.

In 1902 I wrote out many reasons why it will be best to establish several smaller restaurants in different parts of our large cities. Among these reasons were the following: "The smaller restaurants will recommend the principles of health reform as well as the larger establishments, and will be much more easily managed. We are not commissioned to feed the world, but we are instructed to educate the people. In the smaller restaurants there will not be so much work to do, and the helpers will have more time to devote to the study of the Word, more time to learn how to do their work well, and more time to answer the inquiries of the patrons who are desirous of learning about the principles of health reform."

At noon we returned to the station, and took "The Golden State Limited" for Loma Linda, sixty-two miles east of Los Angeles, on the main line of the Southern Pacific. Ordinarily this train carries no passengers for small stations, like Loma Linda. Had we taken a later train, we could not have reached our destination until a few minutes after the beginning of the Sabbath, and this we very much disliked to do. In the unusual courtesy shown us by the conductor of the limited through train, we recognized the favoring hand of providence.

At Loma Linda we met many friends, and were made to feel at home. Every one was busy preparing for the Sabbath. At this season of the year, the lawns and flower gardens are very beautiful, and the air is filled with the fragrance of orange-blossoms.

Sabbath Sermon

Sabbath forenoon, we assembled in the sanitarium parlors, and I spoke to the patients and helpers on the first chapter of Second Peter. I dwelt upon the thought that Christ in his humanity, perfected by a life of holiness, revealed that humanity may in this world attain unto perfection of character, through co-operation with divinity. Abundant provision has been made for us. Within the reach of every human being God has placed "all things that pertain unto life and godliness, through the knowledge of him that hath called us to glory and virtue: whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

"And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge temperance; and to temperance patience; and to patience godliness; and to godliness brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness charity."

In this scripture is set forth the perfection that we are all to reach. As we live on the plan of addition, there will be granted us the grace spoken of in the second verse: "Grace and peace be multiplied unto you,"— multiplied "through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord." Christ offers to work in our behalf on the plan of multiplication.

"For if these things be in you, and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." It is our privilege to lay hold upon these encouraging assurances, that we may place ourselves in right relation to Christ, and thus perfect Christian character.

"He that lacketh these things is blind, and can not see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather, brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure: for if ye do these things, ye shall never fall." We must co-operate with Christ Jesus. We must lay hold of every advantage he has given us, and show that we receive it; for to "as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believed on his name." "For so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Precious, precious assurance!

On every hand we see men anxious to insure their lives by taking out a life-insurance policy. Here is your life-insurance policy — an eternal life-insurance policy offered to all who carry out the conditions outlined in this chapter.

"Wherefore I will not be negligent to put you always in remembrance of these things, though ye know them, and be established in the present truth." Every one of us may have living faith in the power of Christ to keep our feet from walking in false paths.

There is in our world a spirit of belief, and also a spirit of unbelief. In the latter days some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. We expect that those who refuse to harmonize with Christ will develop into a warring element; but we should not think that this will do us harm. We must remember that they that are for us are more than they that can be against us. This is my hope and strength and power. I believe in God. I know in whom I believe. I believe the messages that God has given to his remnant church. From childhood I have had many, many experiences that have strengthened my faith in the work that God has given me to do.

(1) Early in my public labors I was bidden by the Lord, "Write, write the things that are revealed to you." At the time this message came to me, I could not hold my hand steady. My physical condition made it impossible for me to write. But again came the word, "Write the things that are revealed to you." I obeyed; and as the result it was not long before I could write page after page with comparative ease. Who told me what to write? Who steadied my right hand, and made it possible for me to use a pen? — It was the Lord. When we come into right relation with him, and give ourselves wholly to him, we shall see the miracle-working power of God in word and deed.

In the early days of the message, when our numbers were few, we studied diligently to understand the meaning of many scriptures. At times it seemed as if no explanation could be given. My mind seemed to be locked to an understanding of the Word; but when our brethren who had assembled for study, came to a point where they could go no farther, and had recourse to earnest prayer, the Spirit of God would rest upon me, and I would be taken off in vision, and be instructed in regard to the relation of scripture to scripture. These experiences were repeated over and over and over again. Thus many truths of the third angel's message were established, point by point. Think you that my faith in this message will ever waver? Think you that I can remain silent, when I see an effort being made to sweep away the foundation pillars of our faith? I am as thoroughly established in these truths as it is possible for a person to be. I can never forget the experience I have passed through. God has confirmed my belief by many evidences of his power.

The light that I have received, I have written out, and much of it is now shining forth from the printed page. There is, throughout my printed works, a harmony with my present teaching. Some of the instruction found in these pages was given under circumstances so remarkable as to evidence the wonder-working power of God in behalf of his truth. Sometimes while I was in vision, my friends would approach me, and exclaim, "Why, she does not breathe!" Placing a mirror before my lips, they found that no moisture gathered on the glass. It was while there was no sign of any breathing, that I kept talking of the things that were being presented before me.

(2) These messages were thus given to substantiate the faith of all, that in these last days we might have confidence in the spirit of prophecy. I thank God that he has preserved my voice, which in my early youth physicians and friends declared would be silent within three months. The God of heaven saw that I needed to pass through a trying experience in order to be prepared for the work he had for me to do. For the past half century my faith in the ultimate triumph of the third angel's message and everything connected with it, has been substantiated by the wonderful experiences through which I have passed. This is why I am anxious to have my books published and circulated in many languages. I know that the light contained in these books is the light of heaven.

I ask you to study the instruction that is written in these books. To John, the aged apostle, came the message, "Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter." The Lord has bidden me write that which has been revealed to me. This I have done, and it is now in printed form.
